The 23. of July, the Conſtable came to the trench that was caſt ouer againſt the Bulwark of Saint Addreſſe, alonglt by the Sea ſide, & ſent his Trumpet to ſummon the towne. The Lord Lieutenant appointed Sir Hugh Pawlet to goe forth, and make anſwere in his name, which was in effect, that the Queens Maieſtie had appointed him and others to keepe the towne, and therefore they meant not to deliuer it to any other perſon, without her Graces commaundement. The Engliſhmen were no ſooner departed, but that the enemies hauing planted 8. canons in battery againſt the Caſtle and bulwark of the hauen, cauſed the ſame to be ſhot off, continuing the battery vntill the 28. of July.

The 28. of July, the Prince of Condy, and the Duke of Montpenſier, came to the Campe and alighted at the Conſtables lodging, went from thence to the trenches foreliene the Marſhall Montmorancie, and to ſupply his roome, whileſt he might in the meane time goe to ſup with his father, and ſo to take his reſt: Monſieur Deſtree, and the other that had charge about the planting and ordering of the artillerie, vſed ſuch diligence, and were ſo earneſtly called vpon and encouraged by the Prince of Condy, continually remaining in the trenches, that on the 27. in the morning, the artillery began to batter the bulwark of S. Addreſſe and other p'aces. This was not done without great danger of the Pioners and men of war that garded them: for as the French deſperatly made theſe approches, they were made by the Engliſh Gunners to taſte the bitter fruite thereof: but ſuch was the multitude of the Frenchmen that were now aſſembled, in hope to recouer that towne, (which being poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, cut off all traffique from Roane, Paris, and other places) that with their generall aide, and drawing the water downe to the Sea, the marſhes were made paſſeable and firme ground, which to men of great experience was thought a thing impoſſible. The Caſtle, the walls, and other defences of the towne, were battered, breaches made, and the trench, which before the comming of the Conſtable, was but brought to the point ouer againſt the bulwarke of Saint Addreſſe, was now within foure dayes aduanced neere hand the ſpace of two myles, vpon the cauſey or breach which was all of ſtone, without any earth to couer them, ſo that they were driuen to make the beſt ſhift they could with woollſacks, ſand-bags, baſkets, and fagots. Yet all this had neuer come to paſſe, without infinite slaughter, and farre more losse of French blood if the great mortality of pestilence (which entred the towne about the beginning of Somer) though a venimous infection, had not so greatly increased, that it fine dayly great numbers of men, so that the streetes lay euen full of dead corpses, not able to bee remoued, by reason of the multitude that perished. And now the shot of the Canon, lying within a fire and twenty paces of the towne, was soterrible, as the like had not beene lightly heard of, and sundry breaches there were, which were already made, namely, two very great and easie to bee entred: all these dangers and miseries notwithstanding, the Earle of Warwicke with his Captaines and souldiers, in courageous order, stood at those seuerall breaches, ready to defend the same, if the enemies had presumed to haue giuen the assault, which when the Constable perceiued, hee caused a trumpet to sound the blast of enparley, that talke might bee had for the concluding of a composition betwixt both the parties, to auoyd the imminent slaughter and effusion of blood: which offer seeming not vnmeete, both parties concluded that parly should be had. The eight and twentieth of July therefore, the Constable came to the end of the trenches next to the Towne, where Sir Maurice Denis, Treasurer of the Towne, Sir Hugh Pawlet, Captaine Horley, Captaine Pelham, Captaine John Shute Pecuit Marshall, and Nicholas Mary Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, came forth, and passed ouer the Hauen to commune with him, and during the parley betwixt them a truce was accorded, and assented to by both parties. But the Constable tooke vpon him to haue onely authority to accept or refuse such conditions as should bee offered or agreed vpon by the English Commissioners in this treatie: and so at length they passed certaine articles in forme as followeth. First, that the Earle of Warwicke should render the Towne of Newhauen into the handes of the Constable of France, with all the artillery and munitions of warre, then being in the Towne belonging to the French King and his subiects. Item, he should leaue the shippes that were in the Towne at that present, belonging to the King or his subiects, with all their furniture, and generally all such Merchandize and other things, being at that present within the towne, as either belonged to the King or his subiects. Item, the said Earle should presently deliuer into the handes of the Constable the great Tower of the said hauen, so that the souldiers there of enter not into the Towne: and that the said Earle should deliuer foure such hostages as the said Constable should name. Item, that the next day by eight of the clocke in the morning the said Earle should withdraw his souldiers from the fort, to deliuer it immediatly into the handes of the said Constable, &c. his deputies, at the said houre. Item, that all prisoners should be deliuered on either side, without paying any ransome. Item, that the Constable should for his part suffer the said Earl of Warwicke and all those that were in garison in the said Newhauen to depart, with all things whatsoeuer that belonged to the Queene of England, or her subiects. Item, that for the departure aforesaid of the said Earle, as the remouing of his souldiers and other things: the said Constable agreed to giue them fiue dayes, to beginne the twentie nine of July, during the which they might frankely take and carry away the said things. Item, the said Constable did likewise permit, that all the ships and English vessels appointed for the postage and conueying away of the said things, should safely and freely passe in, to, and fro from the said Hauen, without any stay or impeachment, either by the French or any other. The seuen hostages were appointed to bee master Oliuer Maners, brother to the Earle of Rutland, Captaine Pelham, Captaine Horley, and Captaine Leighton. In witnesse whereof the said Lords the Constable of Fraunce, and Earle of Warwicke signed these Articles, the eight and twentieth of July. The last of Iulie, the most part of the Englishmen tooke ship and departed homewards: for glad was he that could get soonest out of that vnwholesome ayre: many sicke persons yet were left behinde, impotent, and not able to helpe themselues a ship boord, the miserie whereof, Edward Randolph Esquire, high marshall of the towne (who was appointed to tarry and see the vtmost of the composition accomplished) perceiuing, moued with natural pity of his countrymen relinquished without comfort, caused the said sicke persons to be carryed aboorde, and not sparing his owne shoulders, at that time feeble and full of the plague, himselfe and his men still bearing and helping the poore creatures on ship boorde: a rare fact, worthy rewarde, and no doubt in remembrance with God, the true recorder of mercifull deserts. Besides the meaner sort of those that dyed at Newhauen of the pestilence, during the siedge, I find noted as chiefe, Cuthbert Vaughan Comptroller of the towne, Francis Sommerset Esquire, brother to the Earle of Worcester, Auerie Darcie, brother to the Lord Darcie, John Zouche, brother to the Lord Zouche, Edward Ormesby, Thomas Drury alias Pygnard, Richard Croker, John Cockson, Thomas Kemish, John Prowde, William Saule, Wilfride Antwisell, these of the plague. There were diuers also that were slaine in the field, as both the Fremayns brethren, Nicholas and Andrew, Captaine Richard Saunders, with master Robinson and master Bromfield, also one Leighton a Gentleman, and diuers other.

A truce accorded, and articles agreed vpon for surrendring of Newhauen.

As ye haue heard the plague of pestilence being in the towne of Newhauen, through the number of soulders that returned from thence into England, the infection thereof spread into diuers parts of this Realme, but especially the City of London was so infected, that in the same whole yeere that is to say, from the first of Ian. 1562. till the last of Decem. 1563. there dyed in the citie and liberties thereof containing 108. parishes of all diseases, 20, 93. C. 72. and of the

C. 88. persons, and of them, of the plague, 2. 93. 7. C. 32. persons, so that the whole number of all that died of all diseases, as well within the Citie and Liberties, as in the out Parishes, was 23. 93. 6. C. and 60. of them, there died of the plague 20136.

Tempest at London.

The 8. of July, in the morning, hapned a great tempest of lightning and thunder, wherethrough a woman and three Kine were slaine in the Couent Garden neere to Charing Crosse. At the same time in Essex a man was tone to peces as he was carrying Hay, his barne was borne downe, and his Hay burnt: both stones and trees were rent in many places.

The Councell of K. Philip at Bruxels, commanded proclamation to be made in Antwerp, and other places, that no English Ship with clothes should come into any places of their low Countries: their colour was (as they said) the danger of the plague, which was that time in London, and other places of England: notwithstanding they would gladly haue gotten our walles: other causes they alleaged, as the rating of Impostes as well vpon goods inwards as outwards, as well vpon English men as vpon Strangers, &c. Also for that in the first Parliament of the Queenes Maiestie, by a Statute then made, diuers Wares and Commodities were forbidden to be brought into this Realme out of Flanders or other places being wrought there, which was done to the end to set our subiects a worke here, as by the Statute doth appeare, for that no man English or Stranger might ship out any white clothes vndrest, being of the price aboue foure pound, without licence, &c. but the Queenes Maiestie through the sute of our Marchant Aduenturers, caused the woll sacke to be discharged, and our cloath sacke was sent to Emden in East Frizeland about Easter next following, in An 1564.

Three-fold plague to the poore Citizens of London.

For so much as the plague of pestilence was so hote in the Citie of London, there was no Terme kept at Michaelmasse: to be short, the poore Citizens of London, were this yeare plagued with a three-fold plague, pestilence, scarcitie of money, and dearth of victuals: the miserie whereof were too long here to write, no doubt the poore remember it, the rich by sight into the Countries made shift for themselues.

An Earthquake was in the moneth of September in diuers places of this Realme, specially in Lincolne and Northamptonshire.

Also the same Peace was proclaimed at London on the 13. day of Aprill. And shortly after the Queenes Maiestie sent the right Honourable sir Henry Carie Lord Hunsdon, accompanied with the Lord Strange, besides diuers Knights and Gentlemen vnto the French King, with the Noble order of the Garter, who lying then at Lions, he there presented vnto him the said order, and Garter King at Armes inuested him therewith, obseruing the ceremonies in that behalf due, &c. Through the earnest suite of the Armenters, there was on the vigile of S. The twentieth of November in the morning, through the negligence of a mayden with a candle, the snuffe falling in an hundred pound waught of Gunpolwder, three houses in Bucklersbury were sore shaken, and the Mayde died two dayes after.

The 21. of December began a Frost, which continued so extreamely, that on New-yeares euen people went ouer and along the Thamis on the Ice from London-bridge to Westminster, some played at foote-ball as boldly there, as if it had beene on the dry land, diuers of the Court being then at Westminster, shot daily at pricks set vpon the Thamis: and the people both men and women went on the Thamis in greater number then in any streete of the City of London. On the third day of January at night it began to thaw: and on the fift day was no Ice to be seene betweene London bridge and Lambeth, which caused great floods and high waters, that bare downe bridges and houses, and drowned many people in England, especially in Yorkeshire, Ouses bridge was borne away with other.

And at Canterbury, the Lady Cobham with the like traine of Ladies and Gentlewomen met them, and at Gaueslend the Lord Hunsdon with the Gentlemen Pensioners met them; and so on the 11. day of September they came to London, where they were met, and receiued by the Earle of Sussex, the Countesse his wife, and their traine, and so brought to the Earle of Bedfords Place, néere to Iuie-bridge, where they were lodged, and within foure dayes after, that is to say, the 15. of September she trauelled in child-bed, and was deliuered of a manchilde, which childe the last of September was christened in the Quenes Maiesties Chappell of White-hall at Westminster, the Quenes Maiestie in her owne person being Godmother, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Duke of Norfolke Godfathers: at the christening the Quéne gaue the childe to name Edwardus fortunatus, for that God had so graciously assisted his mother in so long and dangerous a iourney, and brought her so safe to land in that place which she most desired, and that in so short time before her deliuerance.

The 11. of November, the right honourable Ambrose Earle of Warwicke, married Anne eldest daughter to the Earle of Bedford: for the honour and celebration of which noble marriage, a goodly challenge was made and obserued at Westminster at the Tilt, with each one fiue courses: at the turney twelue strokes with the sword, three pushes with the punchion staffe, and twelue blowes with the sword at Barriers, or twenty if any were so disposed.

At ten of the clocke the same day, a valiant serviceable man called Robert Thomas, Master Gunner of England, desirous also to honour the Feast and Marriage day, in consideration the said Earle of Warwicke was Generall of the Ordnance within her Maiesties Realmes and Dominions, made three traines of great chambers, which terribly yeelded forth the nature of their voyce, to the great affeerinment of diuers, who at the firing of the second, was vnhappily slaine by a peece of one of the chambers, to the great sorrow and lamentation of many.

The 24. of December in the morning, there rose a great storme and tempest of winde, by whose rage the Thamis and Seas ouerwhelmed many persons, and the great gates of the West end of Paules Church in London were blowne open.

The Queens Progresse to Oxford.

The 31. of August, the Queenes Maiestie in her Progresse came from Woodstocke to the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and was of all the Students, which had looked for her comming thither two yeres, so honourably and ioyfully receiued, as either their loyalnesse towards the Queenes Maiestie, or the expectation of their friends did require. Concerning orders in disputation, and other academicall exercises, they agreed much with those, which the Vniuersitie of Cambridge had vsed two yeares before. Comedies also and Tragedies were played in Christs Church, where the Queenes Highnesse lodged. Among the which, the Comedie entituled Palemon, and Arcet, made by Master Edwards of the Queenes Chappell, had such tragicall successe as was lamentable: for at that time by the fall of a wall, and a paire of staires, and great presse of the multitude, three men were slaine.

Misfortune at Oxford.

The fift of September, after disputations, the Queene at the humble sute of certaine of her Nobilitie, and the King of Spaines Ambassadours, made a briefe Oration in Latine to the Vniuersitie, but so wise and pithy, as England may reioyce that it hath so learned a Prince, and the Vniuersitie may triumph, that they haue so noble a Patroneste.

The first of September after dinner, her Grace comming from Christs Church ouer Carfox, and so to Saint Maries, the Schollers standing in order according to their degrees, euen to the East gate, certaine Doctors of the Vniuersitie did ride before in their scarlet Gowns and Hoods, and Masters of Art in black Gownes, and Hoods. The Maior also named Master Williams with certain of his brethren, to the number of 14. or 15. did ride before her in scarlet to the end of Magdelen bridge, where their Liberties ended: but the Doctors and Masters went forward still to Shot ouer, a mile and more out of Oxford, because their Liberties extended so farre, and there, after Orations made, her Highnesse with thanks to the whole Vniuersitie bad them farewell, and rode to Rycote to Master Norrice house, an eight miles from Oxford.

Souldiers transported into Ireland.

The valiant Captaine Edward Randolfe Esquire, Lieutenant of the Ordnance, and Colonell of a thousand foote men, in September last past, was with his band embarked at Bristow, and within fewe dayes after landed at Knockfergus, in the North parts of Ireland, and went thence by water to a place called Derry, by which passeth the riuer of Longfoile: there the said Colonell in short space fortified, to the great annoyance of I. Oneale, and by great forecsight and experience, garded himselfe and his charge till the said Oneale, (to hinder and disturbe his abode there) the 12. of December arriued with a great Army of Kerne Calawglasses and Horsemen, with whom the said Captaine Randolfe encountred, and him there so discomfited, as after that conflict, hee durst neuer approach the Queenes power, and to his perpetuall fame the said Captaine by reason of his bold and hardy onset, that day lost his life.

The 22. of February, the Lady Margaret Douglas Countesse of Lennor, mother to the said King of Scots, was discharged out of the Tower of London.

Townes of Dissetrie burnt thirtie in 30. yeares.

The 22. of Aprill, by great misfortune of fire in the Towne of Dissetrie in Wales, 12. miles from Shrewsburie, to the number of two hundred houses, that is to say, seuen score within the walls, and threescore without in the Suburbs, besides cloath, corne, cattell, &c. were consumed, which fire began at two of the clocke in the afternoone, and ended at foure, to the great mernailing of many, that so great a spoile in so short time should happen. Two long streetes with great riches of that Towne were burnt, in Anno 1542. And likewise 22 yeare in Anno 1544.

The Lord Scrope Warden of the West marches, entred Scotland the eighteenth of Aprill, burnt and spoyled those parts almost to Dunfreis, he had diuers conflicts, gaue sundry ouerthrowes, tooke many prisoners, and returned safely. During all these tumultions, the marches of England in all places were so gearded by the Lordiners, sir George Bowes, and other of the Bishopricke, as the Scots durst not once offer to enter into England, so that not one house was burned, nor one Cowe taken out of England. There were raised, ouerthrowne and burnt in this tourney, about fiftie strong Castles and Pyles, and aboue three hundred Townes and Villages, so that there be very few in the Countrey, that either haue receiued our English Rebels, or inuaded England, that either haue Castle, Pile, or house for themselues or their tenants, besides the losse of their goods. The fire and twentieth, the Lord Lieutenant accompanied with the Lord gouernour the Marshall and diuers lustie Gentlemen, Captaines and soldiers, to the number of three thousand, set forward to Warke one of the Lord Hewme Castle, which Castle they besieged till the same was yeelded, the Lord Gouernor, the Marshall and diuers other, tooke possession for our Soueraigne Ladie the Queene Maiestie, and expelled the Scots that were therein, to the number of 168. persons, in their apparell on their backs only without armes, weapon, bagge, or baggage, among whom there were two Englishmen, one Hilliard the Castle of Northumberlands man, and a bastarde Scottish person, named William Gowlwher, which both were carried to Barwicke and there executed the 24. of May. The Lord Lieutenant placed in the Castle, Captaine Wood and Captaine Pikeman, with 200. souldiers, and so returned to Barwicke the 29. of Aprill, where he rested very quill at ease, hauing in the trauell taken extreame cold, wherewith he was driuen into an extreame ague.

The 4. of May, he sent Master Drewry Marshall with the number of two thousand, to take Fauns Castle, which at the first comming was deliuered to the Marshall, who expelled the Scots in number twelue, and placed fourteene of our Englishmen against all Scotland, it is so strong a place, and so returned to Barwicke. Our Generall sent his trumpeter to require a parley with assurance safely to returne, whereunto the Lord Heming subtilly consented, and minding so to wind him into his danger, conueyed certaine shot, and armed men into a secret place, so that our Generall comming alone to haue parlied, his trumpeter not returned, they shot at him meaning to haue slayne him, but hee bestowed his pistolets as freely at them as they at him, and returned to his company and so to Glasco: from whence Sir George Care, being maruelously offended with the subtill dealing of the Lord Heming, wrote a letter of challenge to combat with him body for body. Which the Lord Heming by his letter of answere refused, whereupon Sir George Care wrote a sharpe and pithy replie, &c.

The one and twentieth day, our Generall accompanied with the Gentlemen and horsemen, went to Dumbarton again to parley with the Lord Heming, upon his promise that hee would meete him three miles from the sayd Castle, but the place of parley being viewed, was found to be subiect to the shot of the Castle, and therefore our Generall required another place, which would not be granted by the Lord Heming.

The 22. the Lord of Lenox, the Lord Glencarne, and the Lord Simple, with their friendes and tenants, came to our Generall, and mustered before Glasco, to the number of foure thousand horsemen and footmen.

The foure and twentieth day, our generall gaue summons to the sayd Castle which would not yeild, whereupon he sent to Sterling for bigger ordinance for the battery, and so went from thence, accompanied with the Earles of Lenox and Mortaine, with the horsemen, and certaine shot, marched in the Countrey to a faire house of the Abbots of Kilwining neere adioyning, whose name was Cayvyn Hamilton; which house they burned and vtterly spoyled with seuen-

The Royall Exchange builded.

The City of London being of very late yeares, much increased in people and generall traffique with all Christian nations: so as at this time not onely the native Merchants and the retailers and shop keepers were multiplied and encreased both in wealth and number, but also the City was wonderfully replenished with great store of Merchants strangers from many forraine nations reseding now in London, whose generall repaire to this Citie, was partly for their owne safeties, because of the ciuil warres in France, and Flanders, whose confluence in London was now growne to an vnknowne greatnesse in respect of former ages, all which Merchants and tradesmen, as well English as strangers, for their generall making of bargaines, Contracts and commerce, they did vsually meete twice euery day in Lombard streete (like as they doe now in the Royall Exchange) but forasmuch as their meetings was then vnpleasant and troublesome by reason of walking and talking in an open narrowe streete, which streete beareth the name of the Lombard Merchants, which of former time vsed to walke there at their vsuall houres being there constrained either to endure all extremities of weather: Viz. heat and cold, snow and raine, or else to shelter themselues in shoppes, for redresse whereof, vpon good aduice, the Citizens of London bought diuers times houses and small Tenements in Cornehill, and pulled them downe and made the ground faire and plaine to build vpon, the charges whereof, cost them aboue fiue thousand pound, and then the Citie gaue that ground vnto Sir Thomas Gresham, to the end he should build a Burse or faire place for the assembly of Merchants, like to that of Antwerpe, and the sayd Sir Thomas Gresham layd the first stone thereof, the seauenth of June, and the whole worke was fully finished in November the next yeare. 1567. and then the Merchants held their meetings at this Burse, for it was generally so called vntill the Queene came thither, which was the three and twentieth of January following, and then by her owne mouth caused it to be Proclaimed that it should for euer bee called the Royall Exchange, and the next yeare following Lombard streete was quite forsaken.

A strange kind of earth moouing.

The seuenteenth day of February, at a place called Kilmanstone, neere Darcleth Hill in the Country of Hereford, was seene the ground to open, and certaine rockes with a peece of ground removed, and went forwarde the space of foure dayes, making at the first a terrible noyse as it went on the earth: it removed it selfe betweene three of the clocke in the euening, and seuen the next morrow, forty paces, carrying great trees and hedge coates, some hedge coates with three score hedge in them, some trees fell into the chinks, other that grew on the same ground grow now as firmely on a hill, and some that stood East, stand West, and those that stood West, stand East. The depth of the hole where it first brake out, is thirty foote, the breadth of the breach is eight score yards, and in length about twentie score yards. It neerethew Kingstone Chappell. Also, two high hedges be removed nigh one hundred yards, with the trees of the hedge rowes. The ground in all is five and twenty acres, and where tillage ground was, there is pasture left in place, and where was pasture, there is tillage ground gone vpon it. The ground as it remoued, drawe the earth before it, and as the lower part ouerwhelmed the ground, so that it is growne to a great hill of twelue fadome high. It removed from Saturday till monday at night following, and so stayed.

In the moneth of Febuary, Sir Thomas Sackvile, Barron of Buckhurst was sent in ambassage from the Queenes Maiestie to Charles the 9. French King, as well to congratulate for his marriage with the daughter of the Emperor Maximilian, as for other weighty affaires. And as his Ambassage was great, so was his charge no lesse in furnishing himselfe and his traine accordingly, being both in number and furniture, such in euery point as did appertaine: and his receiuing and entertainment in France by the King and others, was agreeable thereto, for he was received vpon the coast by the governors of the fortified townes right honorably, by order from the King. Among other, the Bournoisell was one, who being very well mounted and appointed, left not his Lordship before hee came to the Court, and from thence accompanied him backe, vntill his embarkement homewards. In the maine countries, he was accompanied with the Gouernours and Nobles of the places about: and in the good townes where he passed, he was presented by the chiefe Magistrates, though his Lordships rewardes ouer-valued their presents.

Sir Thomas Sackvile sent into France.

At his approach neere to Paris, hee was encountred on the way by two Marquesses of Trans and Saluces, this being of the house of Sauoy, and the other of the family of Foix. These wanted not such as accompanied them, euen of the best sort. At the Lord ambassadors first audience, which was at the Castle of Madrid, otherwise called Boloigne neere Paris, where the King then lay, the Queens Almaine coaches bery richly furnished, were sent to Paris for him, in one of the which his Lordship with the Marquesse of Trance rode toward the Court, very narrowly escaping from a threwd turne, by reason the same coach was ouerthrown by the duch wagoners their negligence, who in a brauery galloping the field, made an ouer thort turne, wherewith the Marques was sore hurted. The Lord Ambassador at his arrivall, was very honorhonourably receiued, hee was banqueted by diuers, and that very sumptuously, which by him was not vnrequited, but his reward at the Kings hand was onely a chaine, weighing one thousand French crownes. At this present, the riuer of Sayne, that runneth through the Citie of Paris, was not passable with vessels, by reason of the great frosts, and thereby not onely all kinde of victuals, but also hay and wood was hard to come by, and not to be had but at excessiue prises, the Country there-abouts hauing beene sore harried and spoiled by the ciuill tumults: by reason whereof, not onely the Lord of Buckhurst for the space bee remained there, but also sir Henry Norrice, and Master Francis Walsingham her Maiesties Ambassadors, Legers successiuely, were driuen to an encrease of expences, paying for euery thing they bought an higher price then had beene accustomed. After that my Lord Buckhurst had beene feasted and banqueted by the King, and others of the French Nobility, and had accomplished the points of his Ambassage, hee toke leaue of the King, and departed homewards, arriuing here in England a little before Easter.

1 Parliament.

The second of Aprill, a Parliament began at Westminster, wherein was granted to the Queenes Maiestie (toward her great charges, in repressing the late Rebellion in the North, and pursuing the said Rebels and their fautors which were fled into Scotland) by the Cleargy a Subsidie of sixe shillings in the pound, and by the Temporalty two Fifteenes, with a Subsidie of two shillings eight pence in the pound.

Iustes at Westminster.

The first, second, and third of May, was holden at Westminster before the Queenes Maiestie, a solemne Iust, at the Tilt, Turney, and Barriers. The chalengers were Edward Earle of Oxford, Charles Howard, sir Henry Lee, and Christopher Hatton Esquire, who all did very valiantly, but the chiefe honour was guen to the Earle of Oxford.

Ded. Story executed.

The first of June, Iohn Story a Doctor of the Canon law, who before had beene condemned of high treason, was drawne from the Tower of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled and quartered, his head set on London bridge, & his quarters on the gates of the City.

A combate appoint. d at Tuthill.

The 18 of June, in Trinity Tearme, there was a combate appointed to haue beene fought for a certaine Manour and demaine lands belonging thereunto, in the Ile of Harty, adioyning to the Ile of Sheppey in Kent: Simon Low and Iohn Kyme were Plaintifes, and had brought a writ of right against T. Paramore, who offered to defend his right by Battell, whereupon the Plaintifes afore-said, accepted to answere his Chalenge, offering likewise to defend their right to the same Manour & lands, and to proue by Battell that Paramore had no right, nor no good title to haue the same.

The quarrell of combate stayed.

Hereupon the said Tho. Paramore brought before the Iudges at the common place at Westminster, one George Thorne, a bigge, broad, strong set fellow: and the Plaintifes, brought Hen. Nailor, Master of Defence, and seruant to the right honourable the Earle of Leicester, a proper slender man, and not so tall as the other: Thorne cast downe a Gauntlet, which Nailor toke vp. Vpon the Sonday before the battell should be tried, on the next morrow, the matter was stayed, and the parties agreed, that Paramore being in possession should haue the land, and was bound in 500. pound to confider the plaintifs, as vpō hearing the matter the Iudges should award. The D. Stately was the taker vp of the matter, in this wise. It was thought good, that for Paramores assurance, the order should be kept touching the combat and that the plaintifs Low & Kyme should make default of appearance, but that yet such as were sureties of Nailor, their champions appearance, should bring him in, and likewise those that were sureties for Thorne, should bring in the same Thorn in discharge of their band, and that the Court should sit in Tuthill fields, where was prepared one plot of ground one and twenty yardes square, double railed for the combate, without the West square, a stage being set vp for the Iudges, representing the Court of the common pleas. All the compasse without the Lists, was set with scaffolds one aboue another, for people to stand and behold. There were behinde the square where the Iudges sate, two Tents, the one for Nailor, the other for Thorne. Thorne was there in the morning timely. Nailor about seuen of the clocke came through London, apparelled in a doublet and galey-gascoyne hartches, all of crimsin sattin cut and raced, a hat of black veluet, with a red feather and band, before him Drums and Fifes playing: the Gauntlet that was cast downe by George Thorne, was borne before the said Nailor vpon a swords point, and his Baston (a staffe of an ell long, made Taper-wise, tipt with horne) with his shield of hard leather, was borne after him, by Askam a yeoman of the Queenes garde: he came into the Pallace of Westminster, and staying not long before the Hall doore, came backe into the Kings streete, and so along through the Sanctuary, and Tuthill streete, into the field, where he stayed till past nine of the clocke, and then sir Ierome Bowes brought him to his tent, Thorne being in the tent with sir Henry Cheney long before. About ten of the clocke, the Court of common pleas removed, and came to the place prepared: when the Lord chiefe Iustice with two other his associates were set, then Low was called solemnely to come in, or else hee to lose his writ of right. Then after a certaine time the sureties of Henry Nailor were called to bring in the said Nailor, Champion for Simon Low, and thereupon sir Ierome Bowes leading Nailor by the hand, entreth with him the Lists, bringing him downe that square by which hee entred, being on the left hand of the Iudges, and so about till hee came to the next square iust against the Iudges, and there making curtesie, first with one leg, and then with the other, passed forth till he came to the middle of the place, and then made the like obeysance, and so passing till they came to the barre, there hee made the like curtesie, and his shield was held vp aloft ouer his head:

Nailor put off his weather stockes, and so barefoote and bare-legged, saue his like scantlonions to the ancles, and his dublet sleeues tyed vp aboue the elbow, and bare headed, came in as is afore-said. Then were the sureties of George Thorne called to bring in the same Thorne, and immediatly Sir Henry Cheiney cutting at the vpper end on the right hand of the Iudges, vsed the like order in comming about by his side, as Nailor had before on that other side, and so comming to the barre with like obeysance, held vp his shield, proclamation was made in forme as followeth: The Iustices commaund in the Quenes Maiesties name, that no person of what estate, degree, or condition that he be, being present, to be so hardy to giue any token or signe, by countenance, speech, or language, either to the partner or to the defender, whereby the one of them may take aduantage of the other: and no person remoue, but still keepe his place: and that euery person and persons keepe their staues and their weapons to themselues: and suffer neither the said prouer nor defender to take any of their weapons, or any other thing, that may stand either to the said prouer or defender any auaile, vpon paine of forfeiture of landes, tenements, goods, chattels, and imprisonment of their bodies, and making fine and ransome at the Quenes pleasure.

Then was the prouer to be sworne in forme as followeth: This heare, you Iustices, that I haue this day neither eate, drunke, nor haue vpon me either bone, stone, nor glasse, or any inchantment, sorcerie, or witchcraft, whereby through the power of the word of God might be inleased or diminished, and the deuils power encreased: and that my appeale is true, so helpe me GOD and his Saints, and by this booke.

After this solemne order was finished, the Lord chiefe Iustice rehearsing the manner of bringing the writ of right by Simon Low, of the answere made thereunto by Paramore, of the proceeding therein, and how Paramore had challenged to defend his right to the land by battell, by his champion George Thorne, and of the accepting the triall that was by Lowe, with his champion Henry Nailor, and then for default in appearance in Low, he adiudged the land to Paramore, and dismissed the champions, acquitting the sureties of their bands. He also willed Henry Nailor to render againe to George Thorne his gauntlet, whereunto the said Nailor answered, that his Lordship might command him any thing, but willingly he would not render the said gauntlet to Thorne except he would win it: and further, he challenged the said Thorne to play with him halfe a score blowes, to shew some pastime to the Lord chiefe Iustice, and the other there assembled: but Thorne answered, that hee came to fight, and would not play. Then the Lord chiefe Iustice commending Nailor for his valiant courage, commanded them both quietly to depart the field, &c.

The 16. of July, Rebecca Chamber, late wife to Thomas Chamber of Pergetcham, was found culpable of poysoning the said Thomas Chamber her husband, at the Assises holden at Maidstone in the County of Kent: for the which fact (hauing well deserued) she was there burnt the next morrow.

Bishop of Salisbury deceased.

The great Turke hauing had many victories by land in sundry places, as well in subduing whole Countries, as in taking many strong Cities and Castles from the Christians, which conuerted neere his territories, enforcing the Christians either to renounce their holy faith, or to endure vnspeakeable slaury, themselues, their wiues, and children being daily bought and solde in open Markets, like Horses, Oxen, and Asses. The Turke by this time had conquered many Ilands, and Cities bordering vpon the Sea, by meanes whereof he was greatly enriched, and strengthened with Galleyes and other mayne forces. And this yeare 1571. knowing a diuision amongst diuers Christian Princes, as well for matters of Religion, as affaires of State, vpon hope of which aduantage, he assembled and furnished a mighty Armie of Galleyes, pretaining thereby to become Master of the Sea, and Lord of the land at one instant: but such was the great mercy of Almighty God, that many Christian Princes conioyned together, and furnished a very strong defensible Nauie of Shippes, Galleyes, and Gallyasses: and at the time of Battaile, the wind changed from the Turkes side, and came on the backe of the Christian Nauie, and carried the smoke of all their shot vpon the Turks Galleyes, Foystes, and Brigandines, so as they could not well see how to defend themselues, or offend their enemies, which the Christians well obseruing, with all religious resolution, right brauely gaue charge and chase vpon the miscreants, and sunke and tooke of Turkish Galleyes full two hundred and thirty, and in that fight slue aboue thirty thousand Spahomatits, besides a great number of prisoners taken by the Christians, and aboue 12. thousand Christians redeemed by force from Turkish slauery: in this blessed victory, the Christians lost not aboue 7. or 8. Galleyes, nor of them aboue eight thousand persons slaine: this was done the first day of October 1571. and the 9. of November at London the people for ioy made bonefires, and other pleasant signes of reioycing. The Christian Armies before the fight began, were wondrous wary and carefull in their rowing, that the Oares of one Galley should not annoy another, but to rowe gently and keepe good distance, and when the victory was atchieued, the spoiles and prisoners were orderly diuided, and sent according to the cost and

The great Turke hauing had many victories by land in sundry places, as well in subduing whole Countries, as in taking many strong Cities and Castles from the Christians, which conuerted more his territories, enforcing the Christians either to renounce their holy faith, or to endure vnspeakeable slauery, themselues, their wiues, and children being daily bought and solde in open Markets, like Beasts, Oxen, and Asses. The Turke by this time had conquered many Iliands, and Cities bordering vpon the Sea, by meanes whereof he was greatly enriched, and strengthened with Gallies and other mayne forces. And this yeare 1571. knowing a diuision amongst diuers Christian Princes, as well for matters of Religion, as affaires of State, vpon hope of which aduantage, he assembled and furnished a mighty Armie of Galleyes, presuming thereby to become Master of the Sea, and Lord of the land at one instant: but such was the great mercy of Almighty God, that many Christian Princes conioyned together and furnished a very strong defensible Fleete of Shippes, Galleyes, and Gallyasses: and at the time of battaile, the wind changed from the Turkes side, and came on the backe of the Christian Fleete, and carried the smoke of all their shot vpon the Turkes Galleyes, Foysts, and Brigandines, so as they could not well see how to defend themselues, or offend their enemies, which the Christians well obseruing, with all religious resolution, right brauely gaue charge and chase vpon the miscreants, and sunke and tooke of Turkish Galleyes full two hundred and thirty, and in that fight slue aboue thirty thousand Sarazens, besides a great number of prisoners taken by the Christians, and aboue 12. thousand Christians redeemed by force from Turkish slauery: in this blessed victory, the Christians lost not aboue 7. or 8. Galleyes, nor of them aboue eight thousand persons slaine: this was done the first day of October 1571. and the 9. of Nouember at London the people for ioy made bonefires, and other pleasant signes of reioycing. The Christian Armies before the fight began, were wondrous wary and carefull in their roluing, that the Oares of one Galley should not annoy another, but to rowe gently and keepe good distance, and when the victory was atchieued, the spoiles and prisoners were orderly diuided, and sent according to the cō

This Martin had procured the ſaid Arthur Hall to come to the ſaid Pariſonage, to buy of him certaine Plate: but after the ſaid Arthur had well viewed the ſame, he ſaid, This is none of your plate, it hath Doctor Caius his marke, and I know it to be his: that is true ſaid Martin Bullocke, but hee hath appointed me to ſell it &c. After this talke, whiles the ſaid Arthur was weighing the Plate, the ſame Martin fetcht out of the Kitchin a thicke waſhing battle, and comming behind him, ſtruck the ſaid Arthur on the head, that he fell to the ground with the firſt ſtroke, and then ſtruck him againe, and after tooke the ſaid Arthurs dagger, and ſtabbed him, and with his knife cut his throat, and after would haue truſſed him in a Danſke Cheſt, but the ſame was too ſhort: wherevpon he tumbled him downe a paire of ſtaires, and after thinking to haue buried him in the Cellar, his legges being broken with the firſt fall, and ſtiffe, he could not draw him downe the Cellar ſtaires being winding, wherefore he cut off his legges with an hatchet, and in the end, truſſed him with ſtraw in a dry fat, and ſaying it was his apparell and bookes, cauſed the ſame to be carried to the waters ſide, and ſo ſhipped to Rye. But as God would haue it, there was ſuſpition gathered againſt the murtherer, whereby hee was examined before Alderman Branch, one of the Sheriffes of London, but ſeemed ſo innocent and guiltleſſe in that caſe, that one Robert Gee a Cloathworker, being of good credite, vndertooke for his forthcomming: wherevpon Bullocke ſlipt away, firſt to Weſtminſter, where taking boate, he was rowed vp the riuer Weſtward, till he came to Okingham in the Foreſt, eight miles beyond the Towne of Windſore: from whence (by Gods prouidence) he came back againe vnto London, where he lodged at the red Lyon in Holborne. In the meane time Robert Gee, vpon knowledge heard that Bullocke was ſtept aſide, was not onely had in ſuſpition, but alſo committed to ward, albeit ſo, as he had liberty to ſend abroad ſuch as ſhould make ſute after Bullocke, and amongſt other, one of his ſeruants was ſent to Rye, after the day-fat, and comming thither, the ſame day-fat was opened, where the mangled corpes of Hall was found, whereby the truth of the matter came to light, and by the will of God, Bullocke was at the very ſame time diſcouered at the place in Holborne afore mentioned, and there apprehended, reteined, as ye haue heard, due puniſhment for his wicked fact.

An. Reg. 15.

The 18. of November in the morning, was ſeene a ſtar Northward very bright and cleare in the conſtellation of Calliopeia, at the backe ſtar appeared of her chaire, which with three chiefe fixed ſtars of the ſaid conſtellation, made a Geometricall figure loſenge-wiſe, of the learned men called Rombus: this ſtarre in bigneſſe at the firſt appearing ſeemed bigger then Iupiter, and not much leſſe then Venus, when the ſecond greateſt: alſo the ſaid ſtarre neuer changing his place, was carried about with the daily motion of heauen, as all fixed ſtarres commonly are, and ſo continued (by little and little, to the eye appearing leſſe) for the ſpace of almoſt ſixteene moneths, at what time it was ſo ſmall, that rather thought by exerciſe of oft viewing, might imagine the place, that any eye could iudge the preſence of the ſame: and one thing is herein chiefly to be noted, that by the learned skill and conſent of the beſt and moſt expert Mathematicians, which obſerued the ſtace, property, and other circumſtances belonging to the ſame ſtarre, it was found to haue beene in place celeſtiall farre aboue the Moone: otherwiſe then euer any Comet hath beene ſeene, or naturally can appeare. Therefore it is ſuppoſed, that the ſignification thereof is directed purpoſely and ſpecially to ſome matter not naturall, but celeſtiall, or rather ſuper-celeſtiall, ſo ſtrange, as from the beginning of the world neuer was the like.

The said Earle with many of his company were robbed vpon the Sea by pirats of much of their baggage, also of diuers of their men slaine. In France he and his traine were honorably receiued. At the Christening hee gaue the childe to name Elizabeth, and returned into England the twentie seauenth of February.

In the moneth of February, through sundry haynous complaints, brought to the Quenes Maiestie, and her Councell, of Pirats that kept the narrow seas, doing many robberies, as also the robbing of the Earle of Worcester (as is aforesayd) her Highnesse, by the aduise of her honorable Councel, tooke order with the Lord Admirall of England, that he should send to the Seas ships and men to scoure the narrow Seas, and to apprehend so many Pyrats shippes as might bee met with: and for the better doing thereof, it pleased her Maiestie to send one of her owne ships named the Swallow, to be the Admirall, vnder the charge of William Holstock of London Esquire, Controler of her Highnesse ships, who had with him the Gullian, the barke Garet, and the barke of Yarmouth, and 360. able marriners, Gunners, and souldiers in the sayd three ships, and one barke which seowed the narrow Seas, from the North-east-land, as far West-wards as Falmouth in Cornewall, and take twenty shippes and barkes of sundry nations, viz. Englesh, French, and Flemings, (but all Pirates) and in fashion of war. He apprehended in those shippes and barkes to the number of 900. men of all nations, and sent them to ward, to Sandwich, Douer, Wight, and Portsmouth (whereof three of them that rebred the Earle of Worcester, were shortly after executed at Wight) also the sayd William Holstocke did rescue and take from the aboue sayd Pirates ships, fifteene other Merchants shippes laden with Merchandise, that were their prize, being of sundry nations, and set at liberty the sayd fifteene Merchants ships and goods, which done, hee returned to Portsmouth, and there ended his voyage in March.

Peter Ramus in his Commentaries of the Warres of France, writeth thus. The Earle of Worcester passing into France, certaine Frenchmen and Flemings set vpon him, to be from him one of his shippes, and killed certaine of his men: Whereupon the Quene of England taking displeasure, cut the Lord Admirall, (saith he) wherein he mistake the matter. for Master William Holstock was sent (as is aforesayd) who set vpon all the shippes, French and Flemings, tooke and carried away, what he came to hand, so that twenty of Montgomeries ships were olst, who was going to Rochell with the number of fiftie shippes, well furnished out of England with money there bestowed (but neuer repayed) thus his nauy being diminished of those twenty ships, when he saw the Kings Nauy here to Rochell, he directed his course another way, la bed at Bell Ile, and take both the Ile and Castle.

Earle of Kent deceased.

About the same time dyed Edmond L. Chardois, The George Sanders murthereth at Shoters hill.

The 25. of March, being Wednesday in Easter weeke, and the feast of the Annunciation of our Lady, George Browne cruelly murdered two honest men neer vnto Shoters hill in Kent, the one of them was a wealthy Merchant of London, named George Sanders, the other Iohn Beane of Wolwich: which murder was committed in manner as followeth.

On Tuesday in Easter weeke (the foure and twentieth of March) the said George Browne receiuing secret inteligence by letter from mistresse Anne Drewry, that master Sanders should lodge the same night at the house of one Master Barnes in Wolwich, and from thence goe on foote to Saint Mary Cray the next morning, lay in waite for him by the way, a little from Shoters hill, and there slew both him and Iohn Beane, seruant to master Barnes: but Iohn Beane hauing ten or eleuen wounds, and being left for dead, by Gods prouidence reuiued again, and creeping away of all foure, was found by an old man and his mayden, and conueyed to Wolwich, wher he gaue euident marks of the murtherer.

Immediatly vpon the deede doing, Browne sent mistris Drewry word thereof by Roger Clement (among them called trusty Roger) he himselfe repaired forthwith to the Court at Greenewich, and anon after him came thither the report of the murther also. Then departed he thence to London, and came to the house of mistris Drewry, where, though he spake not personally with her, after conference had with her seruant trusty Roger, they preuyded him twenty pounds that same day, for the which the layd certaine plate of her owne, and of mistris Sanders to gage. On the next morrow being thursday (hauing intelligence, that Browne was sought for,) they sent him fiue pounds more by the same Roger, warning him to shift for himselfe by slight, which thing he forebodyed not to doe: neuertheless the Lords of the Quenes Maisties Councell, caused so speedie and narrow search to be made for him, that vpon the eight and twentieth of the same month, he was apprehended in a mans house of his owne name at Rochester, & being brought backe againe to the Court, was examined by the Councell, to whom he confessed the deed, as you haue heard, and that her had oftentimes before pretended and sought to doe the same, by the inftigation of the sayd mistris Drewry, who hadde promised to make a marriage betweene him and mistresse Sanders (whom hee semed to loue exceedingly) neuertheless he protested (though vntruly) that mistresse Sanders was not priuye nor consenting thereunto. Vpon his confession hee was arraigned at the Kings Bench in Westminster hall, the 18. of April, where he acknowledged himselfe guilty, and was condemned as principall of the murder, according to which sentence, he had iudgement, and was executed in Smithfield on munday the 20. of April, at which time also vntruly (as shee her selfe confessed afterwards) hee laboured by all meanes to cleare mistresse Sanders of committing euill of her body with him, as also of procuring or consenting to the murther of her husband, and then beginning to sing a Psalme, O Lord turne not away thy face, &c. hee sung himselfe beside the ladder, and so thoztened his owne life: hee was after hanged vp in chaines neere vnto the place where hee had done the fact.

George Brown hanged in Smithfield.

In the meane time mistris Drewry and her man being examined, as well by their owne confessions, as by fol'ing out of the matter (and also by Brownes appeachment thought culpable) were committed to ward. And after mistris Sanders being deliuered of child, and churched (for at the time of her husbands death she looked presently to lye downe) was vpon mistresse Drewries mans confession, and other great likelihoods, likewise committed to the Tower, and on wednesday the 1st of May arraigned with mistresse Drewry at the Guild hall, the effect of whose inditement was, that they by a letter written had bene procurers of the layd murther, and knowing the murther done, had by money and otherwise relieued the murderer: whereunto they pleaded not guilty, howbeit, they were both condemned as accessaries to master Sanders death, and executed in Smithfield the 13. of May, being wednesday in Whitson weeke, at which time they both confessed themselues guiltie of the fact. Trusty Roger mistris Drewries man was arraigned on Friday the 8. of May, and being there condemned as accessary, was executed with his mistris, the time and place aforesayd. Not long after, Anthony Browne, brother to the forenamed George Browne, was for notable felonies conueyed from Newgate to Foske, and there hanged.

Sir William Drevvry with the Captaines, Gentlemen, and number of soul-diers before mentioned, passed from Barwicke to Lieth, from whence on the 25. of April they marched on to Coenborough, entred the towne, and the same day summoned the Castle in forme as followeth.

The Church yard.

Sir William Kirkaudy, sometime of Grange Knight, forasmuch as the Queenes Maiestie my Soueraine Lady, vpon the earnest request of her deare cousin the King of Scots, your Soueraigne Lord, made to her highnesse by his Regent, Nobilitie, and State of this Realme, after all good meanes vsed to haue reduced you to dutifull obedience of his authority by treaty, which hitherto you haue not bulyeearkned vnto, to the only hinderance of the vniuersall peace in this Realme, by withholding that his highnes Castle, meaning, as it formerly, to reserue the same for a receptacle of forraine forces, to the manifest dangers both of this Realme, and of my Soueraignesse, and therefore necessary to remeane so perillous a danger to both the Realmes, for which consideration, her Maiestie hath sent her ayd and succors of men, ordinance, and munition, vnder my charge and leading, for the repugnation and recouery of the sayd Castle, to the sayd Kings vse and behalfe, and therefore according to her Maiesties commandement, and Commission, this shalbe in due maner to warn, require, and summon you, that you render and deliuer the said Castle, with the whole ordinance, Artillery, Munitions, Jewels, houshold-stuffe, and such other implements within the same, to me and the vse and behalfe of the king your Soueraigne, and his Regent in his name, immediatly after this my letter of summons, or knowledge of the same, shall come to your: which if you obey, as of duty you ought, then shall I in her Maiesties name, interpone my selfe to trauell with the Regent, Councell, and Nobility here for the safety of your liues, &c. Otherwise if you continue in your former obstinacy, abiding the canon, then no further to looke for grace or fauour, but you and the rest within the Castle to be pursued to the vttermost, & holden as enemies to her Maiestie, your owne Soueraign and country. Giuen at Coenborough by me sir William Drewry Knight, generall of her Maiesties forces now in Scotland, this twenty fiue of Aprill, 1573.

The Lord Grange, Captaine of the Castle, notwithstanding this summons, refused vtterly to yeeld the Castle, who thereupon receiued such answer from the general, as stood not to his contentation. Herupon were the pioners set in hand to cast trenches, & to raise mounts in places conuenient to plant the ordinance vpon. And then began the siege of the Castle in 5. places where were erected 5. mounts. The first was for the Regent, called the R. mount. The 2. for sir William Drewry general there. The 3. was gouerned by sir George Cary. The 4. by sir Henry Lea. The 5. by master Thomas Sturton, master of the ordinance in the north part of England. There was at this siege as is reported 1500. Englishmen, & of Scots 5. hundred, or rather, 1500. there was also one with another peeces of artilery 50. to wit. 6. canons, 9. halfe canons, 9. culuerings, 6. sakers. They within spared not to bestow such as they had, as well at the pioners as souldiers, in-so much that diuers were hurt, and some slaine, before the trenches and mounts might be brought to perfection: but they within escaped not free, especially after that the trenches and mounts were brought in state to defend the assailants, who watching and warding in the trenches, answered them within the Castle very roughly. On the 17. of May, began the battery of the Castle, so that there wer 30. canons shot off against the same, and so well bestowed at Dauids tower, that by the ruines thereof then & after, the force of the English canons were easie to be sene. The 18. 19. and 20. of May, the canons and demy-canons were not idle, but the 21. the whole battery began on each side the Castle from the trenches and mounts very hotly, and still they within ceased not to make answere again with their artillery, killing and hurting diuers both Englishi and Scots, but such was the diligence of the English Gunners, that they displaced the ordinance in the Castle, and strok one of their chiefe canons iust in the mouth, whereby the same was broken in peeces. The 26. of May, the assault was giuen at 7. of the clocke in the morning to the Spurre, which by the hardy manhood of the assailants was wonne, and was no sooner entred by the Englishmen, but that the generals ensigne was shewed and spred vpon the front and top thereof, to the great discomfort of them within the Castle. In the meane time whilst these were appointed to giue the assault thus to the Spurre, there were certaine Englishmen & Scots commanded to make a counternance of an assault at the west side of the Castle whereby those that assaulted the Spurre might the more easily obtaine their purpose, but they rashly aduenturing further then they had in commandement, were beaten backe and repulsed, with 28. or 30. of their company slaine and hurt. The same day toward night, they within the Castle by a drum demanded parley, which being granted, with assurance of all hostility from that houre vnto the 28. of May, the Lord Petorre was let downe by a rope from the Castle, and afterward the Lord Grange himselfe Captain of the Castle, and Robert Melun same likewise downe to talke with the Generall, and such other as were appointed to accompany him, hereupon at length, to wit, the sayd 28. of May, the Castle was surrendred into the hands of sir William Drevvrie, and so it rested in his possession for the time, and his ensigne was set vp and spred during the same time in sundry places of the Castle, and afterwards to the great honour of England, by him it was deliuered vnto the vse of the King of Scots, and part of the spoyle of the Castle was giuen to the souldiers, the canons and artillery with certaine other instruments, left to the King. If the Englishmen by force hadde taken it, it was decreed that they should should haue had the whole spoyle except the artillery, and so should haue enioyed it by the space of three dayes.

Causes of delivery of the Castle were these.

1 Lacke of water: the wel within the Castle was stopped and defiled by the ruins of the Castle: the other wel without the Castle could not serue them, for that there was a mount made to hinder them. Another water there was which was vnknowne to them which were without, and was taken from them when the spur of the Castle was taken, out of the which they were wont to haue a pint a day for euery souldier.

2 Diuers sicke.

3 Diuers hurt.

4 Not many to maintaine the Castle, which had no space to take any rest, they were so pyed and ouerwearied.

5 Diuers doubted in opinion.

6 Some were no souldiers.

7 No ayde was to be looked for.

The 16. of June, the prisoners were deliuered by the sayd Sir William Drevvry in presence of sundry Scots and Englishmen, vnto the Regent and that done, the same day the sayd Sir William Drevvry with his power departed toward Barwicke. The names of the prisoners were these, sir William Kirkwdie Lord of Grange, and Captaine of the Castle of Coenborough, the Lord Hume, the Lord Ledington Secretarie, the Countesse of Argyle, the Lady of Ledington, the Lady of Grange, with others: in all to the number of men, one hundred sixtie seuen, women thirty foure, boyes ten.

The Earle after many and great dangers on the sea, at length was Copemans Iland, from whence in a pinnesse of Captain Percies, he was brought safe to Knockfergus. The Lord Rich with the like dangers landed at Castle Rilcliffe, where being met by Captaine Maby, Mr. Smith, and Master Moore Pensioners, was conducted to Inch Abby, Master Milbies house, where he had in a readines on the morrow morning, an hundred and fiftie horsemen for their safeguard to Knockfergus, beside fifty kernes which went a-foot through the woodes: there was amongst these, a thirty bowes with a bag-pipe, the rest had darts. The 4 of September, in the afternoone, such a storme of raine happened at London, as the like of long time could not be remembred, wherethrough the chanels of the City suddenly rising, ran with such forcible course towards the common shores, that a lad of the age of 18. yeares, minding to haue leapt ouer the chanel neere vnto Dowgate, was borne ouer with the streame, and by the same carried from the conduit there towards the Thamis, with such a swiftnesse, that no man with staues or otherwise could stay him, till he came against a cart whale, that stood in the water-gate, afore which time he was drowned and starke dead.

The 24. of February, the feast of S. The mills thereabouts were damned vp with them for the space of 4. dayes after, and then were cleared by digging them out with shouels: from whence they came is yet vnknowne, but the day was colde, and a hard frost.

In Salisbury, Exeter, and other places, the dishes fell from the rupbords, and the bookes in mens studies from the shelues. In Norton chappel, the people being on their knees at Euening prayer, the ground mooning, caused them to run away in great feare that the dead bodies would haue risen, or the Chappel to haue fallen: part of Kirkby Castle fell downe, with certaine brick chimnies in Gentlemens houses. Whereas I, I. T. R. H. being seduced by the deuill, the spirit of errour, and by false teachers his ministers, haue falne in certaine most detestable and damnable heresies, namely.

1 That Christ took not flesh of the substance of the Blessed Virgine Mary.

2 That infants of the faithfull ought not to be baptized.

3 That a Christian man may not be a Magistrate, or beare the sword or office of authority.

4 That it is not lawfull for a Christian to take an oath.

Now by the grace of God, and through conference with good and learned Ministers of Christ his Church, I doe vnderstand and acknowledge the same to bee most damnable and detestable heresies, and do aske God here before his Church, mercy for my said former errors, and doe forsake them, recant and renounce them, and abiure them from the bottome of my heart, professing that I certainely beleeue.

And here I thinke good to set downe a declaration sent by the Queenes Maiestie of England unto the King of Spaine, containing a iustification of her proceedings with the States of the low Countries.

The Queenes Maiestie being given to understand of diuers most slaunderous and false brutes given out touching her proceedings with the States of the low Countries, tending as it were to make her the Authour and principall nourisher of the ciuil troubles in the said Countries: and doubting that the lowers and spreaders abroad of the said brutes, to sake by all meanes they may to induce her good brother the King of Spaine to beleeue the said false and malitious surmises to be true, with meaning thereby to breede a breach and interruption of the good amity betweene them: her Maiestie hauing therefore nothing more in recommendation then her honour, and to bee reputed a Prince that desireth to maintaine and continue good amity with the Princes her neighbours (whatsoeuer hath been given out maliciously to the contrary) being able to iustifie her whole actions before God and the world, as well towards him as other Princes her neighbours, hath thought it very expedient for the earnest desire shee hath to satisfie the said King, to set downe in writing a declaration (such as she will maintaine to bee true in the word of a Prince) of her proceedings with the States, to the end the said King being truly informed therein, such causes and scruples of suspition, as might any way hinder the good amity betweene them, might be removed, and the same reduced to as great perfection and integrity, yea hath beene heretofore betweene any their progenitors, which declaration, tending to that good end above mentioned, her Maiestie also hath thought meete to accompany, as well with an aduise unto the said King, what way in her opinion were most fit for him to take for the continuance of the said Countries under his obedience, and the restoring of them unto their former quietnesse and repose, as also with her resolution in those cases of the low Countries, in case the said King shall not condiscend to take some way of pacification, according to her Maiesties most sincere and friendly aduice.

And first touching her proceedings with the States, shee doubteth not but that if the King shall resort to his owne knowledge, and call to remembrance how often sithence the first breaking out of the ciuill dissention in those Countries, her Maiestie hath moued him by sundry Ministers, sent as well vnto himselfe as unto his vnder-gouernours in the said Countries, forewarning both him and them of the mischiefes presently then fallen out, and aduised him to take some speedy way for the prevention of the same, shee cannot but in honour and conscience confesse, that her Highnesse hath therein discharged the duty of a faithfull friend, and good allie in that behalfe. Of which aduise if it might please him to haue taken profit, these his Countries being presently in a most perplexed state, had ben stayed from the ruine and destruction they are now apparantly running into, his people and subiects preserued from slaughter and bloudshed, his rich Townes continued unspoiled, and the whole gouernment kept from perill and alienation: and if herein for her Maiesties iustification, neither these friendly offices, nor the word and faith of a Prince may suffice, yet her owne accounts themselues may serue to iustifie her in the eyes and sight of all the world: That she hath sought to continue those Countries under the Kinges obedience, and hath not at any time intended to impatronize her selfe of any part of them, a matter which perhaps other Princes hauing like aduantages offered by some part of his people, would not haue refused, and therefore may thinke her selfe euill dealt withall, in case so rare an example should be so hardly or rather unfriendly interpeted. And as her Maiestie hath not left any good office undone towards the King and his Ministers, tending to pacification, and the perswasions of those Countries under his obedience: so on the other side, she hath not omitted by sundry messengers sent both to the Prince of Orenge and to the States, as well to perswade them to cease their ciuill warres, and to take some way of peace and agreement amongst themselues, as also to continue their auncient obedience under the lawfull King

King their naturall Lord and Soueraigne, being prouoked thereto upon secret, but yet very true and certaine aduertisements given her of great offers made unto them by some (whom she forbeareth to name for good respects) to haue withdrawne them from their obedience. And heerein if besides many perswasions vsed by messengers, sent of purpose to aduise them to continue their obedience to the King, her Maiestie had not furnished them in the time of their necessity with a portion of money, as well to serue them for the speedy execution of the pacification, then in Treaty betweene Don John and them, as for the keeping of them from a desperate putting of themselues into the hands of other Princes, it did manifestly appeare, that the pacification and accord had not beene so soone made, and that they for lacke thereof, should haue beene driuen for their defence, to haue deliuered some part of those Countries, to the possition of such as would not haue beene remoued without the spending of many millions, and the losse of many thousand mens liues. Of the true cause of this support, her Maiestie is the more willing to make mention, for that she is informed, that notwithstanding her good and sincere meaning in that behalfe, other wrong and sinister interpretations haue beene made of the same, as the like also hath beene done of other her proceedings. Amongst the rest, her Maiestie hath thought it expedient to answere one calumniation contained in a letter fathered on Don John, published in a booke lately set out by the States in their Iustification, by the which her Maiestie is charged to haue encouraged the Prince of Orenge not to stand to the pacification, and withall did for his better encouragement, offer unto him any assistance they could yeld (a matter most slanderous and untrue) for that her Maiestie being given to vnderstand by the Vizcount of Gaunt, sent unto her from Don John, how hee found himselfe grieued with the Prince of Orenge, for that (as he affirmed) the said Prince did not obserue the said pacification, her Maiestie did immediatly dispatch an expresse messenger unto the said Prince: both to charge him with Don Johns accusation, as also to aduise (and that most effectually) to obserue duely the said pacification, vsing towards him some threats, in case he should seeke to violate the same, wherein she could finde no other disposition, but that he was most desirous to keepe all the parts of the said pacification, as the onely meane of the ending of the long ciuill warre. The like aduice did she also giue to the States, receiuing no lesse contentment of the pacification, being ratified first by Don John, and then afterwards by the King, then they to whom the benefit thereof did most properly and peculiarly appertaine. Her Maiesties proceedings and dealings with the Prince and States, hauing beene such as hath beene before alleaged and deduced, she doth appeale to the King himselfe, who she thinketh will truly and fully looke into the truth of the matter, and also to all others that shall not be transported with passion, whether the said proceedings are not to be maintained to be both iust and honourable, whatsoeuer hath beene maliciously given out to the contrary. And herein her Maiestie is persuaded, that hardly any other Prince that hath some wayes beene so unfriendly dealt withall, and found so little account made of her aduises given both to the King and to his Gouernours of those Countries, would haue dealt in such friendly sort as shee hath done: notwithstanding the said difficouragements, her Maiestie thinketh it honourable for her, and meete for the place shee holdeth, being the ancients alike that the Kings progenitours as Dukes of Burgundy haue to continue still her former course, in giuing friendly counsell unto the King, cannot but proceed to the second point aboue mentioned, which is to yeld her aduise, what way, in her opinion, is to be taken for the appeasing of the present troubles, and the continuing of them under his obedience.

First, it is apparant that the pacification is broken, and as great hostility intended on both sides as may be, whereof she is heartily sorrie: the end, if it goe on, will be an utter desolation of the Countries, or the losse or alteration of them from the Kings obedience, for helpe whereof, her Maiestie thinketh the best and expedientest remedies to be, that it would please him to receiue his Subiects to his grace and fauour, that he would permit them to continue in their ancient Liberties and Charters, that hee would command the due and iust execution of the pacification, and that hee would appoint such a Gouernour of his owne blood, as might like him, and be gratefull to them, whereby they with great contentation might yeld to him all due obedience, continue in their Religion, according to his pleasure doe all things accepted in the pacification: which by reason of the great distrust growne on both sides, between Don John and them, can neuer take effect, so long as Don John shall remaine Gouernour, for it seemeth they haue put on a determination, that rather then they will endure the hard dealing which they thinke themselues assured they shall receiue by his gouernement, they will throw themselues into the protection of any other Prince. They charge him with the breach of the pacification, he on the other side offereth to stand to his iustification, charging them with the said breach. Her Maiestie hauing heard the allegations of the Ministers sent hither, both from Don John and the States, meaneth not to be a Iudge betweene them, hauing rather a greater desire to reconcile them if shee could, and to doe them both good, than to discouer the faults and blemishes of either party. To reconcile them she findeth it impossible, and therefore for the stay of the troubles and of those mischiefes that otherwise are like to ensue, the onely way of remedy will be, to make choise of some other tyed to him by proximity of blood, to be substituted vnder him in that gouernment, by which temperate course the troubles may well be appeased, the great effusion of bloud auoyded, and the Countries continued under his obediobediente, which otherwise are like to be alienated from him. If he shall like to follow this advice, the seeth no disposition in the people to change their king, being dutifully minded towards him with intention (in this behalfe they may be reckoned) to innouate nothing, but to maintaine, and duly obserue the late pacification made at Gaunt.

And like as for the contentment of the States and the appeasing of the troubles, the wilbeth Don Iohns reuocation: so considering how euill affected he sheweth himselfe toward her, as well by letters intercepted, as by secret practises and dealings with the Queene of Scots, a matter very dangerous to the good quiet of her State, as the bearer can more amply enforme him touching diuers particularities in this behalfe: shee can not but in respect of the continuance of the good amity, which she wisheth to be between the king and her Maiestie, be the more earnest to pacifie the king therein, looking for no continuance of good amity and good neighbourhood, so long as a Minister so euill affected towards her shall reside there, and being desirous that such Ministers might be employed on both sides, as would desire rather to encrease the amity than to hinder it.

This her aduise tending to none other end, but to preserue those Countries vnder her obedience, and the continuance of good amity betweene them, shee hopeth the king will accept in no lesse friendly part, then it is by her sincerity meant. And in the meane time vntill his minde be knowne in this behalfe, her Maiestie fearing the great forces prepared by Don Iohn, with the assistance of the French already marching towards him, will driue her auncient friends the States of the low Countries, to the one of these two extremities: either to be ouercome by forces, and so endangered to forsaken & confused: or else constrained for the withstanding thereof, to giue themselues ouer to some other Prince, both which cannot but be perillous to the king principally, dangerous to her Maiestie hereafter, and an vtter destruction to the whole Country. Her highnesse therefore for the benefit of the said king, and the auoyding of her owne perill, vpon promises and assurance giuen by the said States, to yeld the king his due obedience, and make no further innouation in matters of Religion, but to obserue the pacification of Gaunt hath promised for the causes and respects aboue mentioned, to yeld them a supply of money and men, onely to stay them from further danger of alienation, or else their ruine.

Which proceedings of hers, if the king shall not be induced to like of, whereby her Maiestie shall discouer, that his intention is by force of Armes to alter and dissolue the auncient forme of gouernment, and by taking away their auncient lawes and liberties, to make it a land of conquest, and to people it with Garrisons of men and warre. And that the end and scope of his intention should tend to that which is discouered by Escouedoes letters, wherein hee writeth, that the enterprize of England is of more facility then the enterprize of the Ilea, whereby her Maiestie shall perceiue the disposition of so ill a neighbour to her and her royall estate, then her Maiesties resolution is to employ all the power, she shall be able to make for the defence of her neighbours, and preseruation of her owne estate.

As on the contrary side, if he shall enclyne to their reasonable demand, in giuing them such a Gouernour as they can better like of, then of Don Iohn, and they notwithstanding shall goe on in disobedience against him, and make other innouations contrary to the promises they haue giuen and professed to her, shee will turne her force against them, and in assistance of the king yeld him the best ayde shee can to bring them to reason and conformity. And in the meane season, vntill shee may be throughly enformed thereof, she hath thought good, for auoyding of effusion of Christian blood, and for many other good necessary respects, to deale both with Don Iohn, and the States for a surceasse of Armes, which if he shall refuse to yeld vnto, and the States shall be willing, because she sorts it manifestly, that it concerneth the kings honour, and profit of his Country, shee will not cease to goe on with like Offices towards them, as shee hath begun. Thereby onely to defend them from forraigne tyrannie, to keepe them in the kings obedience, from alienating themselues to any other Potentate, and to defend her selfe and her Dominions from the perils that there by the sayth manifestly to ensue.

This declaration of Q. Elizabeth was sent to the king of Spaine by Master Wade the 20 of December. Anno 1577.

The 17. day of January, Symon Pembrooke dwelling in Southwarke, being a Fleure slinger, and be hemently suspected to be a Seminer, by commandement of the ordinary Iudge of those parts, appeared in the Parish Church of Saint Saviour, at a Court holden there, which Symon being inclined in entertaining a Papist, and hauing money in his hand, leaned his head vpon a Pewe wherein the Papist stode: which after he had done a certaine space, the Papist began to lift vp his head, to see what he ayled, and found him departing out of life, and straightway the said Simon fell downe rather a little in the throat, and neuer spake word after: this was done euen as the Iudge came into the Church, who said, it was the iust iudgement of God towards those that died Sorcerers, and a great example to admonish other to feare the iustice of God. After his cloathes being opened, there were found about him fiue deuilish books of Coniuration and most abominable practises, with a picture of Tinne of a man hauing three Dice in his hand, with this writing, Chance Dice fortunately, and diuers papers of such like matters, as he had dealt in for men, such as are mentioned in Leuiticus the 20. Chapter, and the 6. verse: If any soule turne himselfe after such as worke with spirits, and after Southsayers, to goe a whoring after them (saith the Lord) I will put my face against that soule, and will cut him off from among my people.

That the new Testament and Gospell of Christ are but meere falshoode, a fable of men, or rather a meere fable.

Item, that man is restored to grace by the meere mercy of God, without the meane of Christs bloud, death and passion.

Item, that Christ is not God, nor the Sauiour of the world, but a meere man, a sinfull man, and an abominable Idoll.

Item, that all they that worship him, are abominable Idolaters: And that Christ did not rise againe from death to life by the power of his Godhead, neither that he did ascend into heauen.

Item, that the holy Ghost is not God, neither that there is any such holy Ghost.

Item, that Baptisme is not necessary in the Church of God, neither the vse of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ. The man bleeding abundantly, the Queenes Maiestie shewed such noble courage, as is most wonderfull to be heard and spoken of, for beholding him so maymed, shee neuer bashed thereat, but bad him be of good cheere, and said, he should want nothing that might be for his ease, &c. For the which fact the said Thomas being apprehended and condemned to death: was on the 21. of July brought to the water side, where was a gibbet set vp, directly placed betweene Dettford and Greenewich, and when the hangman had put the rope about his necke, hee was by the Queenes most gracious pardon deliuered from execution.

Earthquake.

The 6. of Aprill, being Wednesday in Easter weeke, about 6. of the clock towards euening, a sudden earthquake happning in London and all most generally throughout England, caused such amazednes of the people as was wonderfull for that time, & caused them to make their earnest prayers vnto almighty God. The great clocke bell in the palace at Westminster strake of it selfe against the hammer, with thaking, as diuers clocks and bells in the City, and elsewhere did the like: the gentlemen of the Temple being at supper, ran from the tables, & out of their hall, with their knives in their hands, a piece of the Temple Church fell downe, some stones fel from Pauls Church: and at Christs Church in the Sermon while a stone fel from the top of the Church, which killed out of hand one Tho: Grey an apprentice, and another stone also bruised his fellow seruant, named Maior Bremer so that the liued but 4. dayes after: diuers other were sore hurt with running out of the Church, diuers chimnies in the City, part of them fell downe, the houses were so shaken. The earthquake continued, in or about London not passing one minute of an houre, and was no more felt: but Eastward in Kent, and on the sea coast it was felt 3. times: as at Sandwich at 6. of the clocke, the land not only quaked, but the sea so foamed, that the ships tottered. At Douer also at the same houre was the like, so that a piece of the cliffe fell into the sea, with also a piece of the Castle wal there: a piece of Salt-wood Castle in Kent fell downe, and in the Church of Hide, the bells were heard to sound. At piece of Sutton Church in Kent fell downe, the earthquake being there both heard and felt. And in all these places and other in East Kent, the same was felt three times to moue, to wit, at fiue, at nine, and at eleuen of the clocke.

Earthquake in Kent.

This yere were many monstrous births, and strange sights to be seene, which I ouerpasse in this place, for that I haue partly touched them in my Summaries.

Also this yere maister Francis Drake returned into England, hauing sailed round about the world, (as is affirmed) thus it was begun: on the 13. of December, in the yere of Christ 1577. hee set saile from Plimoth with a fleet of fiue ships, (to wit, the Pelicane admiral, the Marigold, the Elizabeth, backe Benedict, and a pinnace) he fel with the cape Canbine, on the coast of Barbary the 25. of the same moneth, & so coasting along, the 27. of December found an Iland called Mogadador, lying one mile distant from the main, in this Iland the general erected a pinnace, which hee had with thee other brought ready framed out of England, which being finished, he departed the last of December. And the 17. of January he arriued at cape Blanke, & left the same on the 22. of that moneth, and on the 27 fell with cape de verde: on the 30. of January, he fel with an Iland called S. Iago, hauing put off cape de verde, in the beginning of February, they saw no more land vntil the 6. of April. 1578. that they fell with the coast of Brasill, in the latitude of 53. degrees beyond the line, and with much adoe, entred the riuer of Plate: from whence departing, hee fell with the strait of Magelan, the 20. of August, and passed through with three ships only, hauing cast off the other two as impediments, where, after they had bin tossed many dayes to and fro, in the night, the first of October the Marigold, wherein Master Iohn Thomas was Captaine, parted from the Generall, and was no more heard of. And shortly after, the other wherein Master Iohn Winter was Captaine parted also, who hauing lost his company came home again through the straites. The golden Hinde (or Pelicane I thinke) held on her course to Chily, Lima, Coquimbo, Arica, Panama, & so all along the backe side of America to the line ward, and passed the line the first day of March, and the 16. of March being on land at the Ile of Canoes, hee passed foorth northward till he came to the latitude of fortie seauen, thinking to haue come that way

And in the yere next following, to wit, 1581. on the 4. of April, her Maiestie dining at Deptford in Kent, after dinner entred the ship which Captaine Drake had so happily guided round about the world, and being there a bridge that her Maiestie had passed ouer brake, being vpon the same more then 200. persons, and no man hurt by the fall, and there shee did make Captaine Drake knight, in the same ship, for reward of his seruice, his armes were giuen him, the world in a ship, which ship by her Maiesties commandement is lodged in a docke at Deptford, for a monument to all posterity of that famous and worthy exploit, whereof a worshipfull Gentleman Master William Borough in his preface to a booke intituled, a discourse of the variation of the compasse, or magneticall needle, hath these words: So now at length (saith he) our countriman Sir Francis Drake, for valorous attempt, prudent proceeding, and fortunate performing his voyage about the world, is not only become equall to any of them that liue, but in fame far surpassing.

considerations the same should bee deferred vntill the two and twentieth day of the same moneth: on the which day the same was most courageously accomplished in the accustomed place at Westminster, where many staues were broken, but through the great concourse of people thither repairing, many of the beholders, as well men as women were soze hurt, some maymed, and some killed by falling of the scaffold ouercharged.

About Hallontide last past, in the marshes of Dunsop Hundred, in a place called Southminster in the Countie of Essex, a strange thing hapned: there suddenly appeared an infinite multitude of mice, which ouerwhelming the whole earth in the said Marshes, did deare and gnaw the grasse by the roots, deuouring and tainting the same with their venemous teeth, in such sort, that the cattell which grazed thereon, were smitten with a murreine, and died thereof, which vermine by policie of man could not bee destroyed, till at the last it came to passe that there flocked together all about the same marshes, such a number of owles, as all the there was able to yeelde: whereby the Marsh-holders were shortly deliuered from the vexation of the said mice, the like of this was also in Kent.

But for as much as their Cinbastle was generally disliked, as well of the peeres, as common people, and being very apt to ſignifie their discontent, Proclamation was made vpon great penaltie, that none of the Queens subiects, should either strike, or draw weapon within foure miles of London, or the Court.

There were performed many stately tropyes, and ingenious deuises with sundry Morryces, all Iustings, Barriers, and Turney, all which were performed by the most illustrious and Noble gallants of the time, that is to say, the Earle of Arundell, Sussex, Leicester, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Windsor, the Lord Sheffield, the Lord Darcy, Sir William Russell, Sir William Cecill, Sir Thomas Cecill, Sir George Cary, Sir William Drury, knights, Henry Gray, Philip Sidney, John Borough, Walther Windsor, Ambrosse Willoughby, Thomas Radcliffe, George Carew, William Knowles, Francis Knowles, Hercules Meyrtife, John Wotton,

These foresaid Lords, being for fiue moneths space entertained, with as great state, and kindnes, as their hearts could wish, and finding no great hope of desired successe in their serious Negotiation: after diuers secret conferences, among themselues, and returne of sundry letters into France, signifying the Queenes declination from marriage, and the peoples vnwillingnesse, to match that way, held it most conuenient, that the Duke should come in proper person, whose presence they thought in such affaires, might preuaile more then all their Oratory: and thereupon, the first of Nouember, the sayd Prince came ouer in Person, very Princely accompanied, and attended, though not in such glorious manner, as were the a- bone named Commissioners, whose entertainment, in all respects was equitalent, vnto his estate and dignity.

By this time, his Picture, State, and Titles, were aduanced in euery Stationers shop, and many other publique places, by the name of Francois of Valois Duke of Alanson, heire apparant of France, and brother to the French king: but he was better knowne by the name of Monsieur, vnto all sorts of people, then by all his other Titles.

During his abode in England, he vsed all Princely meanes to preser his suite, and in his carriage, demeaned himselfe, like a true borne Prince, and the heire of Fraunce: and when he had well obserued the Queenes full determination, to continue a single life, he pacified himselfe, admiring her rare vertues and high perfections.

Whilst the Duke remained yet in England, the confederates of the low countries diligently obserued the successe and inclination of the Duke, and perceiuing his chiefe desire, was increase of present authority, honour, wealth, and dignitie, all which they meant to impose vpon him, so it might please the Queene, and Councell, to stand auspicious to their generall suite, and thereupon in the height of fortunate opportunitie, sent euer their agents, and Commissioners, who found the Queene very forward, to do them any kindnesse: as well to supply their weaknesse, and to ease their imminent misery, and danger, as to gratifie the former kindnes of the Duke, &c.

The Duke liked well of the motion, and after some solicitation and incouragement to be ayded from England, accepted of their proffer, and according to their earnest desire, he would be their protector.

His neere friendes, and followers, were very well pleased with the proiecte, hauing a priuate purpose, to prefer themselues, and their nation.

The Queene in all respects, shewed as great kindnesse vnto the Duke, and all his retinew, at their departure, as at any time before, and for period of her Princely fauours, in that behalfe, that, with great state, accompanied the Duke in person to Canterburie: where she feasted him and all his traine, very Royally, and then returned.

The next day being the first of Februrary, the Duke, with his French Lords and others went to Sandwich, being accompanied with the Earle of Leicester, the Lord Hounsdon, the Lord Charles Howyard, the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Windsore, the Lord Sheffeld, the Lord Thomas Heyward, and the Lord Auydley, Sir George Cary, master John, and master Robert Cary, Sir William Russell, Sir William Drury, and Sir George Bowyer, and George Carew, with diuers other knights, and many Gentlemen of note, and qualitie, besides the particular followers, and attendants of the Earle, hauing in his traine, an hundreth Gentlemen, and 300. others, of inferior nature. The L. Hounsdon had in his traine, 150. the Lord Charles Howyard, had as many, and the Duke with his traine, and the aforesayd English Lords, and others, imbarked at Sandwich, and arriued at Flushing with fifteene sayle: where the Prince of Orenge, with diuers of the States met them and with great signes of gladnesse, entertained them: from thence, they went to Middleborough, from thence, to Antwerpe, and were there entertained, with great State and solemnity. About the nineteenth of Febr. ary, the sayd Francis of Valois, was by the States, created Duke of Anioy, Duke of Lother, Brabant, Limbrough and Gelders, and Marquesse of the sacred Empire, Earle of Flaunders, Hoaand, Zeland, and Vtland, and Prince of the Ioue countrys, with other Titles, and dignities: which solemnitie ended, the English Nobilitie with their traine, returned to England.

The Duke sayle by his French Lords and diuers English Lords embarked them- selues for the low countries.

States and dignities which the States vnpo- sed vpon Monsieur.

Presently after this, withall conuenience, the States, Souldiers, and furniture for warre being in good readinesse, the Duke with great iollity entered into Armes against the forces of the Spanish King, vnder command of the Prince of Parma, and very courageously disualled, and recouered diuers Cities, wonne Alst and Endenan, he draue the Prince of Parma, from the siege of Cambray, and tooke the Citie, and Territories thereof, into his owne possession: hee forced the Spannish faction, vnto sundry extreamities: by meanes whereof, hee became very gracious in the hearts of the people: and hee as politicklie tooke the aduantage of the time: placing French Garrisons in Donkerke, Winerbrogh, Dixmuden, Dermond, Villnord, and in diuers other Townes, and strong Holdes, whereat many of the Dutch, beganne to suspect him, and some sayd openly, surely he meant no faire play, and that the Duke would deale doubly with them, began to thinke, that in short time hee meant to discharge them, with French multitudes: hauing certain inteligence, that Sparhall Byron, was comming to his ayd, with an army of fresh souldiers. Whereupon, their generall telouse encreased: all which notwithstanding, they in all respects, demeaned themselues towards him, with great kindnesse and discretion.

Monsieur groweth malcontent and is earnestly laboured by his friends Coun- sell to attempt some great exployt to aduance the French fac- tion.

The Duke being greatly animated, with his small exploits: and elevated in minde with his soddaine popular applause, began to thinke vpon his high birth, the matchlesse Paiectke of his Royall house: vnto whom the Nobilitie of those Prouinces, had done their homages in times past: and that his present estate, authority, and command, either in Campe, or Citty was but limitation, and pleasure of the States, all which, he held at farre too meane a rate, as either condigne recompence, or part of satisfaction, for the hazard of his highnesse person, and his Noble followers: which opinions, were not onely seconded by his Counsell, but dayly increased by his neere friendes, and fauourites: saying it all became the heire of France toserue, vnder the greatest potentate of the Vniuerse: especially, an inferiour headstrong people, vowed to resist all regall authority, onely to maintaine their subtill Aristocracie: careleste, vpon whose shoulders their burthen rest, so they bee freed from the yoke of due obedience, proposing high termes of honour, and Titles of Paiestie vnto others, which were neuer theirs to giue: and that their pride of wealth, and strength of walled Townes, had made them quite forget their ancient homage, and appearance at the high Court of Parliament in Paris.

Night is therefore pleasse his highnesse, to deuise some speedy exploit, worthie his countries hencur, and his name: either to reduce those Prouinces, vnto the French obedience: or to acquite himselfe, and them, of the worlds deserued scandalous imputation: and it should bee resolutely executed, with hazard of their proper liues: And thereupon the Duke considered of diuers matters: but first concluded to surprise Antwerpe, in manner following.

By this time, Parshall Byron, was come vnto his ayde, with great troupes of French men, and Switchers: of whom the French faction, had promulgated, that when all their forces were arriued, they would not dally out an howres time, but in short space, they would expell the Spaniard, from those Prouinces.

Monsieur practiseth to his purpose by the treason of his great losse, griefe and disgrace.

Vnder which pretext, the French forces, which were newly come, began to take possession, of as many Townes and Sconses, as they could: but Burges and Antwerpe, vtterly refused all French Garrisons: yet nertheless, vpon the seauenth of Ianuary, being the appointed day, about twelue of the clock, when the Citizens were at dinner: the Duke, vnder pretence to muster his army without the Towne, hee caused the gates to bee opened for him, as being vncertaine, thogugh which of them hee would passe, he caused the chaines also, which crossed the stretes to bee let downe, which for some suspition of the Frenchmen which were without the Towne, were locked.

Then hee issued forth with all his Court, and a great number of gallant Gentlemen brauely mounted, many of them being secretly army, and comming to Saint Iames gate there met him at the out side of the bridge, certaine of his companies, of horse and foote: who stayed themselues, on either side the way, making a lane, or lane, to giue passage to the Duke and his followers.

Who being past them, made signall to them with his cap to inuade the Citty.

Whereupon his men sallied the watch, with the Colonell Vicende's, that stood bareheaded, to see the Princesse passe by.

Then they entred the gate, with seuentene Cnsignes of footmen, and fowre Cellonels of horse: the Switchers followed them and the Duke stayed without, crying vnto them, Watch, Parch, the Town is wonne, but spoyle it not: and those within, cried the Citie is wonne, the Citty is wen, &c. and got possession, of both the Bulwarkes, and turned the Ordinance towardes the Citie, and passed through diuerse stretes, almost to the middest of the Citty. The Citizens, for the most part being at dinner, hearing the Alarme, got holde of such weapons, as came next to hand, and with great fury issued forth: some fell charge vpon the French, in diuers Lanes, and stretes: others, with admirable dexterite pulled vp their Chaines, crosse their stretes, and other passages, and at an instant, barred them from going any further: then, they all turned head vpon the Switchers, that were entered the Citie, with exceeding violent shot, in the meane space, the Citizens, that were neere vnto the Gate, let fire their bullets as thicke as haile out of windowes, Leades and Loopholes at the French, and killed a Goose right vnder the gate, which very much impeached them from entraunce, so certain, many of them stumbling at the Goose, fell disorderly vpon heapes, so as one of them speeled another, and stopped the Gate, by reason whereof, all that were entred into the Citie, within lesse then halfe an houres space, were either slayne, or taken prisoners, in which exployte, the Citizens showed meere manly valour, and Martiall resolution, and so farre from femule feare, or disheartning that in the fiere of the fight, when they wanted Leaden Bullets, very aduisedly, and readily, they melted their Pewter Dishes, and Platters, to make Bullettes: and least for more speede, tooke money out of their Purses, and bended it with their teeth, and kept it singing out of their Bullets, and Calluers.

In this short Skirmish, were slaine eight thousand, fiue hundred, and threttie French, and two thousand taken prisoners, amongst which, was the Castle of Vermagen, the Bishoppe of Confluence, and many other Noble personages: amongst the dead, were the Castles of Saint Agnan, and his sonne the Earle of Chatew, Rouze, the Sonne of Marshall Byrone, Monsieur de Saitonal, Governour of Vilnord, and many others of like quality, being vnbarde, the flower of Fraunce.

In this soddaine and vnexpected Danger, the Citizens throwed themselues, most brane and resolute warriours, full of courage, and vngouernd in their Iust defence, without the ayde of any Souldiers.

When the Duke, with the Prince Dolphin, the Earle of Liuall, and others of his Semcell, being without the Towne, and seeing the bad successe, of their power, all amazed, the Duke retired his Campe, vnto Melchaire, and from thence to Dormon, where he was hard be set by Generall Norris, with thirteene companies of Sorties, and English, and from this time, the English were in great estimation with the States, the Duke with great difficultie, losse of men, and want of victuall, in his retreat came to Dinante, and from thence to France, and in his double discontent, seeing his plot discouered, his purpose preuented, his hopes frustrate, many chiefe Gallants of Fraunce his kind friends, and trustie followers slaine, and as many taken prisoners, for whose ransome, hee was willing to doe his vttermost: but not being able, by violence to make rescue, agreed to surrender backe, all such Cities, Holdes, and Castles, as were either deliuered him, or otherwise in possession of the French, which done, all prisoners were released. Presently vpon this, the Spanish faction beganne to take heart of grace, and the Prince of Parma to renue his spirits, and courageously to attempt the siege of Cleues, Dueres, and Gulliers. Against whose desire, the English were the chiefe to giue encounter.

The Duke died the tenth of July, 1583. and it was suppozed, of melancholly. After his death, his mother, vnder pretence of her ioynter right, during her life, kept possession of Cambra, which stand City, and prouince of Cambresis in an Archbishoprike, and a free Earldom, lying betweene Fraunce, Flaunders, and Germany: by reason wherof, it is conuenient for the one of them to be a protector, ouer the rest.

Cambray.

Iust this City, is made the finest lennen, of the name, namely Lawne and Cambreche, and therefore the last takes his name, and the other taken his name, of another City not far off, called Lawne.

And so an historicall conclusion, of the foresaid Duke, and his three brethren, of all which there remained then onely one, to wit, Henrie the third, who was slaine in the yeare 1589. as you may read, and was the last of that house: which house of Valois, hath triumphantly raigned, euer since the Raigne of Lodowick the third, at which time, it was then but an Earledome, and descended from a second brother, was of meere purpose by the French aduanced to the throne, vnder pretences of the Salique law, made by Pharamond, onely to suppresse the immediate right, and title of King Edward the 3. who was descended of the French Kings eldest daughter, and heire: whereby he iustly claimed the Crown of France. Since which time the French had neuer more hope or likelihood, to continue that race, then in these foresayd 4. gallant Princes, who died, and left no lawfull issue behind them.

And sith, I haue vpon occasion spoken somewhat of the house of Valois, and of the entrance of the house of Navarre, I will also for the more delight, speake a word or two, of some of the ancient, and most remarkable Kinges of Fraunce: as I finde them recyted in their owne Chronicles: concerning which, and all the rest of the kings of France, I will in all courtesie, for thy better satisfaction, recommend the vnto the excellent labours, of that worthy Gentleman, our kind countreyman, Master Edward Grimston in his booke called his Generacies of France, &c. It is certaine that, that great entire Kingdome which is now called France, was of old time many Kingdomes for seuerall Lawes, and Languages, of Arion, Aquitaine, Britaigne, and other Prouinces hadde peculiar Kings of their owne, their owne authours also affirme that the French are issued from the Troyans of a Duke called Francion that first inhabyted neere the Cuiph called Cam, or Lame whose offspring afterward vpon certaine discontent left that countrey, and came with their Duke Francion into Germania, where by reuolte vnto Gaul and Austrigis, then they chose Faramond the son of Marc their Duke for their king and became setled in ciuility and obedient vnto peruse lawes, hee ordained foure noble men to be Iudges ouer the people to decide their causes and differences, the making of the Salique Law, is also attributed vnto Faramond, also their writers, as well Parcles as Layamon say, that Dionisius the disciple vnto Saint Denis came into France, and conuerted a great part thereof, which Dionisius they held to their Patron, and in their vsual deuotie of speech they call him Saint Denis Paramond. The seuenth Marc was the first King of France, began his raigne in the yeare after Christ, 421. and raigned 11 yeares, his sonne Clodion succeeded him who also enlarged his Territories, and ordayned that the Frenchmen should weare long haire in signe of Nobleme.

Clotarius

Dagobert the first of that name, and eleuenth King of Fraunce, succeeded his father Clotarius, the second of that name, in the yeare 631. this Day bent in his youth with his owne hands, plucke off the beard of his Schoolemaster, and then whipt him, for which act he greatly feared the displeasure of his father, and for his better meanes of reconciliation, hee gaue his brother Aribert the kingdome of Aquitaine, hee subdued the Gascoynes, which then were Heathen, hee conquered Gascoigne, hee banished a Hermeard Prelate called Saint Arnand, for reproouing him of his extraordinate lust; this King was also effeminatly addicted as Sardanapalus, being accompanied vp and downe with women, euen as the Turke doth now adayes, for he had in his company of wanton women, created Colledges for faire women, causing them to be attired and adorned in great pompe like Queenes, he spoile all the Iewes out of Fraunce that would not be Baptized, hee builded the goodly Church of Saint Dion nere Paris, he tooke much riches from other Churches to adorne that, and withall, hee gaue more land out of his Demaynes, and money vnto Ecclesiasticall vses then any of his predecessours, hee raigned fourteene yeares, his Sonne Clouis succeeded him, in whose time there happened great famine, who in charity to relieue the poore, spent his proper treasure, and therewithall to supply the poores want, hee brake downe the rich ornaments which his Father erected in the Church of Saint Denis, for the which sacrilege some write, that God visited him with frensie, and that hee died mad, hauing raigned fourteene yeares.

Clouis the first King of France that was Christened.

Pipinus alias Pepine the Brefle, began his Raigne ouer Fraunce in the yeare 750. he instituted the Parliament at Paris, he moued the Pope against Astolpho king of Lombards, and besieged him in Pauia, where he was forced to yeeld himselfe, and for confirmation of a lasting peace, Astolpho freely gaue vnto the Pope the exarchat and the signorie of Rauena, he raigned 18. yeares.

Carolus Magnus, alias Charles-Maigne the fourte and twentieth King of Fraunce, after hee had raigned two and thirty yeares, was assumed to the dignitie of Rome, chosen Emperour, by reason of his faithfull forwardnesse, and noble acts which he had done for the generall good of Christendome, hee was annointed in Rome by Pope Leo the third, in the yeare 800. hee was the sonne of Pepin, and the first King of Fraunce, that attributed to himselfe the Stile and Title of the most Christian King of Fraunce, and from him his successors haue continued it, hee gaue the most part of his Empire Eastward, vnto his seconde Sonne Pepin presently, after himselfe was enthronized, when hee had ended his warres in Aquitaine, hee vanquished the Kingdome of Lombardy, and tooke the King prisoner, hee ouercame the Saxons, vpon whom he made warres thirtie yeares, and taught them the Christian faith, he expelled the Sarazens, which had almost ouerd Spaine, he subdued Pannonia, Denmarcke, Bohemia, and Hungaria, vpon whom hee made warres eight yeares, in reuenge whereof, the Hungarians, Danes, and Saxons, in the time of Charles the 4. who began his Raigne in the yeare 870. they with a resolute Armie by sea and land inuaded Fraunce, spoyled Nantes, Angers, Tours, and diuers other places, and had gre[illegible] Battayles against Robert Duke of Aquitaine, and Robert Earle of Angiers, for they were both slain: whereby the Danes, Saxons, or Normanes became so annointed, that they not onely vsurped ouer the French, but also very cruelly repulsed the Duke of Aquitaine, and held their footing in despight of their Enemies. The French said, it was a iust punishment of God vpon them, for the great ambition, pompe, and excessiue pride, wherewith their King was infected, as well in his apparell, as otherwayes: but whether the iustice of their Heathenish people, was for reuenge or punishment, I cannot iudge, but from that time vnto this day, armes of Fraunce are those Normannes, Danes, or Saxons, portrayd, so called Normans by all Nations: the foresayd Charlemaigne erected two famous Vniuersities, the one in Paris, the other in Pauia, and called great learned to be made there, out all Nations, to furnish them with the best learned men in all Sciences, hee called two Councels to be held by the reparing of Churches, and reformation of the state of the Church, hee was renowned for Warre and Magnanimitie, and was called Charles the great, by the same reason that Alexander and Pompey were called great, he raigned King 46. yeares, and was Emperour thirteene yeares, and died of a Feauer at 71. yeares of age, he had three sonnes, viz. Charles, Pepin, and Lewes, which Lewes succeeded him by the name of Lewes the milde. In this Kings dayes liued Iohannes de Temporibus, of whom diuers graue Authors write, that he liued 300. yeares, and was so called, because hee had seene so many alterations of time and state. This Rollo was the first Duke of Normandy.

Clotarius alias Clotaier, the first of that name, and seuenth King of Fraunce, sonne to Childebert, began his raigne in the yeare 560. hee attempted to take away the third part of the Church reuenewes, but the Archbishop of Tours at length dissuaded him from it, saying that God would surely visite him for attempting it, and confound him if hee persisted to rob the poore, and spoyle the Church: his Sonne Chramus rebelled against him, and stirred vp great dissention throughout Fraunce, whom hee ouerthrewe in Battell, and then caused him to be burned with his wife and children for his disobedience: Chramus was strongly backed by his owne Vncle Childeuert, and by his wifes Father the Duke of Aquitaine, and by Chramus the King of Britaine, his other sonne Arybertus alias Childebert succeeded him.

Carolus Magnus, alias Charles-Maigne the fourte and twentieth King of Fraunce, after hee had raigned two and thirty yeares, was by a generall consent of the Clergie and Laytie of Rome, chosen Emperour, by reason of his faithfull forwardnesse, and noble acts which he had done for the generall good of Christendome, hee was annointed in Rome by Pope Leo the third, in the yeare 800. hee was the sonne of Pepin, and the first King of Fraunce, that attributed to himselfe the Stile and Title of the most Christian King of Fraunce, and from him his successors haue continued it, hee gaue the most part of his Empire Eastward, vnto his seconde Sonne Pepin presently, after himselfe was enthronized, when hee had ended his warres in Aquitaine, hee vanquished the Kingdome of Lombardy, and tooke the King prisoner, hee ouercame the Saxons, vpon whom he made warres thirtie yeares, and taught them the Christian faith, he expelled the Sarazens, which had almost ouerd Spaine, he subdued Pannonia, Denmarcke, Bohemia, and Hungaria, vpon whom hee made warres eight yeares, in reuenge whereof, the Hungarians, Danes, and Saxons, in the time of Charles the 4. who began his Raigne in the yeare 870. they with a resolute Armie by sea and land inuaded Fraunce, spoyled Nantes, Angers, Tours, and diuers other places, and had gre[illegible] Battayles against Robert Duke of Aquitaine, and Robert Earle of Angiers, for they were both slain: whereby the Danes, Saxons, or Normanes became so annointed, that they not onely vsurped ouer the French, but also very cruelly repulsed the Duke of Aquitaine, and held their footing in despight of their Enemies. Rioal alias Rollo, sonne to King Richard of Bourgondy, whipped the Crowne of France after Charles the Simple, in the yeare 926.

This Rollo was the first Duke of Normandy.

through the treachery of Herbert Earle of Vermendois taking Charles prisoner, who inuited him to a banquet, and then deliuered him prisoner to Rollo, and caused him before the whole assembly of the Princes and Peeres of France, to diuest himselfe from his Kingdome, and to giue it as a pure gift vnto Rollo: this happened after Lewes had beene taken prisoner in Italy, and had his eyes pluckt out, his wife Gerberga and his sonne Lewes fled for succour into England vnto his Vncle King Adelstane: Rollo seeing the Empire diuided, attempted to obtaine the Imperiall Diadem, he went into Italy, and ouercame Berenger, and vnderstanding of the death of Charles the Simple, her returned into France: the fore-named Lewes was then called out of England, and by the strength of his friends was crowned King of France, in the yeare 928. hee held warres with Rollo for his Kingdome, Rollo and his heires held Normandy, vntill the time of Philip the second: Rollo died in the ninth yeare of the raigne of Lewes. Lewes made warre vpon Otho the Emperour, for the Kingdome of Lorraine, after that hee married the sister of Otho, after that he was taken prisoner by the Normanes, and set at liberty by Otho, hee reigned 37. yeares, by the names of Lewes the fourth.

This Lewes succeeded Otho in the Empire in the yeare 936. he made warre vpon Berengar, and had victory vpon him in the first time, but the second time he was ouercome by Berengar, who was chosen the seuenth person by the Electors.

Philip the second, otherwise called Philip Augustus, sonne to Lewes the younger, succeeded his father, in the yeare 118. He instituted the eschewins in Paris, which Magistrates are like vnto the Aldermen of London, hauing peculiar gouernment ouer their seuerall Precincts or Wards, hee inuironed with walles the most part of Paris, and he edified many other places, he with King Richard of England enterprised a voyage to recouer Jerusalem, after it was yeelded vnto Saladyne, this Philip conquered all Normandy, and Aquitaine, and raigned 43. yeares, his sonne Lewes succeeded him.

Philip surnamed the Faire, began his raigne in the yeare 1285. hee builded the Stately Palace in Paris by the Gate of Flanders, and his two sonnes prisoners, and brought Flanders vnder his subiection, in his time Pope Clement the 5. was consecrated at Lions, and then the Papall seate was transferred from Rome to Auignon in France, and remained there seuenty yeares, during which translation, there were three Cardinals sent to gouerne Italy, in this Kings time, the Hospitlers of S. Iohn of Ierusalem surprised the Ile of Rhodes, and expelled the Turkes, and in the generall Councell of Vienna, the Knights of the Temple were wholly suppreſt, of whom, and of the Knights of Rhodes, and Malta, I haue said sufficiently in my abridgement, after this foresaid Philip the Faire, Lewes Hutin succeeded, and after him succeeded his brother Philip the tall, so called because of his stature, whom amongst other their nicknames, which they vsually bestow vpon their Kings, they might as well haue called him Philip the vnfortunate, for he was ill beloued, both of the Clergy and Laity, as he could neuer obtaine of them either subsidies, loanes, tribute, or impost: in his time certaine diseased Leprous persons, by instigation of the Iewes, poysoned many Wells in France, whereof ensued a great pestilence, and death of people, but the offenders were seuerely punished: and thus much by the way concerning some of the auncient Kings of France, whom their owne Historians haue held most remarkable.

The 21. of June in the night, certaine young men, drawing ropes thwart the streete, on both sides the Croſſe in Cheape, to stop the passage, did then fasten ropes about the lowest Images of the said Croſſe, attempting by force to haue plucked them downe, which when they could not doe, they plucked the picture of Christ out of his mothers lap, whereon he sate, and otherwise defaced her, and the other Images by striking off their armes. Whereupon proclamation was made, that who so would bewray the doers, should haue forty Crownes. But nothing came to light, for euery one of them kept others Counsell, till their dying daies.

Croſſe in Cheape defaced.

Thomas Mather Brewer (for that hee and others of the 27. of June, had congregated themselues in West Smithfield of London, and in other places, in manner of rebellion) was on the thirty of June whipped from Newgate to West Smithfield, and was there reserued, taken from the Cartes, and sent away to Guilford himselfe: for the which fact on the 21. of July, other foure, to wit, three Shoomakers and a Brewer, were whipped from Newgate to the middeſt of West Smithfield, and there set on the Pulloy, wherein they did stand ten the twelue of the clocke.

through the treachery of Herbert Earle of Vermandois taking Charles prisoner, who inuited him to a banquet, and then deliuered him prisoner to Rollo, and caused him before the whole assembly of the Princes and Peeres of France, to diuest himselfe from his Kingdome: and to giue it as a pure gift vnto Rollo: this happened after Lewes had beene taken prisoner in Italy, and had his eyes pluckt out, his vaine ... and his sonne Lewes fled for succour into England vnto his Vncle King Adelstone: Rollo seeing the Empire diuided, attempted to obtaine the Imperiall Diadem, he went into Italy, and ouercame strenger, and vnderstanding of the death of Charles the Simple, hee returned into France: the fore-named Lewes was then called out of England, and by the strength of his friends was crowned King of France, in the yeare 928. hee held warres with Rollo for his kingdome, Rollo and his heires held Normandy, vntill the time of Philip the second: Rollo liued in the ninth yeare of the raigne of Lewes, Lewes made warre vpon Otho the Emperour, for the Kingdome of Lorraigne, after that hee married the sister of Otho, after that he was taken prisoner by the Normanes, and set at liberty by Otho, hee reigned 27. yeares, by the names of Lewes the fourth.

Philip the second, otherwise called Philip Augustus, sonne to Lewes the younger, succeeded his Father, in the yeare 118. He instituted the eschoynes in Paris, which Magistrates are like vnto the Aldermen of London, hauing peculiar gouernment ouer their seuerall Precinctes or Wards, hee inuironed with walles the most part of Paris, and re-edified many other places, he with King Richard of England enterprised a voyage to recouer Jerusalem, before it was yeelded vnto Saladyne, this Philip conquered all Normandy, and Aquitaine, and raigned 42. yeares, his sonne Lewes succeeded him.

Philip surnamed the faire, began his raigne in the yeare 1285. hee builded the stately Palace at Paris by the Gate of Flanders, and tooke two Earles prisoners, and brought Flanders vnder his subiection, in his time Pope Clement the 5. was consecrated at Lions, and then the Papall seate was transferred from Rome to Auignon in France, and remained there seuenty yeares, during which translation, there were three Cardinals sent to gouerne Italy, in this Kings time, the Hospitlers of Saint Iohn conquered the Ile of Rhodes, and expelled the Turkes, and in the generall Counsell of Vienna, the Knights of the Temple were wholy suppreſt, of whom, and of the Knights of Rhodes, and Malta, I haue said sufficiently in my abridgement, after this foresaid Philip the faire, Lewes Hutin succeeded, and after him succeeded his brother Philip the tall, so called because of his stature, whom amongst other their nick-names, which they vsually bestow vpon their Kings, they might as well haue called him Philip the vnfortunate, for he was so ill beloued, both of the Clergy and Laity, as he could neuer obtaine of them either subsidies, loanes, tribute, or impoſt: in his time certaine diseased Leprous persons, by instigation of the Iewes, poysoned many Wells in France, whereof ensued a great pestilence, and death of people, but the offenders were seuerely punished: and thus much by the way concerning some of the ancient Kings of France, whom their owne Hiſtorians haue held meet remarkable.

The 21. of June in the night, certainety vnknowen men, drawing ropes thwart the ſtreete, on both sides the Croſſe in Cheape, to ſtop the passage, did then fasten ropes about the lowest Images of the said Croſſe, attempting by force to haue pluckt them downe, which when they could not doe, they plucked the picture of Christ out of his mothers lap, wherein he sate, and otherwise defaced her, and the other Images by striking off their armes. Whereupon proclamation was made, that who so would bewray the doers, should haue fortty Crownes. But nothing came to light, for euery one of them kept others Counsell, till their dying dayes.

Thomas Archer Brewer (for that hee and others on the 27. of June, had congregated themselues in West Smithfield of London, and in other places, in manner of rebellion) was on the thirty of June whipped from Newgate to West Smithfield, and was there reſcued, taken from the Bedles, and sent away to ſhift for himselfe: for the which fact on the 21. of July, other foure, to wit, three Shermakers and a Brewer, were whipped from Newgate to the middeſt of West Smithfield, and there ſet on the Pillory, whereon they had ſtoode ten full tweine of the clocke.

The woman also lay dead ouer the pan, so that her armes were burnt with the neather part of her body before to the breast, and behind to the shoulders, and nothing else in the chamber burnt but the bottome of the settle wherein Brunter sate, Mary Breame had beene accused by her husband to bee a nice woman of her body but her husband being a bad man, and hauing spent faire and large possessions, and all whatsoeuer, hauing but two pence left in his purse, hang himselfe on a tree, against a stone wall at Spartin abbey in Surrey about Whitsuntide, an Anno. 1582. Players.

Comedians and Stage players, of former time were very poore and ignorant, in respect of these of this time, but being now growne very skilfull and exquisite Actors for all matters, they were entertained into the seruice of diuers great Lords, out of which Companies, there were twelue of the best chosen, and at the request of Sir Francis Walsingham, they were sworne the Queenes seruants, and were allowed Wages, and Liueries, as Grooms of the Chamber: and vntill this yeare 1583. the Queene had no Players: amongst these twelue Players, were two rare men, viz. Thomas Wilson for a quicke delicate refined extemporall wit, and Richard Tarleton for a wondrous plentifull pleasant extemporall wit, hee was the wonder of his time: he lieth buried in Shoreditch Church.

About this time Iohn Sommervill, a furious young man of Elstow in Warwickshire, of late discouered and taken in his way, comming with full intent to kill the Queenes Maiestie (whom God long prosper to reigne ouer vs) confessed the treason, and that he was moued thereunto in his wicked spirit, by certaine trayterous persons: his kinsmen and allies, and also by often reading of certaine seditious bookes lately published, for the which the said Somervill, Edward Arden a squire in Parkhall in Warwickshire, Mary Arden his wife (father and mother in law to the said Somervill,) and Hugh Hall Priest, being with other before indicted at Warwicke, were on the 16. of December arraigned in the Guildhal of London, where they were found guilty and condemned of high treason. The second siege of Antwerp by the Spaniardes.

Pride not onely the first originall sinne in the world, and first fall of man, but the dotonfall of Lucifer, and his adherents, before the worlds creation, whose misery by his proper merits, euer since his banishment from the glorious presence of his maker, hath lyen in himselfe and all his ministers inuetorate enuy, at mans eternall felicitie, as euidently appeareth in the 3. of Genesis, by his subtill solicitation of Eua, vnto pride of knowledge. For which transgression her selfe, her husband, and their heires, were forthwith excluded the heauenly Paradise, and from that time the sinne of man encreased still, and in pride of heart, and hand, ouer-ruled the earth: for which the whole world was drowned. eight persons onely excepted, whose encrease grew no sooner to any greatnesse, but presently presumed to aspire the clouds, and ouerlooke the Architect of heauen: and for that attempt, God ouerthrew proud Nimrods lofty Tower, and sent confusion of their vaine speech. After that, as in the 7. of Daniel you may read concerning the foure-fold Monarchies, which were then to come, whose seuerall pride, did their seuerall states confound: the last whereof being larger, and more learned then the rest, stood longer then any of the three precedent, whose high authority, gaue warrant to the head-strong Iewes, to Crucifie the Sauiour of the world, hauing, as they thought, conuicted him of high Treason, before the Romane Tetrarch, where they renounced all their auncient Regall state, and rule, disdaining to acknowledge the true immediate right, of honor, and of loue, due to their Messias, meekely standing in the middell amongst them, being come in person, according to diuine promise made by God, vnto the Patriarkes, and in fulnesse of time, as was foretolde them, by their well knowne Prophets: yet they in pride of Romes authority, and scope of his humilitie, forsooke their euerlasting obliged allegeance, and with one consent, cryed, Crucifie that Christ, his blud bee vpon vs, and vpon our Children: For wee haue no king but Cæsar, &c. After this trayterous deed, the Iewes recald to mind, their ancient peculiar priuiledge, and prerogatiue, and by deuice acquitted themselues, from the imperiall gouernment, and then forthwith fortified their Cities, in farre stronger manner, then at any time before, especially Ierusalem: whereunto they added a seuen-fold fortitude, by making three walles of wonderous strength, and matchlesse defence, keeping therein continuall Garrison, of most valiant and expert Souldiers, and plenteously furnished it with victuall, and all manner of munition, so as they held themselues free, and secure, from all hazard of hostilitie, and became resolute in their wonted errors, and misbeleefe. Pride, and other temporall enemities, triumphing in their imaginary habilitie, &c. Whilst they thus lulled themselues in securitie, it pleased God to call to remembrance their offences, with the sinnes of their fore-fathers, who wilhed the blood of Christ might fal vpon them, and their children. And about 40. yeares after his glorious Ascension, Titus the Romane generall, with a mighty hoste, subdued the Country, and besieged that great City, the inhabitants whereof, besides their daily fight, for seuen yeares space, endured extreame misery, of famine, and ciuill discord. And when the Romanes had won that state, there was as many Iewes sold for a peece of Romane coyne, as there was peeces of plate giuen to betray Christ: besides their vtter extirpation vnto this day. And as this auncient famous Citie, in her greatnesse fell through pride: and since that time, the last great Monarchie of Rome it selfe, as did the rest, when they thought least of a mischefe: Euen so likewise it happened, this present yeare, 1584. vnto the flourishing Citie of Antwerpe, after it had bene subdued, and reduced vnto former obedience, by the Regent of Parma, in the yeare 1567. and after that by their politick practise, hauing freed themselues for diuers yeeres, from all their forraine seruitude, and Spaynes gouernment, and being now growne the brauest, and wealthiest Citie in this part of the world, and greatest in comerce: which said generall comerce was formerly kept at Burges, and remooued thence to Antwerpe, by reason it standeth vpon a goodly riuer, more commodious, and indifferent for all nations: this stately City, was within an hundreth yeares past, but a poore fisher Towne, though now the only rich, and beauteous Citie of the West, whose inhabitants like her selfe, bigge swolne with pride: her Merchants boasting of their mightie wealth, would prowdly, wagers lay amongst themselues, who should driue the greatest heape of coyne. This Cittie, and these men for their owne security, and enioying of their abundant store, desirous to shake off all Regall authoritie, surfetting in their owne loosenesse, hauing now at all liberte within themselues, began to furnish, and to fortifie in as ample manner, as did the Iewes, omitting nothing auayleable for their defence: as well by defacing the Kings forts and Castles, as by building new forts and bulwarks, besides their store of ships, and strength by sea, and assurance of ayde, from diuers prouinces, their vowed confederates: they still perfited farms dread of enemies, vntill the death of their most Noble and prudent Protector, William of Nassa, Prince of Orenge, lately slaine by Iohn Iaurigny. Whereupon the Duke of Parma, with eleuen thousand footmen, and three thousand horse, besieged it, and made a bridge ouer the Scheld, Ierusalem destroyed, as our Sauiour foretold in the Gospel.

in manner following. The Duke being Lord of the field, planted his forces round on the land side, whereat the City gaue small regard, being plentifully relieued by the riuer from Holland, Zeland, and other places. The Duke in his former obseruation, and present iudgement, beheld all his endeauors loll, except he could speedily stop the riuer, and preuent all succour by water, and thereupon, after he had strongly fortified, vpon either side the Scheld, being in distance about three English myles, downeward towardes the Sea from Antwerpe, he fired pyles, and postes, into the ground, as farre as the water would permit, and then placed two and thirty barge hoyes, side by side, double chayned, and planched together, and moored fast with double Anchors at either side, and in euery of them, a great peece of Ordinance, both in proa, and poope, with thirty stout soulgiers appointed to euery Hoy, who for their most security against all attempts, layd great fyrre mattes thwart the riuer, being likewise fast moored, about ten yardes distant from either side the Bridge, to preuent all sudden approach of daunger: this Bridge was made to open at pleasure, and giue free passage vnto whom they listed, and presently to shut againe, the Duke with much adoe finished this worke in October, 1584.

Note. A bridge almost nine hundred yards long.

When the Citizens saw, that the Duke had brought his purpole vnto desired effect, and pestred them of all succors, then the effeminate Merchants, exercised armes with martiall discipline, and dayly issued forth vpon the face of the enemie, vntill diuers hundreds of their number, by often skirmishing were diminished, and then practised sundry ingenious stratagems to regaine their former ayde, and intercourse by water, viz. they sent fiue great ships, with full sayle, and strength of wind and tyde, to ream the bridge, but they failed, then they made diuers great drifes vnder water, thinking by violence of the streame, to beare away the Bridge, which tooke as little effect as the former. After that, they sent diuers ships well stored with powder, couered ouer with broken stones, pieces of timber, and iron, hauing in euery of them, a proportion of match lighted, which of it selfe should giue fire, within short space after their comming to the bridge, being carefully guided downe the streame, vntill they came within shot of the enemie: of all these deuices, one only to his effect, which slew eight hundred common soulgiers, with the Viscount of Gaunt, and blew downe the Duke of Parmas himselfe: some of the former deuices, with others, tending all to one purpose, were sometimes discerned, and the bridge opened to giue them passage: but their last deuice, of greatest hope, was a great vessell, wherein was layd a beue three thousand weight of gun-powder, and ouer the same, was layd all manner of great stones, as great stones, mill-stones, barres of iron, and peeces of Ordinance, all which were arched ouer by Masons art, to encrease the violence, and when it came towardes the enemie, Sir Rowland Yorke, being then vice-admirall espyed the Hoate, and very resolutely boorded it, tooke out the Match, and anchored it. This was one of the three great engines made by the Citizens, which they termed, Fin de la guerre, Rompula Tout, and the Caga fuego, who now perceiuing, that not onely all their former plots, colles and deuices, were frustrate, and vnfortunate, but also desperate, of any further meanes for their relefe: hauing by this time spent most of their wealth, and endured great famine, and that now their beauteous daughters, and daintie dames, would gladly sell their costly gai lands, in exchange of cozonets, to buy them bread, which in their wonted wantonnesse they knew not how to weare, so as the best and wealthiest, for want of food and liberty, became tayne suppliants with the multitude, praying their gouernour to make some speedie and honourable composition with Spaines generall, which done, the Citie was payded to the Duke of Parma, the 7. of August, one thousand fiue hundred eighty fiue.

The daughters of Antwerp now fain to weare garlands of gold curiously wrought pleasantwise, ameled and very richly set with precious stones, which garlands they dayly wore in the time of famine.

The 12. of Nouember the Queenes Maiesty (returning after her Progresse) came to her Palace of Saint James, where the Citizens of London, to the number of 200. the grauest sort in coates of Velues, and chaines of gold on horse backe, and 1000. of the companies on foote, hauing with them 1000. men with torches ready there to giue light on euery side, for that the night drew on, receiued and welcomed her. And on the 24. day of the same moneth her Maiesty and the Lords rode to the Parliament, which was that day begun at Westminster.

William Parry arreated.

The second day of March, William Parry, was drawne from the Tower, through the City of London to Westminster, and there in the Pallace Court, hanged, bowelled, and quartered for high Treason, as may appeare by a booke extant, intituled a true and playne declaration of the horrible Treasons, practised by William Parry, &c.

This yere Sir Walter Mildmay Knight, Chancelor of the Exchequer, and one of her Maiesties Priuy Councell, founded a Colledge in the Vniuersity of Cambridge, vpon the house, and ground of the late frier preachers Dominikes, or blacke fryers, in the preachers street, and named it Emanuell Colledge.

Emanuell Colledge.

The nine and twentieth of March, the Parliament was dissolued, at the breaking vp whereof, the Queenes Maiestie made an Oration in Parliament. the Parliament house, to such effect as followeth. My Lords and ye of the lower house, my silence must not minish the owner so much, as to suppose a substitute sufficient to render you the thankes, that my heart yeeldeth you: not so much for the safe keeping of my life (for which your care appeareth so manifest) as for the neglecting your priuate future perill, not regarding other way then my present state, no Prince herein (I confesse) can be forced, or rather bound then I am, with the like of your good will, and can for that but yeld a heart and head to seeke for euer all your best: yet one matter toucheth me so neere, as I may not ouer slip: Religion, the ground on which all other matters ought to take roote, and being corrupted may mar all the tree: and that there be some fault-finders with the order of the clergie, which I may make a slander to my selfe and the Church, whose ouer-looker God hath made me, whose negligence cannot be excused, if any schismes or errours heretofore haue suffered. Thus much I must say, that some faults are negligences may grow and be (as in all other great charges it happeneth) and what vocation without all which if you my Lords of the clergie doe not amend, I mind to depose you, looke you therefore well to your charges, thus may they be amended without hazarde or open exclamation. I am supposed to haue many kindes, but most Philosophical: I must yeeld this to be true, that I suppose few (that be no professors) haue read more. And I need not tell you, that I am so simple that I vnderstand not, nor so forgetfull, that I remember not, and yet amongst my many volumes, I hope Gods booke hath not beene my schoolemaster, in which we find that, which by reason (for my part) wee ought to beleeue, that saing so great wickednes and griefs in the world, in which we liue but as way-faring pilgrimes, we must suppose that God would neuer haue made vs, but for a better place, and of more comfort then we find here. I know no creature that breatheth, whose life standeth hourely in more perill for it then mine owne, who entred not into my state without sight of manifold dangers of life, and Crowne, as one that had the mightiest and greatest to inuattle with. Then it followeth, that I regarded it so much, as I left my selfe behind my care. And so you see, that you wrong mee too much (if any such there bee) as doubt my coldnes in that behalfe: for if I were not not perswaded that mine were the trueth of Gods wil: God forbid I should liue to prescribe it to you. Take heed lest Ecclesiastes say not too true: they that feare the hoary frost, the snow shall fall vpon them. I see many ouer-bold with God almighty, making to many subtill framings of his blessed wil, as Lawyers do with humane Testaments: the presumption is so great, as I may not suffer it (yet mind I not hereby to animate Romanists, which what aduersaries they be to mine estate, is sufficiently knowne) nor tollerate new fangledones. I meane to guide them both by Gods true rule: in both parts be perils, and of the latter, I must pronounce them dangerous to a Kingly rule, to haue euery man according to his owne censure, to make a dome of the validity and puissre of his Princes gouernement, with a common baile and corner of Gods word, whose followers must not be iudged but by priuate mens exposition. God defend you from such a ruler, that so euill would guide you. Now I conclude, that your loue and care neither is nor shall bee bestowed vpon a carelesse Prince, but such as for your good will paieth as little for this world, as who saieth least, with thankes for your free Subsidy: I manifest shew of the abundance of your good wiles, the which I assure you, but to bee employed to your weale, I could bee better pleased to returne then receiue. Thus much her Maiesties Oration. In this Parliament a subsidie of two shillings eight pence goods, and 4. s. Lands was granted, and two fifteanes by the laitie.

In the moneth of Aprill, about the 14. day by commandement of her Maiestie, the citizens of London, appointed out of their companies of the same City, to the number of 4000 men with armour, ensignes, drums, fifes, and other furniture for the wars, the greater part whereof were shot, the other were pikes, and halberts, in faire coasts: all those to be trained vp vnder expert Captaines, with Sergeants of the bands, viuters, and other necessary officers, mustered, and skirmished day by at the Miles end, and in Saint Georges field: and on the 18. of May (hauing ouer night set forward out of S. Georges field) muttered in the parke at Greenwich, and skirmished before the Queenes Maiestie, who gaue to them great thankes, for their actuitie and paines.

The Londes men trayned by with shot.

At this time, Phillip Earle of Arundell attempted to haue passed the seas without licence for the which he was committed to the Tower, the 25. of Aprill, 1585. what the cause might be that moued this Noble man to flie the realm, being best knowne to himselfe, I refer you to a letter of his owne hand, written vnto the Queenes Maiestie, which hee left behind him; the coppie whereof followeth.

The Earle of Arundell committed to the Tower.

May it please your most excellent Maiestie, as the displeasure of a Prince is a heauier burden to beare, then the hard conceit of a meaner and inferiour person: so it is not lawfull for any sclesse conuenient for them to settle an opinion of mislike before either there appeare some cause sufficient to procure it, or there be a fault committed worthy to deserue it. I speake not this that I doubt of your Maiesties gracious disposition, or that I feare you will condemne me without mit and euident proofe (for I know it agreeth with the honour of your estate, and I can witnesse it hath beene the manner of your proceedings, to know the cause, before you giue the censure, and to heare the matter before you condemne the person) but I speake with humilitie, that I may receiue this fauourable and indifferent dealing, at your Maiesties hander, because, as I am most desirous to conserue your gracious and good opinion, so I am most earnest to remoue all imp edments, that may hinder or withdraw the same: and besides for that many actions at the first shew, may seeme to be rash and headdied, which after ripe and sufficient consideration of the cause, doe appeare to be wil and necessary. I most humbly beseech your most excellent Maiestie, to vouchsafe but the reading of this simple writing. I in allowing me this (which is no more then your Maiesties place both require you to follow vppon your meanest subiects, and the graciousnesse of your nature, hath alwaies moued you to grant vnto euery sutor) your Maiestie shall do a thing which is pleasing in the sight of God, and honorable in the eyes of the world, you shall take a course which is worthy of your selfe and do that iustice which appertaineth to your estate: to be short, I doubt not by this meanes both your Maiestie shall rest satisfied, in seeing the true and full defence of my dealing, and I remaine happie, being deliuered from all feare and suspect of your displeasure.

And because the course of my former life may in some part expresse the reasons of my present fact, I will humbly beseech your Maiestie, that with fauour I may put you in remembrance, how since my first comming to the Court, which is 9. or 10. yeares past at the least, it hath beene my chiefest care to please your Maiestie, and my greatest desire to performe that which I thought might most content you, how I haue beene alwaies ready, and euer willing to doe you that seruice which either duty required at my hands or the ample state of mine abilitie would permit, your Maiestie best knoweth, and for proofe thereof, I will appeale to none other iudge, then your selfe, though I could iustly call a great part of your Realm, to be a witnesse hereunto: and so hapy was I before some yeares, in that it pleased your Maiestie to accept my seruice in gracious part, and to conceiue a fauourable opinion of al mine actions, as I accounted my labors which I take a comfort, I made my selfe a stranger to mine owne house, to be a continuall waiter vppon your Maiestie, and liked to liue in any sort at the Court, rather then in the best manner at home, for I thought my selfe happiest, when I was nearest to your Maiestie, and my time best imployed, where I bestowed it in doing of your seruice: but at the last, whether the malice of mine aduersaries, by reason of your Maiesties good countenance towardes mee, did begin to bee greater then it was, or the credit which your Maiestie for my misliap did grow to be more then in times past it had bene, I know not, but I found by little and a little your good opinion declined and your favour, as I thought, somewhat strange from me: I heard from time to time, how your Majestie tooke exception of many of my actions, and how it pleased you sayly in your speeches to bewray an hard and euill opinion of mee: I saw that such as you euermore hated in your heart, and those which before you had not fauored, did win your Majesties good countenance, which till that time they could by no meanes obtaine, and besides that received protection and assistance from your Majestie in all their actions against mee, yea oftly after they had offered me wrong and were become mine aduersaries. Notwithstanding all this, I knowing my conscience to be cleare, came at conuenient times to doe my duties to your Majestie, and though it pleased you at some times to talke with mee: yet your Majestie neuer charged me with the least fault or offence done you, and those aduersaries of mine, which did broile behind my backe, durst neuer accuse me nor once open their mouthes to my face, so that I accounted my hap very ill that I was wrongfully accused, but much worse because at no time I was openly charged, whereby I might haue had a iust accusation, both to haue shewed mine innocency, and to haue satisfied your Majesties suspition: for first seeing your Majestie to countenance my aduersaries who seeke of purpose to disgrace mee, and that you would not many times in their presence vouchsafe so much as once to lend your eyes to the place where I stoode. Secondly, I finding them encouraged to mine vtmost many wayes, by the helpe of your fauour, my selfe being vnable to helpe my selfe any waye, by reason of your displeasure: Lastly perceiuing by your Majesties open disgrace, which all men did note, and by your bitter speeches which vext mee not a little, that I was generally accounted, nay that I was in a manner pointed at as one whom your Majestie did disdaine, and meete disgrace, and as a person whom you did deadly hate, and especially dislike, I knew this smoake did bewray a fire, and I saw these clouds did foretell a storme, and therefore prepared my selfe with patience to endure whatsoeuer was: it was the will of God, by meanes of your Majesties indignation to lay vpon mee, being assured that my faults towardes you were none, though mine offences towardes other were many: and thus hauing resolued my selfe to endure whatsoeuer should happen, I continued some moneths in this deepe disgrace, without either knowing what was the ground of your Majesties displeasure, or hearing what should be the ende of mine owne misfortune: till at last I was called at your Majesties commandement before your Councell at two sundry times, where many things were obiected against me, and some of them such trifles, as they were ridiculous, others of them could not bee iustified: and yet notwithstanding that mine innocency did so euidently appeare, by mine answeres, as my greatest enemies could not reprooue me of the smallest offence, or vnduitifulnesse to your Majestie, I was commanded to keepe my house: wherefore I saw it was resolued by the course of this dealing, that how cleare or manifest soeuer mine innocencie was, mine aduersaries should receiue the triumph of the victorie, in hauing what they would: I saw the disgrace of mine owne misfortune, in enduring that which no way I had deserued, and mine enemies to maintaine their doing by some colourable shew, seeing they could not iustifie their actions by any sufficient proofe, procured your Majestie to send some of your Councell, foure dayes after my restraint to examine mee of new matters, which were of greater weight and importance, but as my answeres as the former: and I do charged my selfe as cleerely as of the other before mentioned, so as mine innocency did more plainly appeare, although my restraint did continue, for after this which was my last examination, I remained in the same state fiftene weekes at the least, no man charging me with the least offence, nor my conscience being able to accuse mee of the smallest fault, and at the last when either mine enemies could not for shame longer continue in their vnreasonable proceedings, or that your Majestie was informed by some of my friends, that I had too long endured this punishment, I was restored to my former liberty, without hearing any iust cause of your Majesties hard conceipt, or of no good colour, why I was committed, or but the shadowe of a fault which I might bee touched withy: wherefore after I had safely escaped those stormes, and when I was cleerely deliuered from all my troubles, I began to call to remembrance the heauy sentence which had lighted vpon these 30. of mine aduersaries, which immediatly went before mee. The first being my great grandfather, who was of free birth all supition, and shew of any fault, as because they had no colour or matter to bring him to his answere, they attainted him by act of Parliament, without euer challenging him to his answere. The second being my Grandfather, as beeing of his truth, and condemned for such trifle, as amazed the standers by at that time, and it is ridiculous at this time to heare the same: now, he was to faultlesse in all respects, as the Earle of Southampton then was being one of his greatest enemies, fearing lest his innocencie would bee a meane to saue his life, told sir Christ pher Hay (as being one of his Jury before hand, that though he saw no other matter weighty inough to condemne him, yet there were sufficient reason to make him say guiltie, for that he was an vnmeete man to liue in a Common wealth. The last being my Father, was arraigned according to the Law, and condemned by his peeres. God forbid I should thinke, but that his tryers did that whereunto their consciences did lead them, and yet gaue mee leaue, I must heartily beseech your Majestie, to say thus much, that how euer he might bee vnwittingly or vnwillingly drawne into greater danger then himselfe did either see or imagine: yet all his actions did plainly plainly declare, and his greatest enemies must of necessity confesse, that he neuer carried any disloyall minde to your Majestie, nor intended any vnduitfull act to his Country: and when I had in this sort both fully and throughly considered the fortune of those three which were past, I called to minde my owne danger which was present, and did thinke it impossible by the ayde of this rough beginning, but I might as well follow them in their fortune, as I haue succeeded them in their place: for I considered in the greatnesse of mine enemies power, to ouerthrow mee, in the weakenesse of my selfe, no ability to defend mee. I perceiued in my late trouble, how narrowly my life was sought, and how easily your Majestie was drawne to a iniurious and hard opinion of mine honest loyes, and by my passed dangers how mine innocencie was no sufficient warrant to protect my selfe: I knew my selfe, and besides was charged by your Councell to bee of that Religion which they accounted odious and dangerous to your estate. Lastly, but principally I weighed, in what miserable and doubtfull case my estate had remained, if that my life had not beene taken, as it was, not vnlikely by former troubles: for I protest the greatest burden that rested in my conscience at that time, was because I had not liued according to the prescript rule of that which I vndoubtedly beleeue, and assuredly doe presume my selfe to be in the truth. Wherefore being somewhat induced by all these reasons, but chiefely moued by this last argument, I thought that the best performing of my duty towards God, in such sort as I knew would please him best, might be a principall occasion of my late punishment, and therefore resolued whiles I had opportunity, to take the course which might be sure to saue my selfe from the danger of shipwracke, although my body were subiect to the perill of misfortune: and euer since the time, I followed and pursued this good intent of mine, though I perceiued some, what more danger to mine estate, yet I humbly thanke God I haue found a great deale more quietnesse in my minde: and in that respect I haue iust occasion to esteeme my passed troubles as my greatest felicity, for both of them were (though indirectly) the meanes to leade mee to that course, which euer hetherto hath perfect quietnesse, and onely procureth eternall happinesse: and being resolued rather to endure my punishment, then willingly to decline from the beginning I had begun, I did bend my selfe wholly as neere as I could to continue in the same, without any act which was repugnant to my faith, and profession: and by meanes heereof, was compelled to doe many things, which might procure perill to my selfe, and be an occasion of mislike to your Majestie. For the first day of this Parliament, when your Majestie with all your Nobility, was hearing of a Sermon, in the Cathedrall Church of Westminster aboue in the Chancell, I was driuen to walke by my selfe, belowe in one of the Iles: and one day this last Lent, when your Majestie was hearing another Sermon in the Chappell at Greenwich, I was forced to stay that while aboue in the presence Chamber: to be short, when your Majestie went vpon Sunday or Holyday, to your great Closet, I was forced either to stay in the privy Chamber, and not to waite vpon you at all, or else presently to depart as soone as I had brought you to the Chappell. These things with many more I could by no meanes escape, but only by an open plaine discovery of my selfe, in the eye and opinion of all men, as the true cause of my refuse: all could no longer be hidden, although for a while it were not generally noted and obserued: wherefore since I saw it of necessity, it must shortly be discouered, and withall remembred, what a watchfull and iealous eye was carried ouer all those which were knowne to be Recusants, and therewithall calling to minde how all their lodgings were continually searched, and to how great danger they were subiect, if a Iesuite, or a Seminary Priest were found within their houses: I began to consider, that either I could not serue God in such sort as I had professed, or else I must incurre the hazard of greater punishment, then I was willing to endure: I made resolute and vnremoueable to continue in the first, though it were with danger of life, and therefore did ayde I my minde, to deuise what meanes I could, for auoyding of the last: long I was debating with my selfe what course to take, for when I considered, in what continuall danger I did remaine here in England, both by the lawes heeretofore established, and by a new act lately made, I did thinke it the safest, was to depart out of this Realme, and abide in some other place, where I might liue without danger of my conscience, without offence to your Majestie, without this seruile subiection to mine enemies: and without this daily perill to my life, and yet I was drawne by such forcible perswasions to be of another opinion, as I could not easily resolue, on which part to ground and settle my determination: for on the one side, my native Country, my friends, my wife, and kinsfolke did vnite mee to stay: on the other side, the infelo time of my house, the power of mine aduersaries, the remembrance of my former trouble, and the knowledge of my present danger did hasten me to goe: and in the end I found no middle course, but either I must venture to liue in extreame poverty abroad, or to bee sure to remaine in continuall danger at home: I regarded more the hazard of my life, wherein stode the perill of mine estate, and I rather sought the preseruation of my life, then the profit of my liuing. Wherefore after I had waighed as many dangers as I could remember, and was perswaded, that to depart the Realme, was the safest way I could take: I did resolue mee to take the benefit of a happy winde, to auoide the violence of a bitter storme, and knowing that the dealing of those that goe beyond the Seas, though their intent be neuer so good and dutifull, were yet euill thought of: I presumed to write this letter to your Majestie, and in it, to declare the true causes and reasons of my departure, both to remoue all occasions of doubt, and suspition from your Maiestie, which otherwise this sodaine departure of mine, might peraduenture procure: and also to settle as much as lyeth in me, your gracious and good opinion of me, which as I haue borne moste desirous to enioy, so will I be moste willing to deserue: and because my aduersaries may take this as a fit opportunity to bewray their malice, and to kindle your Maiesties indignation against me, I most humbly beseech your Maiestie to aske, such as you doe thinke doe hate me most, whether being of that Religion, which I doe professe, and standing euery way in the state and condition wherein I did remaine, they would haue taken that course for safety of their soules, and discharge of their consciences, which I did: and either they must directly tell you, that they would haue done the same, or plainely acknowledge themselues to bee meere Atheistes, which howsoeuer they be affected in their hearts, I thinke they would be loath to confesse with their mouthes: and when they haue satisfied your Maiestie in this point which is the first, I beseech you to aske them of the second which is the last. Whether hauing had their heads so fatally and so successefully touched, and finding themselues to be of that Religion which is accounted dangerous, and odious, to the present state: whether hauing beene hardly handled long restrained, and openly disgraced heretofore for nothing: and might now be drawne for their conscience into great and continuall danger: whether hauing some in effect create with your Maiestie, their mortall and professed enemies, and standing suspected persons in your Maiesties opinion, both in respect of the Father, who was taken away in your Maiesties time, and of themselues, who haue beene since many wayes wronged and maimed, and besides being of that Religion which your Maiestie doth detest, and of which you are most iealous and doubtfull: to be short, whether hauing had one of these Anchoras taken away, without shadow of any fault, but onely for this cause, for that he was thought to beare too great a man to liue in a commonwealth, at that time, and knowing themselues to be so reputed at this time, of those which doe beare the most sway in your Maiesties government. Lastly, whether not being able to doe any act of duty whereunto their Religion did binde them, without the incurring of the danger of felony, by a new act now lately made, they would haue departed out of the Realme as I haue done or no: and either they must say, that they would ioyfully runne vpon their owne death headlong, which is repugnant to the law of God, contrary to the law of nature, as I thinke flatly against their owne conscience, or else they must acknowledge that they would haue sought the same meanes, which I haue vsed for escaping those perils: and then I hope your Maiestie will not hardly conceiue of this my dealing, which my mortall enemies, if they speake not contrary to the truth, and reason, must needes confesse to be iust and conuenient. Besides, to confirme your Maiesties opinion of mine innocencie herein, your selfe may best remember how I might haue departed long before this time, if I had beene guilty of any crime, and that I haue stoode to the vtermost triall and examination of all my dealings, though I haue tasted all times since my last restraint, your Maiesties hard opinion and publique disgrace, both daily and hourely, without any hope or likelihood of euer recouering your former good opinion: and if my protestation who neuer told your Maiestie the least vntruth, may carry any credit in your opinion, I here call God and his Angels to witnesse, that I would not haue taken this course if I might haue stayed still in England, without danger of my soule, and perill of my life. Wherefore as it is the true token of a noble minde, and hath alwayes beene noted for a certaine argument of your Maiesties gracious disposition, in that it hath euer pleased you to take pitie of those which are in misery, and to respect with the eyes of your fauour all miserable persons, so cannot I be brought any whit to feare, that your Maiestie will make me the first example of your seuere and rigorous dealing, in laying your displeasure vpon mee, who am constrayed to forsake my Countrey, to forget my friends, to leaue my liuing, and to leese the hope of all worldly pleasures, and earthly commodities: if either, I will not consent to my certaine destruction of my body, or willingly yeild to the manifest endangering of my soule the least of which are so intolerable to any Christian man to endure, as I hope it cannot be thought any vndutifulnesse in me, if I seeke by any good and lawfull meanes to auoyde so great an inconuenience: and though the seate of temporall commanders bee so gracious to flesh and blood, as I could not desire to liue, if I were not comforted with the remembrance of his mercy, for whom I endure all these troubles endured 1500. times more for me: yet I assure your Maiestie, that your displeasure should be more vnpleasant vnto me, then the bitternesse of all my other losses; and a greater griefe, then the greatest of my misfortunes are besides. Therefore remaining in assured hope, that my selfe and my cause shall receiue that fauour, conceit, and rightfull constructions at your Maiesties hands, which I may iustly challenge, both because the triall of my good dealings heretofore haue sufficiently deserued the same, and also for that the confession of my mortall enemies at this time must needes acknowledge mine innocencie herein. I doe humbly craue pardon for my long and tedious letter, which the weightinesse of the matter enforced me vnto: and I beseech God from the bottome of my heart, to send your Maiestie as great happinesse, as I wish to mine owne soule.

The 21. of June, Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland, in prison in the Tower of London, vpon vehement suspition of high treason, was there found dead, and also of his owne deuillish intent, and of his malice before pretended to haue murdered himselfe, as more at large large may appeare, by inquisition made by a substantiall Iury, taken before the Coroner of London, as followeth verbatim with the record.

Copie of the inquisition of the Coroners.

An inquisition taken at the Citie of London, that is, within the Tower of London, in the Parish of Allhallowes Barking, in the ward of the Tower of London, on Monday being the 21. day of June, in the yeare of the raigne of our Soueraigne Lady Elizabeth, by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. the 27. before William Squire Gentleman, Coroner to our said Soueraigne Lady the Queene, within the Citie of London and the Liberties of the same, vpon the view of the body of H. Percy Knight, late Earle of Northumberland, late prisoner there within the Tower of London aforesaid, for suspition of high treason by him supposed to bee done, there lying dead, and slaine: by the Oathes of Nicholas Wheeler, Simon Horlepoole, T. Gardener, William Leueston, Owen Morgan, Henry Lodge, W. Abraham, W. Horne, T. Russell, John Porter, Robert Dower, Anthony Hall, W. Curtis, T. Wood, Mathew Dolman, T. Martin, Richard Skeford, John Trot, Philip Smith, T. Taylor, and H. Bowdler, of good and lawfull men of the same ward, and of three other wards to the same ward next adioyning, as the maner and custome is in the Citie aforesaid, to enquire how, in what maner, and when the said Henry Percie late Earle of Northumberland came to his death. Which Iurie do say vpon their Oathes, that on the one and twentieth day of this instant moneth of June, in the yeare of the Raigne of our Soueraigne Lady Elizabeth, by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c.

The 27. aforesaid, and long before, the foresaid Henry late Earle of Northumberland, prisoner in the Tower of London imitate, in the Parish of Allhallowes Barking aforesaid, in the Ward of the Tower of London aforesaid, for suspition of high treason aforesaid, by him against our Soueraigne Lady the Queene supposed to be committed, and being placed in a certaine Chamber within the Tower of London aforesaid, there prisoner remaining, imagining and intending himselfe deuillishly and felloniously to kill and murder before the aforesaid 21. day of June: that is to say, the 20. day of June, in the 27. yeare aforesaid, did prepare a certaine Dagge of yron and steele, of the value of twenty shillings, and with certaine bullets of Lead, and a certaine quantity of Gunpowder, contained in a small barr, and caused the aforesaid Gunne, the bullets of Lead, and the Gunpowder to bee brought into the said Chamber vnto him the said Earle of Northumberland, and to be deliuered to the same Earle then and there, by the hands of Iames a Price Yeoman, to execute his deuillish and felonious purpose and intention, which Dagge aforesaid, the aforesaid Earle caused secretly to be hidden in a certaine Mattrice, vnder the bolster of his bed in the Chamber aforesaid, and then and there, the aforesaid 21. day of June, in the 27. yeare aforesaid, betweene the houres of twelue and one in the night of the aforesaid 21. day of June, thinking and intending to prosecute and follow his deuillish intention and purpose aforesaid, did bolt the doore of the aforesaid Chamber, and the inner part of his Chamber towards himselfe, least any man should forsee or withstand his deuillish, felonious, and malicious intent: and the said doore of the aforesaid Chamber being so bolted, the same Earle then and there into his bed himselfe did lay, and vpon thys afterward, that is to say, the foresaid one and twentieth of June in the 27. yeare aforesaid, about the houres aforesaid, within the Tower of London aforesaid, situate and being in the Parish of Allhallowes Barking aforesaid, in the ward of the Tower of London aforesaid, not hauing the Almighty God as his feare before his eyes, but being moued and seduced by the instigation of the deuill, of his malice afore practised, did take vp into his hands the aforesaid Dagge of yron and steele, then and there made ready, charged with Gunpowder, and three bullets of Lead, and the aforesaid Dagge to the left part of his breast, neere vnto the pap of the same part of his breast, then and there feloniously and deuillishly did put, and vpon the same part of his breast the aforesaid Dagge did discharge, by reason of the violence of which Gunpowder, and of the aforesaid three bullets of Lead, the aforesaid Earle into his body and heart, and through his chyne bone, then into his right shoulder, manifestly then and there with the aforesaid bullets of Lead, felloniously and volantarily did strike, giuing vnto himselfe then and there one mortall wound of the depth of twelue inches, and of the breadth of two inches: of which mortall wound aforesaid, the foresaid Earle within the Tower of London aforesaid, the day and yeare, Parish, and Ward aforesaid, instantly died. And so the Iury doth say vpon their oathes aforesaid, that the foresaid Earle, the day and yeare, and place aboue written of his deuillish intent aforesaid, and of his malice before preceaded, felloniously and voluntarily himselfe did kill, and murther in manner and forme aforesaid, against the peace of our Soueraigne Lady the Queene, her crowne and dignity. But what goods and chattels the aforesaid Earle in the time of the felony and murther of himselfe aforesaid committed had, or as yet hath, the Iury know not, &c. in witnesse whereof, &c. This was the verdict of the Iurors, whereby it remained to prouide for the bestowing of his wretched carkasse, which on the 23. day of June, was buried in Saint Peters Church within the said Tower of London. This was the end of that Earle, the manner of whose murthers, and part of his treason are dilated, as the same was published in the Starre chamber, and in a booke intituled, A true summary report of the declaration of some part of the Earle of Northumberlands treasons, deliuered, &c.

In the 26. of June, arriued at London Deputies Entertainement of the deputies for the states of the Low Countries.

Duties of the States for the Netherlands, or Low Countries, who were lodged about the Tower Streete, and had their diet for the time of their abode here very worshipfully appointed (all at the charges of her Maiestie) in the Cloathworkers Hall in Pinchene lane, neere to the said Tower Street. These on the 29. of June, being the Feast of the Apostle Peter and Paul, repaired to the Court, then at Greenwich, where by vertue of their Commissions from the united Countries, they presented to her Maiestie the Soueraignty of those Countries, to wit, of Brabant, but the Commission (for the siege of Antwerpe not full authorized, of Guelder, of Flaunders, of Holland, Zeland, of Utricht, and of Friseland: for Brabant, Iaques de Grise great Baily of Bruges, Counsellour of the Frankes for Guelerre, Rotger of Varfold Gentleman: for Flaunders Nocil de Garlie Lord of Shoncwall: for Holland, Iohn Wandercoost, Lord of Hoztwike: Iosse de Menin Pensionarie of Dordreght, Iohn of old Barneuelt, Pensionarie of Rotradame, and D. Francis Maelie: for Zeland, Iacob Dales Counceller and pensioner of Bergoest: for Utricht, Petrus Suis, Duke of the Lawes: for Friseland, Liuerzma, Gentleman, and Antonie, president of Friseland, and Lads Langema, Gentleman. All these falling on their knees before her Maiestie, and so remaining for a long space, one of them, to wit Iosse de Menin, Counsellour, and pensionary of Dordreght, one of the Commissioners for Holland, made to her Maiestie this Oration in French: Madames Estates des Prouinces Vnies des pais, &c. with also the same in English thus: Madam, the States of the united Prouinces of the Low countries, most humbly thanke your Maiestie for the good affection and fauor, which it hath pleased you to shew to the said Countries in their necessity, and to confirme the same with so many testimonies, and that lastly, after the execrable assault committed vpon the person of the late Prince of Orenge, at what time it pleased your Maiestie to let the said States vnderstand by your Ambassadour Master Dauison, what care you had of our defence and preseruation, and also by Seigneur de Crisi, the great displeasure which your Maiestie conceiued, to see the States frustrated of the hope which they had founded vpon the treate of Fraunce. But since the care which your Maiestie hath alwayes had ouer our good, and conseruation, is not thereby any whit diminished, but hath more pleatifully increased, according to the necessity of our affaires required, for which the sayde Countrey in generall, and euery of vs in particular remaine perpetually bound to your Maiestie, and acknowledge the same with all fidelitie and obeisance. And as the sayd States (Madam) did consider that since the decease of the Prince of Orenge, they haue sustained the losse of diuers of their holdes and good Townes, and that for the preseruation of the sayd Country, it is needfull for them to haue a Prince and Soueraigne ruler, which may warrant and defend them against the tyranny and vniust oppression of the Spaniards, and their adherents, which dayly more and more intrude themselues by their sinister power, and all other meanes to destroy and ouerthrow the sayd Countreys, and reduce this poore people into perpetuall seruitude, worse then that of the Indians, vnder the impostable yoake of the detestable Inquisition of Spaine. Considering also that the body of the Townes, and Communalties of the aforesayd Countreys, haue a time hope that your Maiestie will not see them perish, according to the desire of their enemies, which make this long and cruell war, all which outrages, the States of the sayd Low Countryes (following the diligence and bond which they owe to the Burgesses and Citizens) are to sustaine, repell, and to turne from them, by reason of the manifest tyranny and seruitude, which the Spaniards attempt to bring in and lay vpon the poore people, thereby to preserue their liberties, rights, priuiledges, and franchises, with the exercise of the true Christian religion, whereof your Maiestie by good right carrieth the title of Protector, and Defendresse, against which the sayd enemmes and their associates, already haue and still doe make many leagues, deuise many subtilties, treasons, and ambushes, not ceasing daily to practise and imagine them against the person of your Maiestie, and to the preiudice of the rest of your Realmes and States, whom the good God hath preserued vntill this present, for the wealth of the Christians, and sustentation of their Churches. Wherefore (Madam) it is so, that for causes, reasons, and other considerations, the sayd States haue assembled and concluded vpon a good and firme resolution, to haue recourse vnto your Maiestie, sith it is an ordinary matter among all people, and oppressed nations, in their calamities and oppressions to craue support, and fauour against their enemies, of kings and Princes neare vnto them, but especially of those who be endued with magnanimitie, piety, iustice, and other Princely vertues, to which effect, the States haue appointed vs to come vnto your Maiestie, to present vnto the same, the Principalitie, Soueraignitie, and iust gouernment of the sayd Prouinces, vnder certaine good and equall conditions, chiefly concerning the preseruation of the exercise of the reformed Religion, and of the ancient priuiledges, liberties, franchises, and customes, and next of the administration of the affaires, policie, and iustice of the warres in the sayd Country. And although that these Countryes haue sustayned much hurt by these long and continuall warres, and that the enemy hath taken diuers strong places and Fortes in the same Countries: yet there is besides the same in the Countryes of Brabant, Gelderland, Flaunders, Haines, and Duerlet, many good townes and places, which defend themselues against the force of the enemie, and the Countries of Holland, Zeland, Utrich, and Frise, be yet (thankes be to God) entire and whole: in which there be many great and strong townes and places, faire riuers and deepe Ports and hauens of the Sea, out of which your Maiestie

Maiestie and your successours may receiue diuers good seruices, fruites, and commodities, whereof it is needlesse here to make any long rectall. Onely this amongst other matters deserueth good and especiall consideration, that the vniting of those Countries, of Holland, Zeland, Frise, and the Ilownes of Sluze, and Sland in Flanders, vnto the Realmes of your Maiestie, importeth so much as the absolute gouernment of the great Ocean Sea, and by consequence, and assurance, and perpetuall felicity for the subiects of your worthy Maiestie: which we most humbly beseech, that it will please the same to condiscend vnto vs in the said points and conditions, and in that which followeth, which is, that you will for you and your lawfull successours in the Crowne of England, be protectors of the reformed Religion, as the principall iusticer and soueraigne Gouernour of the said Countries: and consequently to receiue the people of the same, as your most obedient Subiects vnder the protection and continuall safegard of your Maiestie, they being a people assuredly so faithfull and louing to their Princes and Lords (be it spoken without daunting) as any other Nation is throughout Christendom. In doing whereof (Madame) you shall preserue many godly Churches, which it hath pleased God to assemble in these latter times in the same Countries, at this present in many places grieuously afflicted, and you shall deliuer the same Country and people (of late before the vniuall deedes of the house of Spaine) very rich and flowing, through the great commodity of the Sea, Ports, Hauens, Riuers, Trasique, and Merchandize, whereof they be naturally endued: you shall I say (Madame) deliuer them from ruine and perpetuall bondage of body and soule, being a worke right royall and most magnificent, acceptable to God, profitable to all Christianity, worthy immortall commendation, answerable to the magnanimitie and heroicall vertues of your Maiestie, and ioyned with the assurance and prosperity of your Dominions and Subiects. Whereupon we present vnto your Maiestie the said articles and conditions, reuerently praying the King of Kings to preserue your Maiestie from your enemies, to encrease your glory and felicity, and for euer to keepe you in his holy protection.

This Oration ended, and the summe thereof considered, it pleased the Queenes Maiestie, by direction of her wise and politicke Councell, to encline her heart to the ease and relefe of the said oppressed people. And because her owne Subiects should not be vtterly vnacquainted with her Highnesse doings in that case, there was published by authority a booke intituled, A declaration of the causes mouing the Queene of England to giue ayde to the defence of the people afflicted and oppressed in the Low Countries. Dated at Richmond the first of Octobet 1585. and the 27. yeare of the raigne of our Soueraigne Lady the Queene. This booke was printed, in the Latine, Italian, and English tongues.

On the 4. of August, betwixt the houres of 4. and 5. of the clocke in the morning, at the end of the Towne called Nottingham, in Kent, eight miles from London, in a Lane not farre from the houses, the ground began to sink three great Elmes being swallowed vp, the tops falling downward into a hole with the rootes vpward turning round in the falling, and driuen into the earth past mans sight: and before ten of the clocke that present day, the ground and trees were sunke so low, that neither the one or other might be discerned, the hole being sometimes filled with water, and other whiles neither bottome, trees, or water may be perceiued. The compasse of this hole was then about 80. yards, and being sounded with a Lead and line of 50. fadomes, cannot therewith finde or fasle any bottome.

On the 15. day of September, to the number of 32. Seminaries, masking Priests, & others, late prisoners in the Tower of London, Marshalsea, Kings bench, and other places, were embarked in the Mary Martine of Colchester, on the South side of the Thames, right over against Saint Katherines, to be transported over into the coasts of Normandy, to be banished this Realme for ever, by vertue of a commission from her Maiestie before specified. There being safely transported over to Bologne, wrote their certificate thereof as follow eth.

Whereas upon your Honours Commission directed unto Anthony Hall, and Thomas Stockar, for the transporting of vs whose names are under written, into the coasts of Normandie, who accordingly tooke vs into a Barque called the Mary Martine of Colchester, on the Southside of the Thames, right over against that part of Saint Katherines next to London bridge, the 15. day of September 1585. according to the computation of England: our will is to testifie unto your good Honours, that they the said Anthony Hall, and Thomas Sockar, have generally so well used vs in all respects, that wee cannot but acknowledge our selues much beholding to so courteous and loving Officers: neuertheless comming along the Sea, and meeting with her Maesties Admirall in the Downes, who promised, that we should not be disturbed in our course into the Province of Normandy, according to your Honours said Commission, wee had not from him departed two leagues, when as a Flushinger with his people suddainly entred upon vs, being peaceably stowed under hatches, and in our quiet rest, with their drawne swords, their Calivers, and their Pistoles stored in their hands, to our great terrour and discomfort, the most of vs being very sore sea-sicke, expecting at that instant nothing, but either the rigorous dint of the sword or bullet of the Caliuar. Howbeit, partly being had by our Commissioners with them, they departed, after which time we considering the generall danger on the Seas, besought with one consent your Honours Commissioners to set vs on land at Calice: but they in no wise yeelding thereunto, at last by reason of our importunity in such danger and weakenesse, yeelded to set vs on shore at Bologne, partly by reason of the feare we were then put in, and partly for that wee feared afterward more unreasonable measure, but specially the greatest number of vs so sore sicke, that very tedious vnto vs it seemed to beare so long and dangerous a passage. In witnesse whereof to this our Certificate wee haue all subscribed our names, the nineteenth of September, 1585. William Gimlet, R. Fen, John Nole, Christopher Small, &c.

Frederick Lord Windsor, died at Westminster upon the 2. of December.

In the moneths of Nouember and December, many hoises and men were shipped at the Tower-Wharfe, to be transported ouer into the Low Countries. And on the 1st of December, the right Honourable Robert Dudley, Earle of Leicester, Lord Lieutenant Generall (after hee had taken his leaue of her Maiestie and the Court) with his traine (which was great) entred the Towne of Colchester in Essex, and was there honorably entertained and feasted by Sir T. Lucas Knight, where the Bailiffes and Brethren in scarlet gownes, and multitudes of people met him, and so with great solemnity entred the towne where he lodged that night, and on the next morrow set forward to Harwich, into the which towne hee was accordingly received and entertained. On the 8. of December, the said Earle accompanied with the Earle of Essex, the Lord North, the Lord Audley, Sir William Russell, Sir Thom. Sherley, Sir Arthur Basset, Sir Walter Waller, Sir Gervase Clifton, and other knights, Esquires, and Gentlemen, to the number of fiue or seuen hundred horse brauely appointed, all voluntaries, and of his friends, followers, and seruants, Captaines, and Souldiers, with his traine, to the number of fifty saile of ships and hoyes, set forward toward Flushing, with sound of Trumpets and Drums, howlets, and prayers of the people for happy and fortunate successe. On the tenth day hee arrived at Flushing, where with his whole traine, guarded in his owne person, by fifty Archers with bowes and arrowes, fifty Halbadiers, and fifty Gunners, he was with the entertainment of Souldiers, and shot of the Towne and his noble company before him, entertained by Sir Philip Sidney, Gouernour vnder her Maiestie of the same Towne by Count Maurice, second sonne to the deceased Prince of Orenge, by her Maesties Ambassadour Lieger there, and by the States of the Towne, passing honourably entertained, with ringing of bels, and making of bonefires after their manner, which is to fire great Pitch Barrels on the tops of high poles, and then to fire them: hee was there feasted and lodged in the Ambassadours house, where according to his accustomed disposition hee demeaned himselfe so humbly, that he purchased to himselfe no lesse loue and good-liking than among the English. The next day after a Sermon had and dinner ended, hee tooke shipping and sayled towards Middleborough: in the mid way betwixt Flushing and Middleborough standeth a strong fresse of Remikens, furnished with English men, at the which hee with some of his especiall traine landed, and viewed the same, who returning againe to their Ships, were presented on the top of the walls wals in the front of the sea with fifty pikemen, very brauely furnished, hauing their English Ensignes displayed, with triumph of shot, sound of trumpets and drummes, more two houres together. In the which honourable triumphs, the whole fleete hauing good winde, and faire weather, sayled along to Middleborough, where on the shore side at the landing place, were vnder nine Ensignes displayed with great store of shot, the best States of the Country attending my Lords landing: ouer the gates by the porte was painted the redde Croste of England, her Maesties armes, & the States: though which gates the Earle and his traine entring, hee was thus guarded from his landing to his lodging, guarded, though a lane of musket shot with the Ensignes borne before him, with trumpets and drums very royally, almost a quarter of a mile. In the middle of the market place, where the English Ensignes aduanced, and deliuered vnto him, with the which, & the rest borne before him he came to his lodging, where at the intreaty of the States, he stayed more then two houres at the gate, to see the souldiers marching and their strengths: after which, because it was neere night, he entred and made his dinner and supper all one. Three of those nine Ensignes were new: In the first were her Maiesties, and the Empresses armes quartered: In the second, the Earle of Leicesters, and the Prince of Orenges armes together: In the third were the seuen Prouinces yeelded vnto her Maiestie, all very excellently emblasoned. In a large table hanged ouer the gate of the English house in Middleborough, were emblasoned the armes of her Maiestie along aboue the rest, next vnder that the L. Lieutenants armes on the one side at large, hard by the which, was set out the armes of the States and their houses: all which artificially by a chaine were linked together, and fastened to the English armes, vnder which was written at the foote of this frame, Quos Deus conjunxit homo non separet. Thus with great ioy and continuall triumph, was hee entertained on Christmas eues eue, after the Romish computation, which they in Zeland, and Holland, obserue in that order.

Orenges death the Earle of Leicesters arriuall with a full army ouer the Low Countries.

At this time the States of Holland, and Zeland, with the rest of their confederacy, commonly called the vnited Prouinces, plainely perceiuing their own weakenes, to continue war, either offensiue, or defensiue, against the King of Spaine: whose ministers in Flanders, and Brabant, began to take freely root, by recouering many strong holdes, and Cities from the Hollanders: as Gaunt, Antwerp, Mechelyn, &c. And the sayd States hauing already bene beholding to diuers their neighbor Princes, taking their parts: viz. don Matthias, brother to the Emperor, Francis of Valois, Duke of Alanson, heyre aparant to the French Dyadem, and others, and hauing lost their late excellent gouernor, and sure friend, William of Nassau, Prince of Orenge, and his valiant brother, County Lodwicke, their chiefe leader, so as at this time the sayd States remained as a people destitute of Princely countenance, and direction, not knowing what course to take, for their proper safety against the Spaniards, and such Princes of their owne Nation, as with him conioyned, and hauing also iudiciously pondered with themselues, that of themselues they could hardly make their peace with Spayne, but vpon plaine submission, or very hard conditions, and that the long continued grieuances of the French were rife in memory: in good consideration wherof, with some what else, which for breuity I omit, they reioiced to try, if by any meanes they could procure her Maiestie, the Queene of England, to receiue them for a time into her gracious safety or her protection: vntill by her speciall meanes, or mediation of other Christian Princes, they might make peace with Don Philip the second of that name King of Spaine, from whom they had reuolted by reason of sundry oppressions, and had meanes imposed vpon them.

France kept them in awe many yeares before the Spaniards had any thing to doe with them.

The Queene after many Letters, Messengers, Oratours, and humble supplications: in meere pittie of their present misery, and hope to gayne them peace, vpon moderate termes, vtterly renouncing such benefits, high titles, and clayme to those Prouinces, as they offered her, and supposed thee would haue accepted: at length was pleased, vpon deliuery of Brill and Flushing, into her possession, as hostages for her men, and assurance for rebursing such summes of money, as vpon the agreement thee had already disbursed, not only to admit them her subiects voluntary and: but for both with, thee granted that the Earle of Leicester, of whom vpon ripe consideration, they had made choyce, as you may read in their publication at the great assembly at Dunbage, the 1st of February, one thousand fiue hundred eighty and six, and with him a power of eight thousand horse, and foot, well appointed, with other 1st habiliments for war: besides her ayde of great ordinance, and shippes, and therewithall prohibited all her subiects, vpon paine of Death, not to serue or ayde the Duke of Parma, or any other their enemies.

Upon consideration as aforesayd, Robert Dudley, Earle of Leicester, accompanied and followed, with the Flower, and chiefe gallants of England, were imbarked with fifty sayle of shippes, the eight of December, one thousand fiue hundred eighty and fiue: and arriued at Flushing the tenth day: the chiefe whereof, that went then with him and made hast after him, were the Earles of Northumberland, Derby, and Essex, the Lord Audley, the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Sturfield, the Lord North, the Lord Borroughs, Sir William Russell, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Robert Sidney, Sir Henry Sidney, Sir Jernice Clifton, Sir Thomas Sherley, Sir William Pelham, Lord Marshall of the field, Sir Arthur Bosser, Sir John Borroughes, Sir Walter Walter, With many other of note, and quality, of honourable familie, to the number of seuen hundreth. All of them exceeding rich, braue and lustily mounted.

The Earle was very honorably and kindly entertained, and Feasted: which kindnesse the Earle requited, and banqueted the States, and others all the Christmas holidayes, vsing all reciprocall Courtesies that might bee, which ended, the twenty fiue of January, the Earle was sworne vnto the States, and the States sworne vnto the Queene, and to obey the Earle her Lieutenant: and after many consultations, and meetings, concerning all matters whatsoeuer, vpon the first of February next ensuing, the States at their great assembly at Hage, made a very solemne publication as followeth.

The States Proclamation for authorising the Earle of Leicester.

The generall States of the vnited Prouinces, of the Low Countries: to all those, which shall see, or heare these present writings, health, and direction: Euen as it hath pleased her Maiestie of England, mercifully to send ouer into these Countreyes, the high and mighty Prince, and Lord, Robert Earle of Leicester, Baron of Denbeigh, and one of the Prime Councell, knight of the most honorable order of the Garter, and not only to admit and institute his Excellency as chiefe head, aboue all military souldiers, on horse or foote, Which her Maiestie hath sent, or shall send ouer hereafter, into these Countryes, and to the end to assist vs, with Councell and aduice, according to his great experience, policy, and wisedome, in the direction of publique affaires of the land, as well, touching the Feates of war, as otherwise, in consernation of all that, which most tendeth to the profite of the aforesaid Land, to bring backe, and reduce the same, into such good order, and Rule, as it hath bene in times past: to the end that so much the better, and orderly hee may resist the force and tyrannie of our enemy, and so frustrate all his practises: But also besides this, to honour and inrich his foresayd Excellency, with greater authoritie, might, and commaundement, aboue all her Maiesties Admirals, and Vice-admirals, and Shippes of warre, to command them all, and to employ them to the service of these Countries, and in such order, as his Excellency shall find needfull, for the same Country, and that his Excellency following her Maiesties commandement, desirous to shew the effect of the good will, and affection which hee beareth to these affayres, and to the preseruation of the same, and also, of the true Christian Religion, and hath employed himselfe, so willingly in the aforesayd matters, that his Excellency, for that onely cause hath left, and abandoned his native Countryes, and goods, and transported himselfe hitherwards amongst vs, So that her Maiestie, and his Excellency, could neuer haue done, or showed vs a greater benefit then this.

Therefore are wee resolued, with good and ripe deliberation, to certifie all men, by these presents, that we haue desired, accepted, and authorised the foresayd Mighty, and honorable Prince, Lord Robert, Earle of Leicester, &c. to bee our Gouernour, and Generall, Captaine ouer all the vnited Prouinces, and affected Cities, and members of the same: and we giue vnto his Excellency, besides the authority of her Maiestie giuen vnto him, the highest, and Supreame commandement, and absolute authority aboue, and in all matters of Warfare by Sea, and by land, to execute and administer the same, to the resistance of the enemie, euen as his Excellency shall thinke most commodious, to the preseruation of these Countryes, and so further to doe all things as doe belong or appertaine to the office of a Generall Captaine.

And furthermore, wee commit the administration, and vse of policy, and Iustice ouer the aforesayd vnited Prouinces, and aforsayd Cities, and members of the same, in to his hands to execute, and administer the same, with such power and authoritie, as haue had in times past, all the other Gouernours of these Low Countries before him, and especially, as haue bene exercised, and lawfully administred in the time of Charles the fift, Reserued onely the Lawes, and priuiledges of the aforesayde Countreyes, also with especiall power, to Collect Profits, execute and administer all the Contributions, which are agreede to the maintainance of the Warres, and also that which is, or shall be hereafter, deliuered into his Excellencies hands, and this all according to the vertue of other Letters, and Pittiures, written more at large touching the same agreement, all which former charge and Commission, his Excellency thoough our earnest desire hath accepted, and hath deliuered solemne oath, and assurance, into our hands, First of all, for the preseruation of the true Christian Religion, and maintainance of the Priuiledges, and Rights of these Lands and Prouinces, members and Cities of the same, Wee therefore ordayne and commaund all Gouernors of Prouinces, and Cities, all Admirals, and Vice-admiralls, all Officers, Coloners, Captaines, their Officers, and souldiers, by Sea, and land, and furthermore all other Counsellers, Officers, Treasurers, Receiuers, Bailiffes, Burgomasters, Marshalls, Magistrates, Gentlemen, Burgesses, and other inhabitants, and Subiects of these Lands, of what qualitie, or Condition soeuer, That they and euery of them, doe acknowledge his aforesayd Excellency, in the quality of Gouernour, and Captaine Generall, ouer all the foresayde vnited Prouinces, to honour, respect, and obey him, as they ought to doe, without making any difficultie in doeing the same, vppon payne of falling in the displeasure, and anger of his Excellency, and to be punished according to the heauinesse of the fault, as reason shall requite, and to the ende that no body shall pretend ignoyance, wee commaunde expressely, to make knowne these ordinances, to proclaime and publish them, where men are accustomed to Proclaime all publications, proceeding and commaunding to proceede with rigour, against all disobayners, and neglectors of the same, according to the order of punishment before mentioned, without any fauour or dissimulation to the contrary, because we haue thought the same to bee expedient for the preseruation of the Country.

Given in our Congregation and assembly in the Hage, the sixt day of February, one thousand fiue hundreth eighty and sixe: by ordinance of the aforesayd generall States.

Upon which publication with other secret vowed assurance of their entire loues, and approbation of all matters, which himselfe with his English Councell of warre should demaunde, attempt, or performe, for their behoofe, either in Campe, or Citty, hee with all his freshy Forte, and such other olde Souldiers, as hee found there vnder those most renowned English Commaunders, to wit, Sir John Norris, and his brother, Sir Francis Vere, Sir William Stanley, Sir Rowland Yorke, Sir Thomas Morgan, Sir Matthew Morgan, Sir Roger Williams, and others, entred into armes against the Illustrious Duke of Parma, wonne Dosborow, and Arill, relieued and victualled, many Cities, surprised many Castles, and Sconces, assaulted many strong Forte, maintayned sundry skirmishes, and forced the Spaniards to make retreate from the Ports of Holland, and to seeke their succour in Flanders, and vp toward Cullen, as you may read in sundry particular discourses following, he honoured many with Knight-hood for their valorous exployts, &c. he protested to performe all possible ease and honor to the States, but when he had well obserued (as he sayd) their desire of continuing warre, and with their full determinations of continuall hostilitie, and that notwithstanding all their protestations of desireous peace, their glorious titles, great trust and seeming authority which they had imposed vpon him, was but to serue their present turnes for maintenance of regall power within themselues, and not to permitt any kind of settled superiority ouer them, after his had planted a competent Garrisons in the Cautionary Townes, Brill, and Flushing, which Townes, the States surrendred into the Queenes handes, as security for monie and money, which they had already receiued, besides many thousands of men, and money which they yeerely receiue, euen vntill the comming of king Iames, hee embarqued for England, and arriued at Margate in Kent, the one and twenty of November, beeing the last time that hee came out of Holland.

And as hee sate in his chamber, hee clapped his handes vpon his legges, saying (if God giue mee leaue) these legges of mine shall neuer goe againe into Holland, Let the States gett other to serue their mercenary turne if they will: make themselues rich, for mee they shall not haue, after that the States made choice of Graue Maurice, second sonne to the foresaid famous Prince of Orenge, though young, yet of great obseruation, and good experience in their warres, who being native and of milde disposition, concurred better with the humor of the States, and common people, then any that was before him, and for a long time did the States many high honors, fought great battailes, conquered certaine Prouinces, sundry very strong Cities, Castles and Sconces won from the Spaniards, for the which he was worthily renowned throughout al Europe, and admired of all menne for his Martiall discipline, his derterite in all seruices, and sundeine exployts, his iudicious planting of a Siege, for Clemency, Munificence, and for many other Noble vertues, and Princely perfections, some of his auncestors hath beene Emperor, and hee him selfe liued and flourished as a most famous and fortunate Prince, at the publication of this Booke, viz. this yeere 1614. in which yeare he wonne diuers strong Townes, and holdes, towardes the Rheine, and serued his Countrey, when Marques Spinola as with a great Imperiall Army had taken Aken, Wesell, and diuers other strong Townes, and hadde vtterlie raced Mulham, alias Mullham, a new strong Towne builded vpon the Rheine, fowre miles beneath Cullen.

On the one and twentieth of December, diuers ships of war, and others, with the States of Dort in them, met our fleete on the water, where betwixt their shippes and ours, where was at the meeting of the Earle great triumphs with shot. in which came many small scouts of succour to hasten the traines to those, where in good time they entred Dort, very royally, and triumphantly.

Lord Lieutenant entred Dort.

On the Port to guard his person was set his owne guard of Archers, Shot, and Halbards. And ouer the Gate of entrance was her Maiesties, the Earle, and the States armes emblasoned, When he was landed, and conducted by the States, he passed from the port through a lane of musket shot, all Dutch, brauc and well appointed with eight Ensignes displayed before him, in the middest whereof, was the English Ensigne aduanced, whence with eight hundred shot he was brought to his lodging. After whose entrance they and the great shotte continued triumphing: an houre and more, here he continued a day and two nights, with singular entertainement, and verses which I ouerpasse.

On the twenty three of December, the Earle tooke scouts to passe to Rotherdame, by a riuer of fresh water, very narrow, where the Boates or Scouts, are some by men, some by horses dragged along the riuer: but in his passage, the night being cleare, suddenly there arose so great a tempest, that it put the small vessels in great daunger, but after an houre, the weather waxed calme and the night cleare, onely a Dutch Captaine, and three or foure of his men were drowned: toward night he drew neere to the Towne of Rotherdame, where on the water hee was met with three barges of pleasure, in euery of which was twelue saylers, the first all in blew veriuns and venetians, with red caps, and whole Cypres white Satire like. In the second, 12. all in buffe. In the third, twelue all in thag thrummed silke very brane, with their eares red and white: in these boates were great store of fier-workes, and rockets to cast into the ayre, and at the sterne were Cressets, which toward night were lighted, and on the water made an excellent shewe. Thus with trumpets sounding all the way, was he brought to Rotherdam by water, to his lodging in the midst of the towne, on the other side of them, on the bankes stood rankes of souldiers, all with musket shot, betwixt euery foure of them, was placed a torch, or cressct burning: and thus hee entred his lodging, where the States accompanied him to supper that night. Here the inhabitants were ioyfull of the Englishmens comming, making much of the traine. The townesmen had made very memorable in the middle of the market place, the whole proportion of the famous clearke Erasmus in a pulpit, as though he were preaching, holding a booke of the paraphrases on the Gospels in his hand, under whom was written, Erasmus Rotherdame. The Earle made haste toward Delph, hearing from thence accompanied with the States, his barges of pleasure, and whatsoeuer was thought honorable. They came late to Delph, somewhat darke, but lighted by cressets, along the narrow riuer, on the which many rockets and fire-workes were vsed. On the landing port, stood great store of musket shot, with many new ensignes like a lane for him to passe through, all which brought him to his lodging, which was the house wherein the Prince of Orange was slaine, ouer the gate of which house, were verses, which I ouerpasse. On the 25. of December, the Earle was feasted of the States very royally, and on the next morrow, the Earle feasted them, amongst whom was the Princesse of Dos, with a company of honorable Ladies, and Gentlewomen: at the table was Dutch musique of all kinds. And it is to be noted, that the further the Earle went vp into Holland, the brauer the Country was, and the better was his Lordship welcomed, as appeared by his excellent entertainement, from thence hee removed on the 27. of December to Dunhage, where he determined to keepe his standing Court. In the euening the Earle by cressct light, torches, and deuises of fireworke, entred into the towne of Dunhage with his traine of English-men, besides the States of Rotherdame and Delph, with those of Dunhage, that met him on the water, with musquet shot very many. At the entrance of my Lord by water, on the riuer met him certaine fisher-men, which presented Peter, Iames and Iohn, at their harborough: by them Christ walking on the water, who commaunding them to cast out their nettes the second time, they drew in abundance, wherewith they made shew of presentment to the Earle, for the which with great thankes hee passed by. Further on the riuer sate the representation of Mars and Bellona, who uttered speeches vnto him as hee passed. At his landing met him a troupe of horsemen, furnished, and trapped, antiquely in colours, before whom hauing fetched many courses, they rode away. At the entrance of the fayrest Streete, there were on each side of the same galleries, raised a mans height each against other, all hung with blacke bayes, on both which galleries, on each side stood fifteene virgines all clad in white, with braunches of palme, or bow wreathed about, ware candles light in their hands, euery of which did reuerence vnto the Earle, these stood a speares length distant each from other. Betwixt euery one hung a looking glasse, and betwixt euery glasse, vpon a pretty anticke pearch, stood a ware candle burning, and at each end of the gallery stood a champion, and a blacke Peeze, the one supporting the armes of England, and the other the armes of Holland. This shew was very proper: all the way as the Earle passed through were artificially made gates, raised of tagged staues, and vpon euery stag stood a small ware candle burning, by which hung the armes of diuers crafts-men of the towne. The Streete all the way was hanged with braid cloathes, vpon the which were placed store of red roses painted. Passing forward was a high scaffold very faire builded, with her Maiesties armes placed: on the top stood 7. virgins, representing the seauen Prouinces, euery virgin holding a speare, and the armes at large emblazoned, which Prouince the did signifie, in the midst of them stood Minerua armed, incompassed about the body, with the armes of England, vpon whom all the rest seemed to relie. All which were represented vnto her Maiestie, by Mercurie an olde Champion. Then next was on the like scaffold, seuen persons, presenting the seuen liberall sciences, in their kinds, yeelded to the Earl by Deuert: out of euery window hung lanthornes and candles, and euery Street was furnished with cressets, torches, and links light: one deuice that hung in the midst of the Streete contained eight and thirty lanthornes, and seuerall lights burning. Besides these, against my Lords gate, a barbar had on a wall, placed three score or more basons of bright copper, and in the middest of euery one, a ware candle burning was placed, in the midst of all was painted, a Rose and crowne, this made a faire shew. Ouer the entrance of the court gate, was placed aloft vpon a scaffold, as it had bin in a cloud, Arthur of Britaine, whom they compared to the Earle, within were hoboyes, cornets, and diuers kinds of musique: And thus they brought him to his lodging, and after he was entred in a great hal of that house, they discharged such volies of shot, as was wonderfull to heare. In the night they vsed fire workes of rockets, squibs, wheeles, and balles of fire, with a Dragon that continued casting out fire an houre, wonderfull artificially made. The next day, on the riuer aboyning to my Lords lodging, they deuised a running as it were at the tile in boats, which was thus: From each end of the riuer came a boat running with fire boares, in the Steame of which, on the top stood a man armed in a red wastecoate, with a staffe in his rest, hauing a but end of cozke: now each meeting other with these their staues, both fell into the water, where spare boats were ready to succour them, for away went their horses: this sport with fresh men they continued till the Earle was weary of it.

Lord Lieutenant entred Rotherdam.

1586. Lord Lieutenant entred Leidon.

On the 3. day of January, the Earle with 300. horses in their furniture very brauely with his retinue entred Leidon, where by the way, he was met by the best of the Towne, first by 12. Burgomasters, clad in long black gowns and on their shoulders was the Townes name in large letters of siluer: next them, twelue of the chiefest Burgesses, and then many on horse backs, all in blacke Velues. At his entrance into the Towne, all ouer his head and downe to the ground on each side, was hanged with fayre of diuers colours to his lodging, himselfe with a canopy carried ouer his head, was brought to his seate, against the which was a stage, on the which stood two men like Poets, who presented seuerall shewes, as first a woman representing the Towne, then famine assaulting her, then sickenesse, then Spanish tyrannie, then hope to bee succoured, ayde promised, and at the last, libertie, victory, and triumph, &c. And after the Lord Lieutenant had bin there feasted, and banqueted, on the 5th of January, he came from Leidon to Dunhage. The tenth he mustred part of his horsemen, to the number of 500. or more, and then pointed them into seuerall garisons and to seuerall gouernors, the Earle of Essex was that day made generall of the horses. The 11. day, the Lord Lieutenant came from Dunhage to Leidon. The 12. a generall fast was proclaimed through Holland Gelderland, and Friesland, which was kept with great zeale, the Lord Lieutenant spent that day till night, with hearing of preaching, reading, and singing of Psalmes, neither bee nor his, eating any thing till night: the 19. of January, hee came from Leidon to Dunhage.

A generall fast proclaimed.

The 24. of January, the Prince of Portingal came to Dunhage. The 25. the L. Lieutenant was installed and sworne, and likewise all the States sworne to the Queen. The manner of the installing was thus: At Dunhage is a maruelious faire hall, at the vpper end whereof, are 5. or 6. large steps ascending, which doe reach to a faire chamber, at the vpper end whereof, on high, was placed a cloth of estate, in the midst whereof were the armes of England, and against them my Lord was seated, on each side of him, 2. steps descending, sate twelue of the principal States, and below them sate the residue, to the number of 20, right before my Lord, but 4. or 5. steps descending. On the right hand of my Lord did stand the Prince of Portugale, next him, the Lord Morley, next master Norris, gouernor of Dunkirke, next Wil. Russell, and sir Robert Germin, with diuers men of great account. On the left hand of my Lord, did stand the Graue Maurice, next the Earle of Essex, sir W. Stanley, sir Robert Stapleton, and sir Tho. Parat, with diuers other of great account. Thus being placed, a dutchman made a large oration in Dutch, declaring the causes of the matter in hand, with thankes to the Queenes Maiestie, and the Lord Lieutenant. Then was read in Latine, the couenants betweene the States, the Queene, and my Lord, this done, the couenants were deliuered to my Lord, which he deliuered to the States, and the States deliuered another vnto him: then was my Lord demanded to vowe the same by oath, who holding his hand to heauen, did sweare to the couenants. The like did the States, holding vp their hands, vow to performe. Then againe were the States sworne to the Queen, and my Lord her Lieutenant in those affaires. This done, my Lord gaue to them seuerall thanks, and they seuerally did giue him the like, which being done, my Lord passed through to his chamber, the trumpets all sounding before him. This day my Lord feasted all the States most sumptuously, so that they had their fill both in their bellies, and heads. This day after dinner, the souldiers of the Towne, which were three ensignes, came into the Court furnished, and did there shew themselues with drum and fife: at night were aboue an hundred fires burnt about my Lords house. The 28. of January, the companies mustered by Thomas Digs, muster master Generall in Guelderland, Friesland, and Holland, were as followeth: Master Norris 6020. nell gentlemen 236. 6020 nell Morgan, two hundred and ninete, Captaine Wottons a hundreth thirty fiue, Captaine Powle, a hundreth and seuentaine, Captain Baskerfield, fourescore, Captaine Yorke, fourescore and fiue, Captain Hunnings a hundred and eleuen, Captaine Vdall, seuentie fourre, Captaine Powell, ninty foure, Captaine Hart, threescore and eight, Captaine Price, a hundred twenty three, Captaine Wilson, a hundreth sixty fiue, Captaine Blunt, a hundreth twenty seauen, Captains Burrowes, a hundreth and ten, Captaine Harstovy, a hundreth twenty foure, Captaine Shawe, fourescore and fourre, Captaine Enge, threescore and nine, Captaine sir Walter Wallar, a hundreth thirty seauen.

Captaine generall ouer the aforesayd united Prouinces, to honor, respect, and obey him, as they ought to doe, without any difficultie in doing the same, vpon paine of falling in the displeasure and anger of his Excellencie, and to be punished according to the heinousnesse of the fault as reason shall require. And to the end that no body should pretend ignorance, we commaund expressely to make knowne these ordinances, to proclaime and publish them, whereas men are accustomed to proclaime all publications, proceeding, and commanding to proceed with rigor against all disobayers and neglectors of the same, according to the order of punishment before mentioned, without any faueur or dissimulation to the contrary, because we haue thought the same to be expedient for the preseruation of the Countrey. Giuen in our Congregation and assembly, in the Hage, the sixt day of February, 1586. by ordinance of the aforesayd generall States.

This placard thus passed, The Lord Lieutenant did ordayne certaine speciall men, natiues borne, of the Councell, to the intent that such affaires as chanced to occur, might by them bee conuenientlie managed: the names of which Councellors, with the places of their charge, I ouer passe.

Hauing thus far discoursed of the Lord Lieutenants passing from place to place, and the manner of his entertainment: the obseruation of time doth vrge vs, ere we proceed any further, to deliuer a piece of seruice done by Cozenell Skinke, and then to proceede in the commemoration of the Lord Lieutenants entertainment in other places.

Skinke tooke the towne of Warle.

On the 21 day of February, Skinke not lying still from endamaging the enemie, did take the towne of Warle, and the Castle thereto belonging, the manner whereof was thus: himselfe lying in Vendelo, a Towne in part besieged, left his men with the Graue Maurice, charging them not to depart till such time as they heard from him, which they fulfilled: hee came with two or three men from Vendelo to his men, no man knowing his enterprise, caused them in the morning to be readie, and so passed on till munday, at which time they were not farre from Warle: Skinke espying a thirtie waggons, clad certaine of his men in the boores apparell, sent them into the Towne to sell that victuals, which they followed, and one of them brake his wagon in the gate, so that the gate could not bee closed: One of them shooting off a dag, gaue Skinke warning, and he suddainly entred the town, without resistance, and tooke both it and the Castle. This Towne is thought not so strong as profitable, yet very strong. In it are diuers salt pits, which doe make great store of salt, which salt doth serue a great part of that Country to Cullen, and further alledge her serued the enemie of salt, which now he wanteth. About the first of March he left the towne, burning it, and spoyling the Country, the cause was this. There was an army comming to stay his passage, which he, hauing 300. horses, did assaile, slue 1000. souldiers, tooke fiue Ensignes, and sent to the Lord Lieutenant. This did valiant Skinke, whom we will leaue, and returne to matter of delight.

The Lord Lieutenant came to Harlem.

On the first of March, the Lord Lieutenant came from Hage to Leidon, and the 3. of March from Leiden to Harlem, whose entertainment there, was with Stations, representations, verses, shewes, &c. not inferiour to those of other Townes. On the 4. of March the Lord Lieutenant saw the Earle of Esser Cozenel, and Sir William Russell Cozenell, Skutter and trayne by Harlem, to the number of 200. horse. He was there feasted and banqueted. And on the 10. of March, he came from Harlem to Amsterdam, and by the way was met with diuers men of warre, well shipped, which brought him by a long riuer that went into the Towne, ouer the which riuer were 3. strong bridges, placed full of armed souldiers, on the first bridge was planted tenne or twelue pieces of Ordinance, which after his honor was past, were shot off, the souldiers on euery bridge discharging by volies, in braue manner: being past these bridges, he was met with two great Pageants, in this manner: two boates were made in monstrous greatnesse, on the one the shape of a horse swimming, on the other the likenesse of a fish, on each of them a man riding, signifying the God Neptune, both these, one on the one side, and the other on the other side, did accompanie him to his landing, which was at the market place, where were planted great numbers of armed men with shot. Right before him where he landed, was a scaffold, whereon was placed diuers shewes, and representations with verses, &c. The day and night following, fireworkes, and afterward banketting, &c. The 20. of March, the Lord Lieutenant came from Amsterdam to a Castle called Sulen, 4 miles from Nozden, and there did dine, and from thence he came to Nozden, to supper and to bed. On the 22. he came from Nozden to Vtricht, where his receiuing was nothing inferior to most of the rest.

The Lord Lieutenant going to Amsterdam.

The Lord Lieutenant came to Vtricht.

On the 26. of March, the Earle of Esser went to Leger with his housemen, where he began a new worke. The 28. the Earle was seruded by Graue Maurice, on the which day in the morning there was charge giuen to all the English souldiers in the towne, that they should march from thence to Hage, which for that they wanted pay they refused, and raised a mutinie, for the which one of Captaine Poles men was taken and put in warde whereupon the rest of his followers seeing this, came to the gaole, burst the lockes of the doores, and tooke out the prisoner, for the which there was fiue apprehended, and three of them were hanged. On the same day was hanged the Secretary to the County Hollocke, which Secretary was a Counceller to the betraying of the Towne of Graue. The 30. of March, the Earle feasted the Nobility and Burgesses of Utricht, where there wanted nothing that might fill their bellies or their heads.

Earle of Esser went to Leger.

A mutinie among the Souldiers.

About the first of Aprill, Generall Norris tooke the Skonce called Lite. On the fourth of Aprill, Generall Norris tooke a Skonce at Lite.

Aprill, was a sore conflict betweene the Malecontents, and the English, the enemies being foure thousand were banquished by Generall Noris, with one thousand men, whereof he lost a great number, and slew one thousand and two hundred Spaniards. As by letter of Generall Noris to the Lord Lieutenant, &c.

Fall of S. Vaage obtein'd by Captaine Vaight.

The three and twentieth of Aprill, the Earle of Leycester, Lieutenant & gouernor Generall of her Maiesties forces in the Low countries, of the united Prouinces, making his residence at that time in Utricht, (a great and goodly Towne vpon the frontiers of Holland) kept most honorably the feast of Saint George thereun, the proceedings whereof being so Princely performed, to the honor of our nation, in the view of so many thousand strangers, I could not chuse (hauing gotten the true and faithful description, by one William Segar, alias Portelose, an officer at armes in that seruice) to make some briefe remembrance of the manner thereof, to wit: The streets of Utricht being large and faire, were rankt and set with eight enfignes of Burgesses, richly appointed, wearing scarffes, knit like roses, white and red vpon their armes, betweene whom from the Court of my Lord, to the cathedrall Church, called the Dome, the proceading was on horseback. First rode the trumpeters, apparelled in scarlet, layd with siluer lace, sounding their trumpets most royally, their banner roles being displayed, and richly lined with my Lords armes, then followed the Gentlemen, Captaines, Colonels, and her Maiesties sworne men, to the number of sixty horse, richly adorned in cloth of gold, and siluer, and like of all colloures. After came 6. Knights, 4. Barons with the counsell of Estats, the Earl of Esser accompanied with the Bishop of Cullen Prince elector, & the Prince of Portugale rode by himselfe: next proceded the Captaine of the guard, the Treasurer, and controller of the houshold, bearing their white staues: after whom followed two Gentlemen vshers, and Portelose herault in a rich coate of the armes of England: then came my Lord most Princelike, inuested in his robes of the order, guarded by the principall Burgers of the Towne, which offered themselues to that seruice, besides his owne guard, which were fifty halbardiers in scarlet cloakes, guarded with purple and white veluet. Hee being thus honourably brought vnto the Church, after due reuerence done vnto the Queenes Maiesties state which was there erected on the right hand, hee tooke his owne stall on the left, by certaine degrees lower: then began prayers, and a Sermon made by Master Knewstubs, my Lords chaplaine, after which, my Lord proceeded to the offering, first for her Maiestie, and then for himselfe, the which he performed with such decorum, and Princely behauiour, that all generally spake most honorably of him. These solemnities being done, his Lordship returned as he came, leauing behind him the Earle of Esser, and certaine Gentlemen, to accompanie the Princes and the Ladies of the Court. His Court was a faire and large house, belonging in times past to the knights of the Rhodes, in which was a very great hall richly hung with Tapistrie: at the vpper end where of was a most sumptuous cloth and chaire of estate for the Queenes Maiestie, with her armes and stiles thereon, and before it a table couered with all things so requisite, as if in person shee had beene there: on the left hand, almost at the tables end, was my Lords trencher and stale, for he would haue no coate. The Tables being couered, and all degrees assembled, my Lord before the face of her Maiestie, knighted a Dutch Gentleman, called Martin Skinke, for his manifold seruices done to his Country, the which done, the where spashal, led the feast. At the Table on the right side of the hall, sate the yong Prince of Portugall, the Prince elector, and his wife, the princes Simele, the Earle of Esser, the Graue Maures and his Lady, and betwixt euery Lady was an English Lord, or Knight placed. On the left side, sate the States, and chiefe Burgers of the towne, and the grand prior of Amerford (who came to see the feast) was by my Lords appoynt ment, placed vppermost at the table. Then began the trumpets to sound in the seruice which was most Princelike and aboundant, serued on the knee, caried and tasted to her Maiesties trencher. The side tables being furnished all in siluer plate, and attended on by gentlemen, sumptuous feast, and full of deuises.

Portelose promoted to the ensignes that he had won in the field.

dry sorts of musicks, continued the entring of the first course, which done and auoyded, the trumpets sounded in for the second, which was all baked meats of beasts, and foules, the beasts, as Lyons, dragons, leopards, and such like, bearing plaines or armes, and the foules, as peacocks, swans, pheasants, turkie-cocks and others in their naturall feathers spread as in their greatest pride, which sight was both rare and magnificent. This seruice being placed on her Maiesties board, the beasses on the one side, and foules on the other, the Lyon lying couchant at her highnesse trencher, the others cryed, a hall, which being made, with much adoe (by reason of the multitude) they brought vp betweene them, with three reuerences to the state, Portelose Herauld, inuested with the armes of England, who in Latine, French, and English, pronounced the Queenes Maiesties stiall stile of England, France, and Ireland, defendresse of the faith, &c. crying three times, largesse. Then began the trumpets to sound, and the Dutch men to carouse to the health of her Maiestie, the welfare of my Lord, and to the prosperities of the united Prouinces, and nothing wanted wherein either estate, magnificence, or ioy might be expressed. To be briefe, the feast ended, and tables voyded, there was dancing, vaunting and tumbling, with the feazes of Hercules, which gaue great delight to the strangers, for they had not seene it before, and thus they passed the time, til euensong, and then departed. At supper being all assembled againe, great was the feast, and plentifull the cheere: and after supper began the barriers, betweene challengers, and defendants, men of armes, where in the Earle of Esser behaued himselfe so valiantly antly that he gaue all men great hope of his noble prowesse in Armes.

The Warriers done, and either part retired with equall prayse (though not with equall blowes) there was a most sumptuous banquet prepared of Suger meates, for the men of Armes, and the Ladies: which banquet being furnished, my Lord wishing them all good rest, tooke his leaue, and so this honorable feast broke vp about 12. of the clock at midnight.

H. Archer.

On the foure and twentieth of Aprill, our English men that were in the enterprise before Graue returned, hauing set Graue in sufficiencie both of victuals and munition, and in their retracte set vpon a sconce called Knols sconce, which was yelded vpon composition. The nert day our men, or some part of them came before Simple sconce, and presently wonne it, without the losse of any man.

Knols sconce won, & Simplo sconce.

The 26. of Aprill, the Lieutenant of sir Martin Skinke, his Master being with my Lords Excellencie, knowing of a company of Footmen Spaniards, hee with certaine of his horse layd themselues in ambush, set vpon them, killed thirty of them, and tooke 81. and caried them to their Garrison.

The 4. of May, his Excellencie did view all his horsemen, being in number about 13. or 14. hundred by Newkirke, on a great Heath betweene Newkirke and Amerford. And this day his Excellencies Gard being sent to Newkirke to keepe the Towne, tooke 70. Boxes, that were purposed to haue spoyled Newkirke. The seuenth of May, his Excellencie removed from Amerford to Arnam, and passed through Reine, and Wagonet. Reine is a proper strong Towne, situate on the riuer of Reine, pleasant, and defenceable, roundly compact together. Wagonet standeth by a creeke of water coming to the Reine, and within twenty score yards of the Reine, this Towne is a strong Towne, and standes most pleasant, wanting nothing but peace. Arnam is a faire Towne, strongly enuironed with walls, ramparts, and other matter of strength, it also standeth on the riuer of Reine, on the one side of the Towne the ground is most fertile and pleasant, on the other side is a great heath most barren, all the Country is spoyled. Abbeyes, faire houses, and Boxes, are all wasted, neither any house standing, nor any man there dwelling. Ouer the Reine against this Towne is a sconce onely for defence of the Boxes, if the Enemie come to destroy and take from them their Cattell, to which sconce both the Boxes runne, and also driue their Cattell. Within one mile of this Towne is the sconce of Arnam, which our English men wonne the last yere; this sconce is wondrous strong, being compassed with such rampired walls, and deepe ditches, that it is almost inuincible. It standeth on the one side of the Reine. At this sconce was Captain Hennings, a braue Gentleman slaine at the winning of it, and there is buried: of other townes I leaue further to describe, and turne to the accidents.

The 9. of May, the Prince of Parma with others, came to view the Towne of Graue, which a Canoneere fell, and discharged his Canon, wherewith hee tooke away the hinder part of his horse, and misled the Prince but a little, so that hee hurled him sore. The same day they of Graue shot fire balls into the great sconce of the Enemie, and by good lucke one of them lighted among the powder in the sconce, set it on fire, which with such violence brake forth, that it blew vp the Spaniards most terribly, layd the sconce flat. About this time the Enemie battered the base Towne of Graue, and presently vpon the battery entered, which the Souldiers of the Towne suffered; but in fine they set on them, slue 400, and purged the Towne againe.

A great sconce fired.

The Enemie repulsed out of Graue.

The 12. of May, Sir Martin Skinke obtained a little perce of ground enuironed with water, nere vnto Nemegan, where he entrenched himselfe, so that the Towne could not hurt him, and his ships of warre comming downe to him, nothing could passe by the riuer of Reine to the Towne but he commanded it. The 14. of May, our men lying at Nemegan sconce, there reuolted to them out of the Towne two Boyes. The 16. his Excellency passed from Arnam to the campe at Nemegan: this day the Castle of Lenow was yelded him, and the same day came siue Boyes to our men from Nemegan. The 18. of May, the Enemies entring Graue, lost 500. men.

This Martin Skinke was a chiefe Captaine vnder the Duke of Parma, and reuolted from him, because the Duke refused to make him Gouernour of Antwerp at the taking thereof: the Duke knew him to be very fantasticke, and therefore durst not trust him in so weighty a matter; whereupon Sir Martin Skinke practised all manner of malice against the Duke, euen to kill him if he could.

Hemart for his yelding of Graue, comming to Vomell, was there apprehended and carried to Vtricht, adiudged to die, and was executed with two other Captaines.

The 20. of May, early in the morning the strong Fort of Nemegah was yelded to his Excellency in this sort, to depart like souldiers, which was graunted, and they to the number of 156. souldiers very brane passed by his Excellencies lodging at Brankharst: there was in all at the siege of this sconce at Nemegan slaine about sorty souldiers and Pyoners, and twenty hurt. Now to returne to other accidents, such as in the meane time happened in England.

This yere the Quenes Maiestie tooke order for the peopling and inhabiting of the Countries, late belonging to the Earle of Desmond and his rebellious companions, to which end diuers honorable and worshipfull Gentlemen prouided to be vndertakers of sigmories there, whereof some went into the said Countrie, others according to order taken, sent their people, amongst which were Sir Christopher Hatton, Sir Walter Rawly, Sir Wil. Courtney, Sir Richard Mollineux, Sir George Bourcher, Sir Edward Fitton, Sir Valentine Browne, Browne, Sir Walter Luson, John Popham, her Maiesties Atturney generall and other.

The 19. of January, Nicholas Deuorox was condemned for treason, in being made a Seminary Priest at Rhemes in Fraunce, since the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist, in Anno primo of her Maiesties raigne, and in remaining here after the terme of forty dayes after the session of the last Parliament.

Also Edmond Barbar being made a Priest as aforesaid, and comming into this Realme after the said terme of forty dayes, was likewise condemned of treason, and both drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered on the 21. of January. And on the same day a Wench was burned in Smithfield, for poysoning of her Aunt, and Husbande, and attempting the like to her Uncle.

Seminaries Priests executed.

On the feast day of the purification of our blessed Lady, Doctor Iohn Whitegift Archbishop of Canterbury, William Lord Cobham, Warden of the fiue Ports, and Thomas Lord Buckhurst, were chosen and taken to be of her Maiesties priuie Councell.

Archbishop of Canterbury called to be of the priuy Councell.

The 11. of February, Thomas Louelace was brought prisoner from the Lower of London to the Starre-chamber, against whom her Maiesties Attorney did informe, that the same Louelace, vpon malice conceiued against Leonard Louelace, and Richard Louelace his cousin germanes, had falsly and deuilishly contriued and counterfeited a very trapterous letter in the name of Thomas Louelace (another brother of the said Leonard and Richard then resident beyond the Seas) purporting, that the same Thomas should thereby incite and prouoke the said Leonard to procure the said Richard to execute her Highnesse destruction with other circumstances of treason. This letter he cast in an open high way, pretending thereby, that vpon the discouery thereof, his said kinsmen, Leonard and Richard should be drawne in question for the treasonable matter against her Maiestie in that bill contained, euen in the highest degree, for which offence her Maiesties Atturney prayed, that the said Thomas then prisoner, might receiue condigne punishment. Whereupon the Court adiudged that he should be carried on horseback about Westminster Hall, with his face to the horse taile, and a paper on his backe, wherein to be written: For counterfeiting of false and treacherous letters against his owne kindred, containing most trapterous matter against her Maiesties person. And from thence to be carried in that manner, and set on the pillorie in the Palace at Westminster, and there to haue one of his eares cut off: also to be carried in like manner into London and set on the pillory one Market day in Cheape, with the like paper. After that carried into Kent, and at the next Assize there to be set on the pillory with the like paper, and his other eare to be cut off. Also to be set on the pillory one Market day at Canterbury, and another at Rochester in the like manner: and at euery the foresaid places, this order taken touching his offence to be openly read, the sentence whereof was duly executed in the Palace at Westminster, in Cheape, &c.

The 14. of March, at the Assizes kept at the Citie of Exceter in Deuonshire before Sir Edward Anderson, Lord chiefe Iustice of the common pleas, Sergeant Horiday, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and other Iustices there happened a strange sickneste, first amongst the prisoners, and then amongst other persons, and besides the prisoners, many of all degrees died thereof, namely Sergeant Horiday, Sir Iohn Chichester, Sir Arthur Basset, and Sir Barnard Drake Knights, Thomas Carew, R. Carie, Io. Forteseue, Iohn Waldron, and Tho. Ridone Esquires, and Iustices of Peace: of the common people died very many, Constables, Tithingmen, and Iurors, and namely of one Iury, they being twelue in number, there died 11. of them. This sickneste was imputed to certaine Portugals then prisoners in the said goale. For not long before, one Barnard Drake Esquire, had borne at the Seas, and marring with certaine Portugals some from new found land, and taken with them, hee tooke them as a good prize, and brought them into Southmouth hauen, and from thence they were sent, being in number about 38. persons, into the goale of the Castle of Exon, and there were cast into the deepe pit and stinking dungeon. These men had borne before long time at the Seas, hauing no change of apparell, nor lyen in bed, and now lying on the ground without succour or relefe were some infected, and all for the most part were sicke, and some of them died; and this sickneste very some after dispersed it selfe among all the refuse of the prisoners in the goale, of which diuerse many of them died, but all brought to great extremities, and very hardly escaped. These men when they were to be brought before the foresaid Iustices for their triall, many of them were so weake and sicke, that they were not able to goe nor stand, but were carried from the goale to the place of iudgement, some vpon hand-barrowes, and some between men leading them, and so brought to the place of Iustice. The sight of these mens pitifull cases, being thought to be hunger-stanued, rather then otherwise diseased, moued many to pity them, &c.

Vowell.

The 17. of March, a strange thing happened, the like whereof before hath not beene heard of in our time. Master Doringto of Spaldwick, in the County of Huntington Esquire, one of her Maiesties Gentlemen Pensioners, had a hog'e which died suddenly, and being ript, to see the cause of his death, there was found in the hole of the heart of the same horse a strange worme, which lay on a round heape in a kall or skinne of the likenesse of a Toade, which being taken out, and spread abroad, was in forme and fashion not vnlike to be described, the length of which worme diuided into many graines, to the number of fifty (spread from the body like the branches of a tree) was from the snout to the end of the longest greine 17. inches, hauing 4. issues in the greines, from the which dropped forth a red water: the body in bignesse

Seruices of Friendſhip for Richard Burke againſt the Burkes

In the moneth of September, in An. 1585. at a Seſſions holden at Donmeenoug in the County of Mayo within the Prouince of Connaught, by ſir Richard Bingham, knight, chiefe Commiſſioner, and gouernor of the ſayd Prouince: ſir Nicholas White Maſter of the Rolles then being preſent, and employed with him for the perfecting of the laſt compoſition made within the ſayd Prouince) the County of Mayo, and the whole Countrey ſtood in generalitie, through the good and politicke gouernment, and the iuſt and vpright dealing of the ſayd ſir Richard Bingham, in peaceable & quiet termes, without any face of alteration. And the moſt part of the Gentlemen, and free-holders of the Countrey reſorted to the ſayd Seſſions before: neuertheleſſe, when now by meanes of this compoſition and agreement betweene her Maieſtie and them, they perceiued that the names, titles, and ſuperiorities of their cheefe Lords, and eſpecially of M. W. the cheefe of the ſepts of that Country ſhould ceaſe, extinguiſh, and for euer after bee determined: it did not a little grieue them, although ſome of them not long before had expoſtulated the like reformation. The plot of this compoſition was deuiſed by ſir Richard of purpoſe, to take away the greatneſſe of All Connaught through ſir Richard Bingham gouernour.

of the Iriſh Lords, with their names of Mies, and Oes, that the inferiour ſubiect might bee freed from their Iriſh cuſtomes, cuttings, and vnreaſonable exactions, and (by knowing what was their owne) be drawne to depend euer after vpon the ſtate, and not on thoſe Iriſh Lords, or Gentlemen: which alſo might not only much auaile her Maieſtie, in time of any ſtirs, or reuolts (by drawing the common people from following the great and chiefe Lords) but alſo bring a more certaine yearely rent, or reuenue, into her highneſſe coffers, then formerly was accuſtomed. When the people perceiued theſe their olde cuſtomes, and wages like to take end, they deuiſed with themſelues for the preuenting thereof, according to their old cuſtomed manner, euer by them vſed in all their diſcontentments, they tooke vp their weapons, armed them againſt the State, thinking by ſtirs, and broyles to win the reuocation of this ſetled, and determined reſolution, and ſo to be left againe in their old cuſtomes and wages. This their purpoſe appeared in one Thomas Roe Burcke, a chiefe Gentleman of the ſept, who at this very inſtant, durring the ſayd Seſſions at Donmeenony, kept himſelfe within a ſtrong Caſtle of his, ſtanding in an Iland on Loghe maske, euen within the ſight of the Gouernor and the other Commiſſioners, refuſing to come at them, albeit they had ſeuerall times ſent for him. Sir Richard Bingham perceiuing the coales of troubles were now laid together, and would ſhortly after kindle, and become an angry fire, if the ſame were not politikely and wartily preuented (diſſembling the matter, as if it were of no moment) he bethought him of the beſt and ſafeſt remedie to make with this inconuenience: And knowing well that theſe Burkes had euer bin very bad and braue people, ſuch as very hardly continued themſelues two yeares together, within a due courſe or compaſſe of obedience; he law that the onely way to ſtoppe this gap, was either to cut off, or to apprehend and lay vp in durance as pledges, two or three of the beſt of that ſept: ſuch as were moſt dangerous for the inciting of ſtirs, and the drawing of others into action. And therefore vpon his returne out of the County of Roſcommon, he dealt with the cheriffe of the County of Mayo, for the apprehenſion of the ſayd Thomas Roe. The cheriff not long after ſent his ſubcheriffe, to put this matter in execution, who being reſiſted and hurt by the ſayd Thomas Roe, and not otherwiſe able to apprehend him, wounded him in ſuch ſort, as he thereof died. This Thomas Roe being thus ſlaine, was not much lamented, no nor of his owne kinde red, for he was an oppreſſour of them, and doubtleſſe, it was thought by wiſe men, that the death of this man, and the hanging of two others of that ſurname at Roſcommon, which had deuiſed for the drawing of Scottes into the Prouince, had preuented the ſtirs, and troubles that after enſued, and at that time ſeemed to haue a beginning, had not ſome men depending on the State (through enuie and malice, to Sir Richard Bingham and his good happy gouernment) perſwaded diuers others of that ſect of the Burkes, to haue a care of themſelues, to bee vpon their keeping, and to truſt no Officer, nor to come to any ſuch, till their pardons ſhould be by them procured from the Lord Deputy. Theſe meere names I forbeare to remember; becauſe they haue ſince that time made it knowne before the Lord Deputy, and Councell of the Realme, that in giuing ſuch cauſeats to the Burkes, they meant nothing leſſe then to hearten them into rebellion againſt the State, and to attempt ſuch bad actions, as afterwards they did. Of this councell, the Burkes (which of themſelues were ſeditious enough, in whoſe mindes did ſtill ſticke the aboliſhing, and taking away of their M. W. with their old Iriſh cuſtomes and cuttings) take hold and conuerted the ſame to an apt and commodious occaſion offered them, for their better aſſembling together into a conuenient number. And more effectually to winne the hearts of many men to follow this their intended enterpriſe, they made Clan-ſoundes, the Loires, and moſt of the Countrey beleeue, that ſir Richard Bingham hauing already taken from theſe men their ancient cuſtomes and liberties, would alſo deliuer the like meaſure to them, and take from them alſo their liues, if they did not well looke vnto themſelues. By this meanes they drew many vnto them, perſwading themſelues that they might ſafely aſſemble together in companies, without feare of interruption, for by the friendſhip of their fourſcore Councellors (which were in Dublin, their aſſemblies ſhould there bee thought as a thing by them done for their defence and ſafety. They alſo knew, that ſir Richard Bingham being reſtrained from following them in this or other their actions, without direction from Dublin, could not ſtop or preuent them in their firſt beginning, by reaſon whereof, they would in that time draw together, and ioyne to them the greateſt part of the Countrey, whereof ſome ſhould be drawne to aſſiſt them in open hoſtility, and ſome others in ſecret and vnder-hand dealing, of which ſort, the latter ſhould ſtill ſeeme ſubiects, and liue (as neere as they could) in the boſome of the State. And to make themſelues the ſtronger, and to drawe the whole Prouince into action with them, they gaue it forth, that their caſe was euery mans caſe within the ſame: and that their ancient cuſtomes and liberties were infringed, and their liues ſought to bee taken away, ſo ſhould it alſo fare with the reſt of the ſayd Prouince. And here for an entrance into this rebellion, the ſonnes of Edmond Burke of Caſtle Barry, being many (which Edmond was an old man, one of the competitors of the M. Williamſhip) and a moſt bad affected member to the State, and his wife as bad as himſelfe, together with Edmond Berragh Burke, Richard Burks the Druiſs Hooks ſonne, Moyler Oge Burke, Walter M. Donnie Bune, Cahir, M. Connell, and diuers others, aſſociating vnto them many idle perſons, entring into a Caſtle in Loghmaske, called Caſtle Mecally, and manned the ſame together with Thomas Roes Caſtle, wherof mention tion is made before, which Castle after Thomas Roes death, was now in the possession of his brother Richard Burke, called the Pall of Ireland: which Castles they kept in rebellious manner against the State refusing to come at any of her Majesties officers. About this time, sir Richard Bingham lay at the siege of Clanowen in Thomond, a strong pile, manned and kept against her Majestie, by Mahowne Obrian a most dangerous enemie to the State, a chiefe champion of the Popes, and a great practiser with forreine powers, for the inuasion of this Realme of Ireland. At this siege Sir Richard Bingham had but 100. English souldiers and some few kerne of the country, by reason whereof, he was driuen to no small paine in skirmishing, watching, and warding with so few men: neuertheless, within seuen dayes after he won the Castle, and slew the sayd Mahowne Obrin, and the ward within, and raced the said Castle, without the furtherance of any great ordinance. After that, sir Richard marched from this Castle, to Castle Mecalley, within the which the traytors were, and inclosed themselues. At his first comming thither, he parled with them, admiring them to remember the obedience, which they owed to her Majestie, and to yeeld themselues to her Majesties mercy, assuring them that in so doing they should finde that favour in all respects, that other her highnesse subiects did. But they (minding nothing lesse then to submit themselues, on any such conditions) sayd they would not doe any hurt, but kepe themselues in their safety, for that they were fearefull to trust any Englishman, alleadging many friuolous and impertinent causes, meaning them to stand vpon their guard. Hereupon Sir Richard proceeded to beseige them in the said Castle, which was a strong round fortresse, erected far within the Loghe, vpon a small compasse of ground, so scanted by the wall, that scarce a landing place was left vnto it. The siege was all by water in boates, and could not otherwise be attempted. Insomuch that Sir Richard going about to burne a boat or two of theirs, that they had bored, and layd by vnder the Castle wall, to the end they might not escape away, and that also he might watch and ward them with few men (hauing but a small company there, and those also sore wearied, buised with stones and galled with shot at the siege of Clanewen) was forced by the sudden rising of contrary weather, which much fauoured the enemie, to leaue the attempt with losse of his boats, and two or three of his souldiers, himselfe and others being in the sayd boate, hardly escaped by the helpe of other boats, which other boats came not in time to his succour, through the negligence of such as he had put in trust with them, and appointed to come, and ioyne with him. The boat which he so lost, the enemies got, in which and in another boate of their owne (before Sir Richard could returne to charge them with a fresh supply from his campe, lying on the shoare) they shipped themselues, and with great celerity escaped into the woods, fearing that at the next charge, sir Richard would haue won the Castle, Captaine Mordant and others had the chase of them by water. These Traytors being thus escaped to the woods and mountains out of the Castle Mecalley, their accomplices also fled out of the other Castle. Both which and one strong pile of Farrowe, M. Dowces, Sir Richard raced downe to the ground, for that they were not fit or stood seruiceable to be kept by the English, and were very dangerous to be in the possession of the Irishrie, Richard Burke alias the Pall of Ireland, a man of no small account among his sect, and all the ill affected Irishrie, repaired to Sir Richard at his first comming to Castle Mecalley, being indeed the chiefe of their confederacy. This man vnder colour of dutifull subiection, intended to haue betrayed Sir Richard and all his company: but (intelligence hereof being giuen, and many apparant proofes had of his traytorous intentions, and deuises) this Pall of Ireland was soone executed by Marshall law: this man was accounted the most dangerous member in all the County of Mayo, especially for the drawing in of Scots, a thing which Sir Richard euer doubted, and which the Burks vndoubtedly intended.

After this, the Gouernor Sir Richard Bingham tooke order for the following of those Burkes, to the woods and mountaines, which were now growne to be some reskue to woods, he lenied some forces on the Country, and with them and his owne company of an hundred souldiers, he so hunted them from bush to bush, and hill to hill, that in short time no newes was to be heard where any of them were. After this the gentlemen of the Country which had not combined with them, seeing the rebels to be driuen to their holes and fastnes in hyding matter, by meanes whereof the souldiers could doe nothing vpon them, offered to Sir Richard that if he would draw his forces out of the Country, they would vndertake the seruice against the rebels, and either kill them, or banish them at their owne cost and charges, without abating any peny of the composition rents, due to her Majestie by them in lew therof: hereunto Sir Richard assented, finding it a good policy to set one of them against another. But here (hauing these bad Burks at a great aduantage, and in a hard distressed case) when they were thus at the lowest ebbe, Sir Richard received a speciall and strait charge, and commandement from the Lord Deputie to protect them, and he receiued also a protection ready signed by the Lord Deputy to that end, which thing, though the matter and manner of it much grieued him, hee handled it in the best sort he could, to saue the credit of the State, and wrought deuises to driue them to seeke their protections, which when they did, he graunted it vnder his owne hand, and the Seale of the Province, as formerly was accustomed, and in such causes ought to be done. But although this was closely handled by the Gouernour Sir Richard Bingham, yet the Burks had intelligence that the Lord Deputy had protected them, and commaunded the Gouer-

Gouernour to performe it, which, as is to be gathered, they had learned from some well-willers of theirs out of Dublin: this made the Gentlemen very high and hauty minded, and was to them a Soueraigne preparatiue, for to vndertake new and greater stirs and broyles, then before they had begun. For the place being such as the State offered it, and they sought it not, continued but a small time, although they had giuen in a simple pledge for the performance thereof. After the Burkes were thus protected, Sir Richard Bingham repaired to his dwelling house and from thence vpon occasions to Dublin, where he had not long stayed, when the Burkes reuolted againe now the second time, ioyning vnto them the Clangibbons, the Clandonnels, and the loues in farre greater number then before, which sayd loues, the more to manifest their bad and traiterous intention, and the better to assure their complices of their fast dealing in this combination, murdered certaine of the officers of Percunnaught and their men, to the number of fiftene or sixtene. About this time order came from the Lord Deputy, for the leuying of men within this Prouince for the seruice in the Low Countreys. The bunte thereof and the repaire hither of Francis Barckley, sent by the Lord Deputy for the leuying of the sayd men, caused many idlemen, who had no scale to serue beyond the seas, to ioyne themselues with the sayd Barkes, then in action against her Majestie. And thus these Burkes hauing had an enterview of peace, and a pawling time to gather head againe, and increase their forces, stood on very lofty termes, and sayd they would haue a M. William, or else they would goe into Spayne for one, also they would haue no sheriffe within that County, nor be subiect to answere in appearance at any assise or Sessions. These points and termes they stood on, and articled the same accordingly, with many other vnreasonable demaunds which they would haue to be granted, or otherwise they would in no wise yeld to haue peace with the State. At the beginning of this second reuolt, for that the Gouernor was willing to haue drawne them to peace (if by any reasonable meanes he might haue done the same, without any indignity to the State) he sent vnto them Commissioners, viz. the Lord Archbishop of Tuam, the Lord Bremingham Barron of Athenry, Thomas Dillon, Esquire, chiefe Iustice of the Prouince, Gerrald Comerford, Esquire, Attourney of the same, and others to parley with them, and to examine the cause of those their insolent attempts: vnto whom they answered in effect, as is aforesayd, deliuering them the sayd Articles in writing. And euen during the time of the Commissioners abode in the Countrey, they did not forbeare to burne and spoyle the same. All which notwithstanding a time of peace was granted, vpon conditions in a scrit to them giuen, for eight dayes by the sayd Commissioners, that in the meane time the Lord Deputies pleasure might be signified to the Gouernour how he would haue them to be proceeded withall, and direction sent accordingly. But (after this also was granted them) the Commissioners were no sooner departed out of those parts, then they began to breake downe diuers Castles, and to burne many townes in the plaine and champaine Countries. And the more to make knowne their Traiterous and wicked purposes, they proceeded against her Majestie in most odious and vndutifull speaches, saying: What haue we to doe with that Carlatie, how dowtle are we, being so mighty a nation, to haue beene so long subiect to a woman? the Pope and the King of Spaine shall haue the rule of vs, and none other. Sir Richard (notwithstanding all this) did forbeare to raise forces, and to serue vpon them (great ye his disaduantage) for that he had receiued many and earnest cautions from the Lord Deputy to forbeare the beginning of warre against them. But in the meane time, the rebels grew to be very strong, and were now increased to the number of seuen or eight hundred men, and had also sent Edmund Kerragh Burke, and Iohn Ireleaue, brother to Water Kerragh Burke, to parley with the Scots, and to draw them into the Province, to their succour and aide, aduertising the Scots, by the sayd messengers, that the time was then to subdue Connah, for the Queene hadde few or no souldiers in the Realme, they were all imployed into the Low Countryes. This fire kindled and flamed in such sort, that it was high time to take in hand the quenching thereof: neuerthelesse, Sir Richard of himselfe durst doe nothing against them, for that his was aduised and willed by the Lord Deputy, to doe nothing in that case, without his Lordships aduise and direction, which (when he had long looked for) at length he receiued, although somewhat late, the effect whereof was thus: the sayd Lord Deputie and the Councell conuerted in opinion with Sir Richard, that the conditions which the Burkes required were so vnreasonable, as neither subiect ought to demaund them, ne yet the States (without great indignity) could yeld vnto them, and therefore resolued and willed Sir Richard to prosecute them, with such forces as he had, or could leuy, except he could find them to stand on more dutifull termes then afore is sayde. Hereupon the Gouernor leuied such forces as hee thought might suffice to answere the seruice both effectually and speedily, for he found and saw that lingering seruice could not but greatly charge her Majestie, and much encourage the enemy: (a soft kind of warre that hath beene too too long vsed in this realme.) First, hauing taken order for the assurance of the country behinde him, hee marched towards the County of Mayo, the 12. of July, 1586. with his owne garrison forces, which were 100. footmen, and 50. horsmen, and came to Billinrobe the 14. day of the sayd moneth: here he spent fiue or seuen dayes, as well in parleying with the said Burks, as also in gathering of his whole forces together, hither came to him the Earle of Clanricard with 30. horsmen, and one hundred kearne, also many gentlemen of the Country came by ther, namely the Lord Bremingham, Lord Wilton of Athenrie, Sir Thobbert M. Dary, Knight, Teig Okelley, and diuers others: hither also came in the supply of forces which he had leyed within the Prouince, viz. a hundred footmen of Captaine Mordaps, a hundred footmen vnder Captaine Merriman, and a hundred footmen vnder Captaine Mollean, besides diuers companies of light Kearne, to the number of 1200 seuen hundred: and then hauing imployed the Earle of Clanrickard, the Archbishop of Cham, Bishop of Kilmore, the Lord Bremingham, Thomas Dillon, Iustice of the Prouince and others, in parlying with the Burkes one day, and finding that no reasons nor perswasions might win them to peace, he executed certaine of their pledges, which they before had put in for their loyalty and good behauiour (for it appeared to this politique and wise Gentleman Sir Richard Bingham, that the sparing of rebels pledges heretofore, had done no small hurt in this Realme, by encouraging them to ill actions, trusting vpon the accustomed mercy shewed to the like pledges) and then he marched to the Abbey of Kallentubber, the 20 and twentieth of July: and from thence hee sent his forces of footmen, and Kearne, into the mountaines, and woods, to seeke the rebels in their fastnesse, which aforesayd forces was led by Captain Iohn Bingh in who had the charge of the garrison band, which behaued himselfe so well therein, that within the space of fiue or seuen weekes, they all submitted themselues to the State: himselfe with the Earle of Clanrickard, and the horsemen kept the champaine and plaine Country, as well for the defence of her Maiesties good subiects in those parts, as also to keepe the enemy from escaping away from the forces sent into their sayd fastnesse. About this time there came an espiall out of Mounster, being sent, if it were as he said, as a messenger from those parts, to Francis Barckley prouost Marshall of Connaught. This espiall, the meze to encourage the traitors, and to animate others to ioyne with them, gaue it foorth that the Earle of Leicester was dayne in the Low Countries, and the most of the English forces ouerthrowne there: that there were two great armies of Spaniardes landed in England, and that there was a great fleete of Spanish ships in Baltimore, that the King of Scots was in armes against her Maiestie, and that her Highnesse was sicke, and in great danger of death: vpon which wntrue seditious rumor and report, Sir Richard caused the Author and messenger thereof, being a bad runnagate, to be executed by martiall law. And now the footmen within the mountains, and himselfe in the champaine, so hunted the Burkes and their accomplices from place to place, that within the space of three weekes they beganne to be tame and they had taken from them in that time, the number of foure or fiue thousand head of cattell, whereof Sir Richard Bingham reserued towards the defraying of the extraordinary charges of the iourney, the number of one thousand. All the rest were bestowed on the Captaines and their companies, and the officers of the field as bootie, according to the custome in this Countrey seruices, or else giuen to the Kearne and light footmen, as a consideration of their entertainments, which thereupon were discharged and dismissed from that seruice. Besides the depriuing these rebells of their cattell, as aforesayd, there were slaine of them to the number of 5. or 6. score of all sorts. The rest in short time after diuided themselues, flying from cane to cane, from one greene of wood to another, where they might best hide themselues, sending in messengers to the Governor to beseech him of mercy and pardon, offering to submit themselues with all humblenes. Hereupon it was when they were thus broken, that the Governor discharged the Kearne he had, as aforesayd, together with all Irish horsemen of seuerall parts of the Prouince, contenting all of them either with some proportion of the preyes and bootes gotten, or else with his owne money, his owne horsemen and footmen, and the three bands of supplies aforesayd, he stayed from the seruice for a space, as well to refresh them, as also to giue time and leane to the enemies, to come in freely without feare, which otherwise would haue possessed them, had the forces beene still vp and downe the woods. This being done, they submitted themselues one after another, in sort following. Videlicet Ewster M. Donell, chiefe of the Gallowglasses came in, submitted himselfe, and put in his sonne pledge for himselfe and his sept; the next, Edmund Burke, M. Richard Euerarne, one of the strongest amongst them, came to the last M. Williams one, came in and submitted himselfe, giuing in his sonne as pledge: after whom William Burke alias the blind Abbot, the chiefe of that surname, Edmond Burke of Castle Barry being dead, which claimed to be M. William, submitted himselfe very humbly, offering one of his sons as pledge. But (for that Sir Richard liked not the son that he offered, but demanded his eldest sonne whom he knew to bee a good pledge) he departed againe, yet within two dayes after, when he saw the Governor would haue sent in his forces amongst them againe, he came to him, submitted himselfe, and brought his eldest sonne for a pledge: Meyler Oge Burke, submitted himselfe. The Ieies did in like manner submit themselues, and also Richard Burke, alias the Deuils Hookes sonne, all these gaue in good pledges for the obseruation of the peace. These men vpon their submission, were so pined away for want of feode, and so ghastled with feare within seuen or eight weekes, by reason they were so rounde followed, without any interime of rest, that they looked rather like to ghests then men, Edmond Burkes sonnes of Castle Barry persisted still in the action. Their father was the man whom they sought to haue made M. William, till he was executed by course of the common law. This man was very olde, yet he was put to death for these causes ensuing: he was a notable traytor, and the incouragor of his sons to this action, during whose life, both they, and he

he had a hope he should be M. William. To the end therefore they should bee carryed away no longer with the deceitfull wings of this vaine hope, and so the sooner deawne to submission, he was indicted, arraigned, condemned, and executed, as in like cases is accustomed. The Governor might haue hanged him by martiall law, but rather made choice to haue it orderly done, as aforesayd, to the end her Maiesty might haue his lands by escheat vpon his attainder (for he had a good quantity of land.) After this the sayd sons of Edm. Burke (seeing their father and in him all their hope dead) offered to submit themselues, so as they might haue enioyed their fathers lands. But herein the Governor referred them to the resolution of the Lord Deputy and Councell, to be further heard in that point, which they somewhat liked of, and then they offered the eldest brothers sonne as pledge: but the Governor refused to take any child or other pledge, saueing one of those brethren, which were in number, 6. or 7. but that they vtterly denied to doe: whereby it was well perceiued, they carried very bad intentions. At this time, whilest these men stood thus vpon the punch of submitting them, newes came to the Governor, that 2000. Scots came ouer the riuer of Barne, toward Sligo, with Edmond Kerragh Burke, and Iohn Ieleaue, who were sent by the Burkes their kinsmen, as you haue heard before, to draw in those Scots, for the better defence of their quarrell, which Scots were promised by the Burkes, that they should inhabite the Countrey, so as they would banish out the Englishmen, and defend the sayd traytors. These newes hindred a thyough pacification within the county of Mayo: neuerthelesse, this prudent and circumspect Governor, Sir Richard Bingham, hee using already reuiued and hyought things there to so good a state, as before is said, dispatched the Earle of Clanrickard, with 30. or 40. horsmen, and 2. bands of footmen, sending also presently after them another band of footmen, all which ioyned with George Bingham, Esquire, brother to the said Sir Ric. who was then sheriffe of the County of Sligo, and leuied there some shot, and horsemen, before the comming of the sayd forces. These companies being thus united, stood vpon guard and defence of the borders of the Prouince, which caused the Scots not to make so much and so great hast to come forwards, as otherwise they would haue done. Sir Richard stayed in the County of Mayo a small time after the sending away of his sayd companies, of purpose to order things there more effectually, for the defence of the Country, and for the prosecution of those few bad Burks which yet continued in action against her Maiestie: which being done in such good sort as the danger and necessity of the time could afford, he then set forwards towards Sligo, with an hundred footmen, and 25. horsemen that were remayning with him: but vpon his setting forth, hee had newes hyought him, that the Scots were deawne thyough O Rowrks Country into the Dalwghery, or plaines by Rosomon to pyey and spoyle the same, by meanes whereof, he rode a great dayes iourney, and came that night neere to Rosomon, and lay that night 4. miles from it, from whence (vnderstanding contrary that the Scots were betweene Sligo and Boundpois) he rode the next day to the towne of Sligo, being well-nigh three score English myles, but the footmen hee left to march alway after him, with as much conuenient speed as they might. His high way was to passe by the Abbey of Boyle, where he found Sir Thomas Lestrange, and other the risings out of the Country, whom he had appointed to lye there for the defence of the Country of Rosomon, hee left them there for that time, and so came to Sligo the eight and twentieth of August. At his comming thither he was giuen to vnderstand that the Scots lay still incamped at the Carne, some on the one side, and some on the other side, to the number of so many as before hee was aduertised, with some increase of horsemen and footmen, for Sir Arthur Oneale, and Hugh M. Gwyyer, male 4 had hyaded hym with some forces, so as their MacGwyer forces was now about 2000. as it was sayd, of able men, besides women, boyes, and churles, of the Scots whereof they had great hope: I take it there are many more, with great hope of carriages. The forces between comming of Sir Richard to Sligo, and the newes of the pacification within the Countie of Mayo, made them stay long about the Carne and Boundpois, either to expect more forces to come and ioyne with them, or some new broyles to be raised in the Country behind the Governor by their confederats, which might cause him to diuide his forces, which were then 400. English, and Irish, and about 300. horsemen, besides the risings out of the Country, which were about a hundred horsmen, and two hundred Kearne: a force far too weake to haue encountred with the Scots, except they might haue bin gotten in a champaine ground. To which like place of disaduantage they had no intention to come, for of the 400 the Governor had 300. which were Irish, and for the most part, men but newly trained. He wrote to the Lord Deputy, to send him 2. other bands of 50. horsemen, for that there was no trust in the Irish horsemen, which horsemen and footmen (if they had come sooner then they did) had either cleane discouraged, or sufficiently withdrawn the Scots from comming into the Prouince at all. Sir R. lay at Sligo and the foot of the Curlewes with his sayd forces fronting the Scots, & withstanding their entry into the Country (expecting still a supply from the L. Deputy) the space of 14. dayes: the Scots drawing on by little and little, thyough O Rowrks country vpon mountaines, woods and bogs, towards the Curlewes, with intention to passe that wayes into Mayo, encamped euer in such fastnesse, as he could not by any meanes come at them, without great disaduantage. At the length although Sir Rich. kept the passage straightly vpon them (for the watching of which he was driuen to diuide his companies into sundry places, for distant from each other) yet in an ereceding tenle tempestuous, and darke night, they deceiued him, for after he had watched, and waited for their comming till 10. of the clocke at night, hearing before night, that they had remoued their camp, and were rather going backe againe, then comming towards him: he left to watch abroad any longer, & bestowed himselfe and his companies in places of succo, which he did, supposing that (by reason of the abundance of raine which fell that euening) their long absence till that time of the night, and the woods of Oceonnor Sligo, which allured him that the sayd Scots had incamped themselues againe for that night. But shortly after this, when the Scots by reason of some espialls of their owne, or some traiterous intelligence out of the Gouernors camp, had vnderstanding that Sir Richard and his company had reposed themselues to rest, stale towards the bridge of Killowney, more to which at a Castle not far off, Sir Ric. for the defence thereof, had placed his footemen, and fifty Irish hoselemen, and so hauing come priuily to the bridge 3. or 4. hundred of them gate ouer the same, before the English footmen came at them: who, as soone as they came in, beat the Scots backe, and wan the bridge. But here the Irish hoselemen did no seruice at all: when the alarum was, Sir Rich. himselfe was at a place called Knockmulleyn, about a mile from the bridge, being also another passage, where it was thought, the Scots would sooner haue passed ouer, then at the bridge. At this place the bridge was the only streight, and passage that Sir Rich. knew the Scots could find to passe ouer into the Country by: but they contrarily waded ouer at a ford not far from the bridge, neuer before known by any of the Country that had so would confesse the same to the English: Sir Rich. and the hoselemen, vpon the alarum hasted with great speede to the Bridge, and rode ouer the same without danger both of the enemie, and his own company (for the night was ereading darke) and the bullets and arrowes flew to and fro, without regard of any man that might march or ride betwixt them, and hauing passed the bridge (although the ground were ill for hoselemen to serue on) yet he charged the Scots, and killed and drowned about 40. or 50. of them. The most part of his hoselemen here failed him, some, because they were far off, & the said Irish forces he remained with his owne ordinary companies into the barrony of Dyserach, which he chiefly did for to saue the pray of that Country which was great: he left the great mountaines of Slowgarry on the left hand, which were before on his right, and marched downe eight myles into the said Barronie, consisting of plaine ground with some bog in it of twenty myles in length, lying all along by the sea. In the same he came to a towne or village called Ardoglasse, where he camped the second night, and hauing intelligence by espiall, that the enemie lay on the other side of the mountaines, not far from an Abbey called Dawneda, in marueilous fast and strong ground he tooke with him good guidethip, hee passed the said mountaines with his forces, and encamped that night at Oconnor, a towne of the Bishop of O Harres, & this being here, he gaue it forth in policy, that the enemy was marching vp thzogh Gallen toward the inner and ciuill countrys, as the Lord Brereinhams Countrey, & the County of Roscomon. And thereupon he hasted by great daies march, to a Castle called Spogary, which stood in a streight, and in a fit and apt place to answere the seruice vpon them, if they had passed into the sayd Countries. Sir Ric. did this to draw the Scots into an assured belieefe of their owne security, to win such aduantage of ground of them, as afterwards was gotten, for vpon the newes of Sir Rich. returning backe, they grew somewhat careleste, and perswaded themselues (as also they were informed) that he was returned home to Roscomon, and durst not by reason of his small forces, encounter with them, as after shall appeare well, Lying at Spogary, the munday at 3. of the clock afternoone, newes was brought him from his Brother George Bingham, that an hundred footmen of master vice-president, vnder the conduct of Lieutenant Hane, had passed the Curlewes, whereupon the Gouernour dispatched messengers to them: whereupon they came vnto him the same night. The morrow after being Tuesday, he removed to a Castle called Castle Poze, in the barony of Costellogh, 5. miles from Spogary, and a place as commodious to answere the service, as the other was. There came in to him 100. footmen, of sir Wil. Stanleis, vnder the conduct of Lieutenant Iaques & 50. of sir George Bowchers footmen, vnder the leading of Lieutenant Day, with 25. hosemen of sir Henry Haringtons, and 15. of master Wingfields. These men were brought in by Captaine Gren Omoloy, whom he had sent forth for that purpose 6. or 7. dayes before. Lying here, sir Richard and his company were in some distresse for want of victuals, but he was supplyed by Captaine Woodhouse, who brought him some boxes out of the plaine and champion countries. At this place sir R. with his companies, lay tuesday and wednesday till none, for it was long before the boxe was killed and made ready to sustaine them. By that time the spyals which were before sent forth to discouer the enemy, returned, bringing newes that at their last remoue from Clamary, they tooke their way toward Ardnary, a Castle neere to Strawly, and standing on the riuer of Boine, thinking to passe that way into the Barrony of Trawly. This being knowne, sir Rich. dealt with his guide, to bring him the nereest way he could thither. At twelue of the clocke at none vpon Wednesday afore sayd, he removed from Castle Poze, and marched towards the Abby of Dawned, all vnder the high woods and mountaines, through a place called the Litter, in the Barony of Costellogh, and came to the said Abbey, two houres within night. The Abby stands two miles from the woods, in a plaine and open place: here the guide whose name was Edmond Mac Costellogh found out a Priest which had that day broken from the Scots, with whom he had beene prisoner. The Priest the sayd Edmond brought to the gouernor, of whom he learned most assuredly, that the Scots were all encamped at Ardnary, and had there proclaimed that all the Country was theirs, that sir Rich. was returned to Roscomon, and that all his forces had forsaken him, and therefore vnlesse they would willingly come vnto them, they should be friendly receiued to their fauour, and haue no hurt. Sir Richard dealt with this Priest to be his guide, to bring him where the Scots were: but the Priest durst not vndertake it, except a couple of hosemen of the O Harres, which he named, might be sent with him: the gouernour willed him to fetch the two gentlemen of the O Harres, which he did, & returned to him again an houre after midnight. Those two gentlemen sent away two espialls, to discouer the Scots more certainly, and about three of the clocke in the morning the moone gaue light, sir Richard and all his company, marched towards Ballelane some miles from the Abbey, in the high way towards the enemie: here one of these spials came in, bringing newes, that the Scots lay still incamped at Dawned, which was 12. miles from the aforesaid Abby of Dawned, & 8. miles from the Abby of Ballelane. At this marching from hence, the night forsooke him and his company, and they forsooke the high way, and marched ouer the mountaines, both hosemen and footmen, with all their carriages, carrying them with a hearce also for ease, keeping the bottoms and lowe places by certaine couert wayes, with as great silence as was possible. This mountaine was in breadth, some fiue miles, which sir Rich. with his forces past about nine of the clocke. In order he had marched a mile into the said groues, and were not about two miles from the enemie, he made alte to bring all his forces together, and there gaue order and direction for the fight. First he appointed himselfe with his hosemen, rode towards the enemie, & left the footmen to follow after, with a speedy march. Sir Rich. with his horsemen being now come within a flight shot of the Scots Campe, sent out halfe a dozen of horsemen, as scouts aforesayd to discouer them, and the manner of their Campe, which had taken vp many their cabbins, and gaue them a volant and peaceefull alarum, and so returned to sir Rich. who that time came to the top of the hill neare to them, where he might take view of all the ground betweene him and the Castle where the Scots lay. Now he sent a man to post after part of the battell, and the last shot to come in to him, for the enemy was set on and armed in battell aray in the land betweene him, in their greatest strength: Sir Rich. entertained them with flattering speeches a while, and drawe them by degrees to high ground, till the footmen might come in, who approched with such silence, that the Scots neuer suspected any such companies to be at hand: when the shot began to approch them, Sir Rich. charged them roughly and thoroughly with his horsemen, but backe their loue comings to their battell, gaue them to a little bogge, and killed many of them. After which he againe retired, and caused some of his shot on horsebacke to alight from their horses, and there withall entertained them with a second charge, about which time, his last shot and the whole battell of footmen came in, and then the footmen charged them in the forward, and himselfe with his horsemen in the flanke, in such sort, that they soone discomfited & ouerthrew their whole force, and draue them to the riuers side, where hand his company slue and drowned them all sauing fourescore, or thereabouts, which stripped them cleane, and by swimming ouer the riuer of Boine, into Strawly, saued themselues, leauing their weapons and apparell behind them. There were no more saued of all their forces, and of all sorts of them but three and a 100. and so, that vnder the day before into Strawly for a prey with some of the Burkes. But such as swam ouer the riuer, as aforesayd, were afterwards killed in their returne, and fleing towards the North, in the County of Sligo, by George Bingham Esquire, brother to the gouernor beeing then cheefe of the County of Sligo, together with the helpe of the Gentlemen of the Countrey, diuers also of them which were absent for this sayd pray, whilest the battell was fought, and certaine of their hosemen, which were then also forraying abroad for horse meat, were all seuerally slaine in their returne, and the sayd hosemen, euen by some such as when friends. the same had formerly and were strong, were their speciall friends. The number of fighting men slaine & put to flight, as hath bin well knowne and tried out, were of all sorts one hundred, besides boyes and lookboyes women, churles, and children, more as in my mind, to as in the whole, there died of them that day, and the day after in flying homewards, three thousand persons, & all of the Sligh companies were not slaine, but ouer persons, and those also through their owne follies in running two seuerall wayes for the people, but in my mind 40 boyes were hunt and galled. This day the cheefest leaders of them, James Mac Conmara sonne, viz. Daniel Oconnor, and Alexander Oconnor, were slaine, together with all the rest of their leaders, and the cheefest Burkes which drew them into the Prouince. In this fornier warres was slayne Sir Richard Bingham, Captaine of 100. footmen. Nicholas Martin, Captaine of the like number, Captaine Mac Gwire, one of the like company, William Mac Sweeny Captaine of the like number, besides the Gentlemen aforesayd rehearsed, sent from the Lord Deputy, and certaine leaders of hosemen. And besides Captaine Woodhouse, Captaine Green, which had no charge, and S. Newton, & Captaine Bingham, which had charge of some hosemen, and the whole company were in name, about 600. footmen, and by poll about 500. besides 90. hosemen, whereof diuers were of the garrison of the Prouince, and the other forty were sent by the Lord Deputy. This ouerthrow was great, and the paines and policies therein taken and vsed great, but the seruices in deed, the which is trouble to the Country, which by vnmeet greater: but the more will care and industry of the Gouernor & his seruices, which continued out in it 13. or 14. dayes together, not once comming home to his house in that time, and fareing harshly, and lying on the ground, and on straw a great part of the sayd time, was to be noted mended and in him highly commended. Yea euer and anone all this, although he erected three seuerall companies of footemen, each of them consisting of a hundred men with their officers, and certaine horsemen which continued in pay during all the sayd time besides fiue or six hundred kearne, which also had pay euer and anone her Maiesties allowance, yet he to hands-led the matter, that with the goods of rebels, which by strong hand he got from them, and with 3. or 4. hundred pound of his money, hee defrayed the extraordinary expences of the sayd seruices, not charging her Maiestie with any one great thereof, or any of the subiects of the Country, either for victuals, or any other thing, other then some small matter, which the kernes out brought, or which soldiers in coming to him, or going from him gate, where they came for a night or two, gaue charged him selfe in this case (that being fearfull of powder from her Maiesties store in Dublin) hee was driuen to fiumish himselfe thereof for his ready money in Calleray. Lastly, this seruice was such as prouoked and enforced all the old beaten Scots, which vsed to haunt Ireland, inhumanly that now it is said there are not scarce such to beare vp head in all that realme of Ireland, to the great behoofe and comfort of the same, to the great ease and benefit of her Maiestie, and to the eternall commendations of this worthy Gentleman Sir Richard Bingham for euer.

The ouerthrow of the Scots.

In the meeuen of July there was treacherous practises were apprehended, and detected of a most wicked and detestable conspiracie against her Maiestie, and also of minding to haue stirred vp a generall rebellion throughout the whole Realme, to ioy of whose apprehension the Citizens of London on the fifteenth of the same moneth at night and on the next morrow caused the bells in the Churches to be rung, and bone-fires in their streets to be made, and also banquetted euery man according to his ability, some in their houses, some in the streets with singing of Psalmes, and praising God for preserving her Highnesse, and people of this land, which doings of the Citizens were so well accepted of her Maiestie, as by her letters to them directed may appeare, the copy whereof being read openly in a great assembly of the Commons in the Guild hall of that City, the 22. of August, before the reading whereof, master Iames Dalton one of the Comissellers of the City, in the absence of the Recorder, made this speech hereafter following, but first her Maiesties letters.

Great reioycing for the apprehending of traytors.

To our right trusty and welbeloued, the Lord Maior of our City of London, and his brethren the Aldermen of the same.

The Citizens letters to the Lord Maior of London.

Right trusty and welbeloued, wee greete you well, being giuen to vnderstand, how greatly our good and most loyall subiects of that City did reioyce at the apprehension of certaine disloyall and wicked minded subiects of ours, that through the great and singular goodnesse of God haue beene detected, to haue most wickedly and traiterously conspired, not onely the taking away of our owne life, but also to haue ouer-throwen vp (as much as in them lay) a generall rebellion throughout our whole Realme: wee could not but by our owne letters witnesse vnto you the great and singular contentment we receiued vpon the knowledge thereof, assuring you that we did not so much reioyce at the escape of the intended attempt against our owne person, as to see the great ioy our most louing subiects tooke at the apprehension of the contriuers thereof, which to make their ioye more apparant, they haue (as we are to our great comfort informed) omitted no outward shew, that by any externall act might witnesse to the world, the inward loue and dutifull affection they beare toward vs. And as we haue as great cause with all thankefulnesse to acknowledge Gods great goodnesse towardes vs, though the infinite blessings he layeth vpon vs, as many as euer Prince had, yea rather as euer creature had: yet do we not for any worldly blessing receiued from his diuine Maiesty, so greatly acknowledge the same, as in that it hath pleased him to inclyne the hearts of our subiects, euen from the first beginning of our Raigne, to carie as great loue towards vs as euer subiects carryed towards any Prince, which ought to moue vs (as it doth in very deed) to take with all care, and by all good meanes that appertaine to a Christian Prince, the conformation of so louing and dutifull affected subiects: assuring you that we desire no longer to liue, then while wee may in the whole course of our government carry our selfe in such sort, as may not only nourish and continue their loue and good will towards vs, but also increase the same: we thinke meete, that these our letters should bee communicated in some generall assembly to our most louing subiects the commoners of that Citie.

Giuen vnder our signet at our Castle of Windsor the 17. of August 1586. in the 28. yeare of our Raigne.

Right worshipfull my good friends, my Lord Maior and citizens of this noble City of London: since the late hainie and horrible attempt of most wicked and traitorous conspiracie, not onely to take away the life of our most gracious Soueraigne (whom God grant long to liue and raigne ouer vs) but also to stir vp a generall rebellion throughout the whole Realme: the great and vnmeasurable ioy of you all of this Citie, vpon the apprehension of diuers of the most wicked conspiracy, as late declared & testified by many outward acts and shewes, hath wrought in the Queenes most excellent Maiestie such a gracious contentment, that it hath mooued her Highnes by her letters signed with her owne hand, to signifie vnto the Lord Maior and his brethren, her most Noble and Princely acceptation thereof, that in such sort as there by may appeare, that her Highnes hath not more, nor yet so much reioyced at the most happy escape of the wicked mischiefe intended against her owne person, as at the ioy which her louing subiects, and namely you of this Citie of London, take at the apprehension of the practisers of that intended treason. By occasion whereof her Highnesse brought to a thankefull remembrance and acknowledging of Gods infinite blessings bestowed vpon her, comparable with with any Prince of our age in the world, no worldly thing more to be accounted of, then of the hearty loue of her louing and faithfull subiects, in my wayes and in my times before now, but especially by this our great ioy in this sort at this time, and vpon this occasion shewed.

And that her exceeding great loue, and acceptation of our reioycing may the more appeare vnto you, it hath pleased her Highnesse in the same Letters to declare, that she desireth not longer to liue among vs, then she shall maintaine, continue, nourish, and increase the loue and good will of her subiects towards her. And this her highnes hath willed to be made known vnto you all, with this, that she will not faile with all care, and by all good meanes that appertaine to a Christian Prince, to seeke the conseruation of you all, to louing and dutifull affected subiects. This her Maiesties pleasure in part now declared, and more to bee made knowne to you by her owne Letters, which you shall heare read: my Lord Maior and his brethren haue required me to declare vnto you all, that they doe highly reioyce and thanke God for the happy day of the good acceptation of this your great ioy, and my Lord himselfe hath willed me to giue you all hartythanks in his name, for that in the time of his seruice, your dutifull behaniours haue gotten to the City so noble and worthy a testimony of duty and loyalty, of so noble and worthy a Queene. Now forasmuch as Gods blessings wonderfully abound, and one ioy comes vpon another, let vs not be vnthankefull to God, but acknowledge his goodnesse, and attribute the same (as indeede we ought) to the sincere religion of Almighty God, most godly established by the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, which hath taught vs to know God aright, our duty to our Soueraigne, and to loue our Country, and hath made vs dutifull and obedient subiects, reioycing at all good things happening to her Maiestie, her Realme, or to any in her noble seruice, the true effects of a true and good religion: whereas the contemners thereof, and immoderate affecters of the Romish religion, and superstitions, being wyde of the true knowledge of God, haue declined from God, their allegeance to their Prince, their loue to their Country, and haue become inuentors of mischiefes, hunters and spreaders abroad of false and seditious rumors, such as ioy at no good thing, but contrariwise reioyce at euery cruell successe, the badges and markes of their profession, who haue before this, in this Realme, and in other her Highnes Dominions, stirred vp rebellion, foraine inuasion, and many times practised the very death, and destruction of the Queene her selfe, the ruine and subuersion of the whole Realm, the proper effects of their Romish religion. Who haue beheld all these things, and seene in our dayes the ruine and mischiefes inuented against others, fall vpon the inuentors themselues: and haue knowne the wicked and violent hands of diuers of them, diuilishly to kill and murther themselues, when most trayterously they would, and most happily they could not slay the Lords annointed. As we haue knowne all these things, so God be thanked, that by a better religion, hauing beene better taught, we haue beene no partakers of their wicked deuises, but haue put to our helping hands, as occasion hath serued, and euer ready to ouerthrow the authors and deuisers thereof. And I haue no doubt, but we of this noble City, who hitherto haue beene alwayes ready dutifully, and faithfully to serue her Maiesty vpon all occasions, (her Highnesse now so graciously accepting only of our reioycing at the apprehension of her enemies, euen the least part of the duetie of a good subiect to so good a Queene) will be ready euery one with all that he can make, and with the vttermost aduenture of all our liues, speedily to be reuenged vpon all such as shall disorderly, and traiterously attempt, or put in vre any mischiefe to her Noble person, and in the meane time will haue a better eye, and care to all suspitions and mislontented persons, to their sayings and doings, to their false bruits, and reports, to the places and corners of their haunt and resort, to their harborers, companions, abbers, and maintainers.

God vphold and continue his religion among vs, and increase our zeale thereon. Which hath made vs so louing and loyall, and so beloued, and acceptable subiects to so worthy a Prince, and roote out that wicked and Romish religion, that hath made so many disloyall and traiterous subiects: to whom is both owing and likewise the long life and prosperous Raigne of our most Noble Queene Elizabeth. God confound all such Traytors, and preserue her Highnes, long to liue and Raigne ouer vs.

The 7. of Septemb. certaine of these diuelish and wicked traitors were indicted: first, for intending treason against the Queenes owne person: secondly, for stirring ciuill mars within the Realme, and thirdly, for practising to bring in forraine power, to inuade the Realme, seuen of them appeared at Westminster, on the 13. of September, who all pleaded guilty, and were condemned, but had iudgement on the next morrow. On the 15. of September, other 7. were likewise arraigned, who pleading not guilty, were found guilty by the Iury, and had iudgement.

Traytors executed.

These traytors, 14. in number, were executed in Lincolnes Inne fields, on a stage or scaffold of timber, strongly made for that purpose, euen in the place where they had vsed to meete, and conferre of their traiterous practises, there were they hanged, bowelled, and quartered, seuen of them on the 20. of September, to wit, Iohn Ballard, Preest, Anthony Babington, Esquire, Iohn Sauage Gentleman, R. Barnwell Gentleman, Chidiocke Tichborne, Esquire, Charles Tiney, Esquire, Hir. Abington, Esquire. The other 7. were likewise executed on the 21. of September, to wit, Thomas Salsbury, Esquire, Henry Dun, Gentleman, Edward Iones, Esquire, Iohn Trauerse Gentleman, Charnocke Gentleman R. Gage, Gentleman, & rom Bellamie, Gentleman, &c.

The Merchants of London, being of the corporation

poration of the Turkie trade, intending onely a merchants voyage, prouided and furnished with all things belonging to the Seas, fiue tall and stout ships appertaining to London, to wit, the Merchant Royall, the Tobie, the Edward Bonauenture, the William and John, the Susan: these fiue departing from the coast of England, in the moneth of November, 1585. kept together as one fleete, till they came as high as the Ile of Sicilie, within the Leuant, where each ship tooke leaue of the rest, and separated themselues to particular ports, whereunto they were bound, one for Tripolis in Syria, another for Constantinople, and the rest to other places: but before they diuided themselues, they agreed, after the landing of their goods at their seuerall ports, to meete at Zante, an Iland neere to the maine, continent of the west part of Morea. These accordingly (their businesse first performed) failed not to keepe promise, and arriued at Zante, within the compasse of the time afore limitted, here they staid in this port, till the necessities of each ship were supplied, and nothing wanted to set out for their retoure. In this port the newes was fresh of two seuerall armies and fleets, lying in a wait to intercept them, the one consisting of thirty strong gallies, and that fleete hoouered about the Straits of Gibraltare. The other army had in it, twenty gallies, whereof some were of Sicilie, and some of the Iland of Malta, vnder the charge of Iohn Andreas Doreo, a captaine seruing the King of Spaine. The Persheant Royall was appointed Admirall of the English fleete, and the Tobie vice-admirall, by whose orders the rest promised to be directed, and each ship vowed not to breake from the other. Thus in good order they left Zante, and committed themselues to the Seas, and proceeded in their course without sight of any enemie, till they came neere to Pantalarea, an Iland betweene Sicily and the coast of Affricke, into the sight whereof they came the 13. of July, and the same day, they discryed thirteene sayles, 11. gallies, and two frigots lying in wayte for them. As soone as the English ships had espyed them, they made themselues ready to fight, the gallies more and more approched them, and in their banners the armes of Sicilia, and Malta: they sent their frigots to our Admirall, demaunding of him, whence they were: who answered, of England: they asked why they durst to send or come to Don Pedro de Luna their generall, to acknowledge their dutie to him in the name of the Spanish King, Lord of those Seas: our men replyed, that they ought no such duty to him, nor would acknowledge any: Whereupon, in the end the fight began betweene them, and continued very hote for the space of fiue houres, what slaughter was made among the Spaniards, the English were vncertaine: but they supposed the same to bee so great, that they wanted men to continue the charging of their peeces: whereupon with shame they withdrew themselues, and the Englishmen contented in respect of their seuerall lading, rather to continue their voyage, then to follow the chase, ceased from further blowes, with the losse onely of two men slaine, and one other hurt in the arme, whom when maister Edward Wilkenson Captaine of the Admirall, with his good word did so comfort, that he nothing esteemed the smart of his wound, in respect of the honor of such a victory, and shamefull repulse of the enemie. The English ships proceeded in their navigation as high as Algier, a port Towne vpon the coast of Barbary, where they refreshed themselues, and tooke such supply of fresh water and victuals, as they needed, and put to the Sea, looking to meete with the second army of the Spanish King, which waited for them about the mouth of the Streight of Gibaltare, which they were of necessitie to passe: but comming neere to the sayd streight, it pleased God to raise a very darke fog, so that one ship could not discerne another, by meanes whereof, together with the large Casterne winde that then blew, they passed with great speede through the streight: but yet the Spanish gallies had a sight of them, when they were come within three English miles of the Towne, and made after them in all hast possible, but in vaine: they shot off their ordinance in the Sea, as if they had bin in the middest of them. But thus it pleased God to deride and delude all the forces that King of Spaine had prouided to distresse the English, who notwithstanding passed through both his Armies: in the one little hurt, and in the other nothing touched, and arriued at Crith the eighteenth of September, in the yeare of our Lord, 1586.

Now to returne to the seruice of the Lowe Countries, done by his excellencie and other vnder his charge, after the yeelding of the strong fort of Menegan, which was on the twentieth of May, as ye haue heard before: it followeth, &c. that on the 21. of May, his Excellency returned to Arnam, and there soiourned. On the 22. of May, there passed towards Barrikes hoofe 11. or 12. hundred men most brauely furnished of our English nation. The 25. of May, was brought before Barrikes hoofe fourteene Canons, which shot at the fconce that day, and on the next morrow in the morning was the same fconce yeelded to his Excellencie, the souldiers putting themselues to his mercy, who pardoned them, and let them passe with life only. In this fconce were found aliue, about sixty persons, the rest were slaine in the siege. At the yeelding of this fconce, County Hollocke found one of his Cousins, which when he beheld, he sayd, Ha villaine, art thou become a traytor to thy Country, and his Excellency, I auouch, that thou art none of my blood, and with his rapier thrust him in and slew him.

The 24. day of May, the enemy played before Graue with their ordinance, and presently assailed it, but they of the town being led by the County Embrigh did repulse them so sufficiently, that the enemie lost neere a 1000. men.

On Whitsunday, Peregrine Bartie, Lord Willoughby of Eresby, lying at Bergenapsone vnderstanding of a great conuoy that was coming to Antwerpe, set vpon it, and tooke it, Antwerpe, there there were of wagons 480. laden with victuals, oyle, salt, and wine taken, which had to draw those wagons, a thousand mares, and horses, there were 200. men slaine by our horsmen and footemen, and 400. taken prisoners that were sent with the conuoy to haue the defence thereof. The Lord Willowby tooke a thousand wagons into his Towne of Bargenapsome, and burned the rest, and for the salt, oyle, and wine, hee broke vp the heads of the vessels, and let them bee spoyled.

Barikes hoofe fconce ouerthrowne.

The 30. of May, sir Iohn Noris was sent to take order for the ouerthrowing of Barkes hoofe fconce, which was done, for that it was thought not meete to be kept with men, his Excellency hauing the fconce at Nemegan that kept the riuer of Wall, and the fconce made by Skinke at Thelhouse, kept both the riuer of Wall and the Reine, for that this fconce bardeth at the entrance of these two great Riuers: And for that his Excellency had Arnam fconce at the toyning together of Yell Reyne, and Dowsborough riuers. In this meane time, to wit, on the 26. of May, the enemy spared no shot to annoy the Towne of Graue, but thundred with Canons, as it had beene musket or caliuer. He had at it 28. canons, 20. smaller peeces as Culuerings, and demy-canons, &c. The Graue of Embrycke, seeing the assault to be so hot, and fearing the event (although hee had written to his Excellency, that hee should not care for Graue, but goe about his other businesse. On the 27. of May, entred parley with the enemie, and presently let in his souldiers, which hauing certaine Englishmen and others, more faithfull then the rest, straight take a place of strength, and kept without victuals three dayes in despight of their enemies, and after seeing no way to be relieued, they departed by composition. And thus was the strong Towne of Graue lost, by the County Embrough who after came to Vsdon, sent for foure of the Burgesses of the Towne, for what purpose was not knowne, but thought to perswade them to betray the Towne, but three of them returned, the fourth not found, but thought to be with the Prince of Parma. As for the County Embrough, as he was walking with three or foure other Captaines of Graue, hee was with foure other Captaines surprised by some of our side, and brought to his Excellency, on the second of June, to Bulkhurst, and were committed to prison.

Lord Willoughby tooke a conuoy at Antwerpe.

The last of May, his Excellency with his whole companies of souldiers and Gentlemen passed from Arnew to the camp before Nemegen, where his pauilion was pitched, and presently he sent 2000. men toward Tille, to keep the water from the enemies passage.

His Excellency remoueth from Arnew to Nemegan.

The fourth of June, his Excellency hauing sent Skinke, and Captaine Williams, with diuers other cosoners of horse and Gentlemen, towards Vendolo (for that the Prince of Parma had begunne to besiege it) came from the leagar at Nemegan to Tille, where hee rested that night. The Gouernor of Tille, called the Amon, being a man of great courage, and a Protestant, vsed the Prince of Parma in this sort, the Prince sending a Trumpet to parley with him, he straight waies without any talke hanged him vp. The Prince wondering hee heard not of his Trumpeter, sent a Drumme, to know what was become of him, vnto whom the Amon answered, your Trumpeter is hanged, and thou shalt bee drowned, and so it was done without any more words. This towne is situate in the Betto, whose ground is the most fertile of onely place of fertilitie in Guelderland. The towne is strong, the one side the Amon may at his pleasure drowne, the other is so strong, with ramparts, walls, and forters, that the Amon protesteth, that hee regardeth no Prince, no Princes power in the world. He hath halfe a score ships of war at his appointment, whereby he commandeth all the waters about him, he hath alwayes shewed a singular loue to our nation, especially to his Excellency, insomuch that hee vowed to keepe the Towne to his vse, so long as he liued.

Tille and the Amon there of his seuerall dealings with his excellency.

The 5. of June, his Excellency passed from Tille to Bomell, there was the Castle of the Warneborough, and for that hee tooke part with the Prince of Parma, his house was burnt and spoyled. The beauty of the Towne of Bomell is in two streets, crossing one the other, very large and fayre, at the crossing of which street there is a very faire Market place, the Towne is strong though little, and sufficiently appointed with ordinance, and munition.

The towne of Bomell. Warnes nere Castle spoyled.

It Kamdeth in an Iland very fertile and sweet, hauing such store of orchards, gardens, and other pleasures, as it passeth all others: on the top of the steeple of the Church in this towne, the Countrey doth so plaine about it, that one may see all these townes following, Nemegan, Wagaming, Arnam, Reyne, Weicke Colmbarough, Vtricke, Elana, Gurcom, Vsdon, Fatingbauselle, Graue, Tille, Hoarle Castle, and Baryn Castle.

Gurcom;

The 9. of June, his Excellency came from Bomell to Gurcom, downe the riuer Walle, leauing at Bomell, a garrison of three hundred Dutchmen, with those of the towne, who at the first could hardly be like the garrison, till they were perswaded by County Hollocke, passing toward the Towne. There was sixe or seuen Ensignes, of his Excellencies souldiers on the banke of the riuer, which did discharge their voles of shot, then was there on each side the riuer, a mighty fconce full of souldiers, which gaue their voles of shot, then ordinance of the towne went off: and entring the towne, he was entertained by the Burgesses, passing through the towne, on both sides were placed souldiers in great number. On the next morrow his Excellency went into the Castle of the Towne, which is maruellous strong. This Towne is very rich, for there are many rich Merchants, which passe to all partes of the world vsually. The riuer Walle, runneth through the middest of this Town, and the Riuers of Reine, and Mase, on each side. The Towne is very strong, so that round about the country may be drowned. His Excellency with his whole trayne were were here maruellously welcommed, and well vsed for victuall, lodging, &c. There is by this Towne another Towne of great force, called Wolcome, by the Caſtle of Lutten, this Wolcome is in greatnes but a village, but in ſituation and ſtrength, a thing of great importance: it ſtandeth in the ſame Iland that Lutton ſtandeth in. It is Graue Maurice his Towne, and kept his garriſon of ſouldiers.

Wolcome.

The 10. of June, a poſt came vnto his Excellency, from Cozonell Skinke, & Captaine Williams, with Letters: the effect whereof were, that the ſaid ſir Martin Skinke, and Captaine Williams, ſtaying not far from Venlo (which the Duke as then beſieged) and longing to ſhew the zeale they had of the ſeruice of her Maieſtie of England, ſet out with their horſemen in the night, all the Dutchmen for the moſt part forſaking them, ſo that with him was not aboue 160. horſes, with thoſe he ſet forward, killed the ſtill watch, and paſſing farther, killed alſo two Courts of guard fully appointed, and entring, by force, the quarter that the Prince of Parma was in, they killed a number of Noblemen, and Gentlemen: but in the returne the enemy well appointed ſet on our men, and ſcattered them, to ſome loſſe, but the greater ſort eſcaped: the ſkirmiſh being ended, and our men retiring, Captaine Williams was one of the hindermoſt of them all, and he eyed (being yet in the enemies campe) where is Williams where is Williams, and another anſwered, before, before, and thus he eſcaped.

The 13. of June, his Excellency went to Dort with a ſmall traine, where being come about fiue of the clock in the afternoone, the Burgers made him ſuch great cheare, as was thought to haue bin impoſſible for ſo ſhort a time of prouiſion. The fourteenth he tooke ſhip towards Vtricht from Dort, being wafted with an Hoy full of ſouldiers of the Towne.

The 22. of June, the enemy attayned Venlo, a towne of great importance and ſtrength, there was in this towne, not only the wife of Skinke, and his children, but alſo the treaſure, horſe, and (for the moſt part) the furniture that Skink had. This town had in it ſouldiers to the number of fiue or ſixe hundreth, all of Skinks men, well appointed, and braue ſouldiers.

Venlo loſt to the enemie.

The 23. of June, his Excellency paſſed to Colimbozough, about nine Engliſh miles from Vtricht, onely to viſite the Graue of Colimborough, where he dined, viewed the Towne, and returned to Vtricht, taking with him the ſayd Earle of Colimbozough.

The 29. of June, his Excellency paſſed from Vtricht to Dort. The 30. of June he removed from Dort, to Williams ſtate, or Ragon hill. The ſame day County Hollocke ouerthrew a cornet of horſe, belonging to Breda, with the helpe of maiſter Robert Sidneys cornet, ſir Philip Sidneys cornet and other. The ſayd County Hollocke practiſed to haue a conuoy paſſe from out of Brabant, to Bargenapſome, which the enemy being warned of by ſpies, that this conuoy was guarded but with ſome ſixteene or twenty horſe, the Gouernor of Breda ſent out his cornet or ſtrength of horſemen to this employt: but ſome few of them, beeing either afraid to meddle with our men, or doubting the true occaſion that happened, ſtayed behind the reſt, Captaine Welch an Engliſhman, which a great time had ſerued the enemie, had the leading of the horſe at Breda, but paſſing to this employt, County Hollocke with maiſter Robert Sidney beſet them round, which the enemy no ſooner perceiued, but yeelded, ſo there was taken Captaine Welch, and a thirty horſe, and as many men. The 31. of June, his Excellency early in the morning paſſed from Williamſtate to Bargenapſome, and about three of the clocke in the afternoone hee arriued there, and preſently paſſed to the ſtrong Caſtle of olde Bergenapſome. Wlaw: this Towne is in the entrance of Brabant, 20. Engliſh miles from Antwerpe, vpon the ſame riuer that Antwerpe ſtandeth. It is a Towne now almoſt ruinated, though before in the proſperity of it, it was not much inferior to Antwerpe, there are few people but ſouldiers, the Burgers forſaking their goodly builded houſes, are gone to other places. This Towne is ſubiect in two places to hills of firme ground, which are the places that make this Towne far weaker then otherwiſe it would be, yet wonderfully rampiered with bulwarkes, walls, and flankers in all places. The Lord Willoughby hath wonderfully enlarged the ſtrength of this Towne: further he hath made two very ſtrong bulwarkes in two places of the towne, at the hauen of the towne, and from the towne a ſight ſhot or more, are two mighty Sconces, which ſtand by the riuers ſide, which vnſeede are of more ſtrength then the Towne, and they are to command the Towne, and two Engliſh miles from the Towne ſtandeth a ruinated Towne in an Iland, and by this riuer, whoſe ſituation is ſuch, as for ſtrength it might bee made a braue place, for ayde and otherwiſe this Towne is called Romars ward, againſt the which ſtandeth a ſtrong Sconce, and ſo along the riuer to the towne ſtandeth diuers the like to command the riuer and paſſage to the Towne: the Caſtle before named, that his Excellency went to view, at his arriuall at this Towne, is alſo ſuch, as no reaſonable force can winne, allwayes once a yeare victualled, and manned afreſh, this Caſtle regardeth not the Cannon ſhot, it is ſo rampered. The firſt of July, his Excellency paſſed from Bargenapſome, to Suricksea, a Towne in Zeland, and in an Iland ſo called. In this Iland is another Towne called Brewers hauen, a very ſtrong Towne, this Iland is moſt fertile. The ſecond of July, his Excellency paſſed to Dort. And the ſame day paſſed from Bergenapſome, three thouſand men that were newly arriued to Stenbergen, a towne greatly nopous to the garriſon of Bergenapſome, for when they paſſed into Brabant vpon any eruoyt, they were letted by the ſouldeirs of this towne: this iourney was ſo cloſely kept, that our men ſhotte at the walles of Stenbergen ere any of that Towne knew for what cauſe ſo great a number of men were gathered.

The

Sir Philip Sidney entred Flanders.

The 3. of July, there entred into Flanders the Graue Maurice, the Prince of Spaines ſonne, and Sir Philip Sidney, Lord Gouernour of Flulhing with other, to the number of foure thouſand footmen, and three thouſand horſemen. The 4. of July Graue Maurice take on him to put the bankes of the Sea, to ouerwe the land of Walle, hauing with him two thouſand men, the reſt of the Army paſſed with ſir Philip Sidney into Flaunders, and ſurpriſed the Towne of Arell: there were ſlaine of ſouldiers of that Towne three hundred, beſides the Wonders that made reſiſtance, which were likewiſe ſlaine. This done, they came to Dampe or Dopre, a Towne of great importance, the ſame entred and take in it fiue hundred Boyes, which were kept to doe ſeruice, and to be ranſomed. Graue Maurice with his two thouſand men ſo plied the bankes, that in ſhort time hee had made it ſufficient for the water, not onely to enter, but to ouerwe all the Countrey, but the winde ſtred ſo contrary that no water to the purpoſe entred, at that time onely the bankes lay open. In the meane time our men take fiue ſconces, and put all to the ſword, that they found in them, and this was their entrance into Flaunders. The Towne of Arell is not far from Antwerpe, and about the ſame diſtance from Gaunt, and not fiue Engliſh miles from either: the land of Walle wherein this Towne ſtandeth, is the onely paradice of the Lande, and moſt fertile place of all other. The eight of July Graue Maurice returned to Middleborough, leauing all occaſions to Sir Philip Sidney Gouernour of Flulhing. The tenth of July, Cozonell Yorke brought to his Excellency to Dunhage, fiue Enſignes of the Enemies, all which were taken from the Enemie in the Towne of Arell and the Sconces.

The Sconces taken by the Engliſh.

In this meane time, to wit, on the ninth of July was Paulus Buce, a great ſtate, and a politique man, taken at Vtricke and put in priſon, and very ſhortly after was taken another named Peter Fabaſtine, and likewiſe committed to priſon. The 14. of July, his Excellency commanded the gates of Vtricke to be enclozed, and all the Bridges to be drawne, all the men both Engliſh and Dutch Souldiers to bee in Armes, and further proclaimed, that all men that loued the Quéene of England, ſhould prezently be armed to the vttermoſt, which being done, the Engliſh Souldiers were placed on the walls, with commandement, that no Burger whatſoeuer ſhould come thereon, but preſently they ſhould take from them their vpper garments, which if they refuſed, they ſhould bee ſtraight ſlaine. Alſo a ſtraight ſearch was made in the Towne for ſuſpitious perſons, and there was taken three which were committed to priſon. The cauſe of this ſtirre was this, it was reported, that there were come into the Towne 500. of the Enemies, in Burgers apparell to betray the Towne, but it was not ſo.

About this time, Sir Philip Sidneys Cornet at Houſdon, and certaine Dutch Cornets to the number of a hundred horſe or more, with a two companies of footmen, entred into Brabant, taking bootes, and ſpoyling the Country, which being knowne to the Enemies, they ſought to entrap our men, and with a three hundred horſe, and certaine companies of footmen, they ſet vpon our horſe, put them to retreit, and purſued them farre: but our men by ſwimming and gowneſſe of their horſes, eſcaped for the moſt part, onely a Cornet of Dutch, and one other officer of them were ſlaine, our footmen brought their booty into their ſtreights and fennes, that the Enemies could not indomage them, ſo that they brought their bootes ſafe to Houſdon.

The 15. of July, Sir Philip Sidney, Lord Gouernour of Flulhing, the Lord Willoughby with thoſe powers they had received from the Gariſon of Arel, conſidering the comming in of the water into the land of Walle, which might ſufficiently defend that Countrey, remoued the campe. The Lord Willoughby to Bergenapſome where he was Gouernour, Sir Philip Sidney paſſed the Sea with a three thouſand men: whoſe cauſe, paſſe ſhall bee ſhewed hereafter. This Sir Philip Sidney, at or before the taking of Arel, within an Engliſh mile of the Towne, called ſo many of his Souldiers to gether as could heare him, and there made a long Oration, wherein hee declared what cauſe they had in hand, as Gods cauſe, vnder, and for whom they fought, for her Paſtie, whom they knew ſo well to be ſo good vnto them: that he needed not to them, againſt whom they fought, men of falſe religion, enemies to God and his Church: againſt Antichriſt, and againſt a people whoſe vnkindneſſe both in nature and in life did excell, that God would not leaue them vnpuniſhed: further, he perſwaded them that they were Engliſhmen, whoſe valour the world feared and commended, and that now they ſhould not either feare death or perill whatſoeuer, both for that their ſeruice they ought to their Prince, and further, for the honour of their Countrey, and credite to themſelues. Againe, the people whom they fought for, were their neighbours, alwayes friends, and well-willers to Engliſhmen. And further that no man ſhould do any ſeruice worthy the noting, but he himſelfe would ſpeake to the vttermoſt to preſerue him to his wiſhed purpoſe. Which oration of his did ſo linke the mindes of the people, that they deſired rather to dye in that ſeruice, then to liue in the contrary.

Sir Philip Sidney his Oration.

The 14. of July, Sir William Pellam, Lord Marſhall of the Field, came to Dunhage. The 16. of July his Excellency removed from Dunhage to Bill, in which paſſage hee take to croſſe the water at the Dorpe of Slice ſo called, being paſſed the water, he entred the Land betweene two Sconces, a quarter of a mile or more from the Towne, where hee was entertained with all the Sconces that both of great Ordnance and ſmaller ſhot, paſſing by Land he came to the Towne, where the Gouernour ſir Thomas Cecil entertained him both with cheare and otherwiſe moſt honourably. This Towne is on the mouth of Maze, where the water is in breadth ſome miles Engliſh. The Iland of Bill is great, more then twenty miles were here maruellously welcommed, and well vied for victuall, lodging, &c. There is by this Towne another Towne of great force, called Wlocome, by the Caſtle of Lutſen, this Wlocome is in greatnes but a village, but in ſituation and ſtrength, a thing of great importance: it ſtandeth in the ſame Iſland that Lutſon ſtandeth in. It is Graue Maurice his Towne, and kept his garriſon of ſouldiers.

Wlocome.

The 10. of June, a poſt came into his Excellency, from Cozonell Skinke, & Captaine Williams, with Letters: the effect whereof were, that the ſaid ſir Martin Skinke, and Captaine Williams, ſtaying not far from Venlo (which the Duke as then beſieged), and longing to ſhew the zeale they had of the ſeruice of her Maieſtie of England, ſet out with their houſemen in the night, all the Dutchmen for the moſt part forſaking them, ſo that with him was not aboue 160. horſes, with thoſe he ſet forward, killed the ſtill watch, and paſſing farther, killed alſo two Courts of guard fully appointed, and entring, by force, the quarter that the Prince of Parma was in, they killed a number of Noblemen, and Gentlemen: but in the returne the enemy vvel appointed ſet on our men, and ſcattered them, to ſome loſſe, but the greater ſort eſcaped: the skirmiſh being ended, and our men returning, Captaine Williams was one of the hindermoſt of them all, and he cryed (being yet in the enemies campe) where is Williams, where is Williams, and another anſwered, before, before, and thus he eſcaped.

The 13. of June, his Excellency went to Dort with a ſmall traine, where being come about fiue of the clock in the afternoone, the Burgers made him ſuch great cheare, as was thought to haue bin impoſſible for ſo ſhort a time of proviſion. The fourteenth he tooke ſhip towards Utricht from Dort, being wafted with an Hoy full of ſouldiers of the Towne.

The 22. of June, the enemy attayned Venlo, a towne of great importance and ſtrength, there was in this towne, not only the wife of Skinke, and his children, but alſo the treaſure, houſe, and (for the moſt part) the furniture that Skink had. This town had in it ſouldiers to the number of fiue or ſixe hundreth, all of Skinks men, well appointed, and braue ſouldiers.

The Holdſt to the enemie.

The 23. of June, his Excellency paſſed to Colinborough, about nine Engliſh miles from Utricht, onely to viſite the Graue of Colinborough, where he dined, viewed the Towne, and returned to Utricht, taking with him the ſayd Earle of Colinborough.

The 29. of June, his Excellency paſſed from Utricht to Dort. The 30. of June he removed from Dort, to Williams ſtate, or Ragon hill. The ſame day County Hollocke ouerthrew a cornet of horſe, belonging to Bzeda, with the helpe of maiſter Robert Sidneys cornet, ſir Philip Sidneys cornet and other. The ſayd County Hollocke practiſed to haue a conuoy paſſe from out of Brabant, to Barganapſome, which the enemy being warned of by ſpies, that this conuoy was guarded but with ſome fifteene or twenty horſe, the Gouernor of Bzeda ſent out his cornet or ſtrength of horſemen to this employt: but ſome few of them, beeing either afraid to meddle with our men, or doubting the true occaſion that happened, ſtayed behind the reſt, Captaine Welch an Engliſhman, which a great time had ſerued the enemie, had the leading of the horſe at Bzeda, but paſſing to this employt, County Hollocke with maiſter Robert Sidney beſet them round, which the enemy no ſooner perceiued, but yeelded, ſo there was taken Captaine Welch, and a thirty horſe, and as many men. The 31. of June, his Excellency early in the morning paſſed from Williams ſtate to Barganapſome, and about three of the cloche in the afternoone hee arriued there, and preſently paſſed to the ſtrong Caſtle of olde Waw: this Towne is in the entrance of Brabant, 20. Engliſh miles from Antwerpe, vpon the ſame riuer that Antwerpe ſtandeth. It is a Towne now almoſt ruinated, though before in the proſperity of it, it was not much inferior to Antwerpe, there are few people but ſouldiers, the Burgers forſaking their goodly builded houſes, are gone to other places. This Towne is ſubiect in two places to hills of firme ground, which are the places that make this Towne far weaker then otherwiſe it would be, yet wonderfully rampiered with bulwarkes, walls, and flankers in all places. The Lord Willoughby hath wonderfully enlarged the ſtrength of this Towne: further he hath made two very ſtrong bulwarkes in two places of the towne, at the hauen of the towne, and from the towne a flight ſhot or more, are two mighty Sconces, which ſtand by the riuers ſide, which indeede are of more ſtrength then the Towne, and they are to command the Towne, and two Engliſh miles from the Towne ſtandeth a ruinated Towne in an Iſland, and by this riuer, whoſe ſituation is ſuch, as for ſtrength it might bee made a braue place, for anye and o therwiſe this Towne is called Romars ward, againſt the which ſtandeth a ſtrong Sconce, and ſo along the riuer to the towne ſtandeth diuers the like to commaund the riuer and paſſage to the Towne: the Caſtle before named, that his Excellency went to viewe, at his arriuall at this Towne, is alſo ſuch, as no reaſonable force can winne, alwayes once a yeare victualled, and manned afreſh, this Caſtle regardeth not the Cannon ſhot, it is ſo rampered. The firſt of July, his Excellency paſſed from Barganapſome, to Zuricksſea, a Towne in Zeland, and in an Iſland ſo called. In this Iſland is another Towne called Bzewers hauen, a very ſtrong Towne, this Iſland is moſt fertile. The ſecond of July, his Excellency paſſed to Dort. And the ſame day paſſed from Barganapſome, three thouſand men that were newly arriued to Stenbergen, a towne greatly noyous to the garriſon of Barganapſome, for when they paſſed into Brabant vpon any exploit, they were letted by the ſouldeirs of this towne: this tourney was ſo cloſely kept, that our men ſhotte at the walles of Stenbergen ere any of that Towne knew for what cauſe ſo great a number of men were gathered.

Sir Philip Sidney entred Flanders.

The 3. of July, there entred into Flanders the Graue Maurice, the Prince of Spaniſonne, and Sir Philip Sidney, Lord Gouernour of Flushing with other, to the number of fowre thouſand footmen, and three thouſand horſemen. The 4. of July Graue Maurice tooke on him to cut the bankes of the Sea, to ouerwe the land of Waſſe, hauing with him two thouſand men, the reſt of the Army paſſed with Sir Philip Sidney into Flanders, and inuyron the Towne of Axell: there were ſlaine of ſouldeirs of that Towne three hundred, beſides the Wonegers that made reſiſtance, which were likewiſe ſlaine. This done, they came to Doppe or Doope, a Towne of great importance, this they entered and tooke in it fiue hundred Boyes, which were kept to doe ſeruice, and to be ranſomed. Graue Maurice with his two thouſand men to plied the bankes, that in ſhort time hee had made it ſufficient for the water, not onely to enter, but to ouerwe all the Countrey, but the winde tred ſo contrary that no water to the purpoſe entred, at that time onely the bankes lay open. In the meane time our men take fiue ſconces, and put all to the ſword, that they found in them, and this was their entrance into Flaunders. The Towne of Axell is not far from Antwerpe, and about the ſame diſtance from Gaunt, and not fiue Engliſh miles from either: the land of Waſſe wherein this Towne of Axell ſtandeth, is the onely paradiſe of thoſe Lands, and moſt fertile place of all other. The eight of July Graue Maurice returned to Middleborough, leauing all occaſions to Sir Philip Sidney Gouernour of Flushing. The tenth of July, Cozonell Yorke brought to his Excellency to Dunhage, fiue Enſignes of the Enemies, all which were taken from the Enemie in the Towne of Axell and the Sconces.

Fiue Sconces taken by the Engliſh.

In this meane time, to wit, on the ninth of July was Paulus Baze, a great ſtate, and a politique man, taken at Utricke and put in priſon, and very ſhortly after was taken another named Peter Fabeſtine, and likewiſe committed to priſon. The 14. of July, his Excellency commanded the gates of Utricke to be enclozed, and all the Bzidges to be drawne, all the men both Engliſh and Dutch Souldiers to bee in Armes, and further proclaimed, that all men that loued the Queene of England, ſhould prezently be armed to the vttermoſt, which being done, the Engliſh Souldiers were placed on the walls, with commandement, that no Burger whatſoeuer ſhould come thereon, but preſently they ſhould take from them their vpper garments, which if they refuſed, they ſhould bee ſtraight ſlaine. Alſo a ſtraight ſearch was made in the Towne for ſuſpitious perſons, and there was taken three which were committed to priſon. The cauſe of this ſtirre was this, it was reported, that there were come into the Towne 500. of the Enemies, in Bzigers apparell to betray the Towne, but it was not ſo.

About this time, Sir Philip Sidneys Cornet at Houſdon, and certaine Dutch Cornets, to the number of a hundred horſe or more, with a few companies of footmen, entred into Brabant, taking bootes, and ſpoyling the Country, which being knowne to the Enemies, they ſought to entrap our men, and with a three hundred horſe, and certaine companies of footmen, they ſet vpon our horſe, put them to retreit, and purſued them farre: but our men by ſwimming and gooneſſe of their hoſſes, eſcaped for the moſt part, onely a Cornet of Dutch, and one other officer of them were ſlaine, our footmen kyought their boty into ſuch ſtreights and ſtenes, that the Enemies could not indomage them, ſo that they brought their bootes ſafe to Houſdon.

The 15. of July, Sir Philip Sidney, Lord Gouernour of Flushing, the Lord Willoughby with thoſe powers they had receiued from the Gariſon of Axel, conſidering the comming in of the water into the land of Waſſe, which might ſufficiently defend that Countrey, remained in the campe. The Lord Willoughby to Barganapſome where he was Gouernour, Sir Philip Sidney paſſed the Sea with a three thouſand men: whoſe enſe, paſſe ſhall bee ſhewed hereafter. This Sir Philip Sidney, at or before the taking of Axel, within an Engliſh mile of the Towne, called ſo many of his Souldiers to other as could heare him, and there made a long Oration, wherein hee declared what cauſe they had in hand, as Gods cauſe, vnder, and for whom they fought, for her Maieſtie, whom they knew ſo well to be ſo good vnto them: that he warned not to ſhew, againſt whom they fought, men of falſe religion, enemies to God and his Church: againſt Antichriſt, and againſt a people whoſe vnkindneſſe both in nature and in life did excell, that God would not leaue them vnpuniſhed: further, he perſwaded them that they were Engliſhmen, whoſe valour the world feared and commended, and that now they ſhould not either feare death or perill whatſoeuer, both for that their ſeruice they ought to their Prince, and further, for the honour of their Country, and credite to themſelues. The 14. of July, Sir William Pelham, Lord Marſhall of the Field, came to Dunhage. The 16. of July his Excellency removed from Dunhage to Will, in which paſſage hee tooke to croſſe the water at the Doppe of Slice ſo called, being paſſed the water, he entred the Land betweene two Sconces, a quarter of a mile or more from the Towne, where hee was entertained with all the Sconces that both of great Ordnance and ſmaller ſhot, paſſing by Land he came to the Towne, where the Gouernour ſir Thomas Cecil entertained him both with theare and otherwiſe moſt honourably. unles ouer, in it are Doppes not so well built as rich. On the 19. his Excellency returned from the Brill to Dunhage.

In this meane space, on the 16. of July, the Enemy entred Nence, after a long assault, in which assault he lost 3000. men. This towne of Nence, was burned foorthwith to the ground by the Lackies and Boyes belonging to our Souldiers, there remayned whole but eight houses.

The 23. of July, his Excellencie made a banquet to diuers great personages of those Countries, as the Lady Bredo, Lady of Viana, the Pallsraues wife, the County Egmonts daughters, the Prince of Oranges daughter, with a number more. In which banquet wanted not what might be had to augment their cheare either in musicke, dauncing, fire-workes, or otherwise.

Of Sutfin.

The 22. of July, the Garison of Sutfin issued out to the number of neere two hundred, and came to Arnam, take some cattell and other things, and returned, whereupon Master Anthony Sherly came to Captaine Wilson Gouernour of Arnam, and required that hee and his company might issue out and reuenge this iniurie, which at length was granted: then Master Sherley chose out to the number of fourescore footemen, and 20. horsemen, and sent them out, which the Enemy leering, to intice our men forward, set the body not farre from Sutfin, on a hill, and laide a fourescore of their men in an ambush, betweene Arnam and the body, the twenty horsemen came to them, which they let passe in a streight, but no sooner past, but they discharged on them and seeing no more thought to slay or take them all, but no sooner had they charged the horse, but Master Sherley charging them behinde, the horse-men returned, and so what on the one side, and on the other, they slue of them the number of eighty, and take thirteene prisoners, which with the booty, they brought againe to Arnam, hauing lost but one man, and two men hurt.

About this time, Master Butlers Cornet, lying at Deuentry, issued out, and take from Suthfield or Sutfin, of Tattell to the number of foure hundred Cowes, and sixteene Mares of great price, in this manner. Those of Suthfield had by the riuers side a great marish, all so ditched in, that no horse could passe ouer by any possible meanes: but they of Deuentry and Campyn consulting together, did one night at a low water passe into the marish, ouer by the side of the Towne, and brought without losse of any man of our part, foure hundred and odde Beasts, and 16. Mares, most of them solde for fiue pound a Mare, amongst the Souldiers. This exploit with others did greatly pinch those of Suthfield, for that the milke of those beasts were to them a great reliefe.

Robert Sidn. Cornet, lodges a booty.

The 26. of July, Master Robert Sidneyes Cornet, lying at Gertrenberge, passed with some of County Hollecokes horse, to the number of an hundred, and passed on purpose onely to learn Pieda, but being within sight thereof, they espied a number of Tattell issuing forth of the Towne (for feare of our Garisons) in those parts by toward high Brabant, hauing to conuey them some 300. shot, and a 10. or 12. lances, our men seeing so fit a booty vnlacked of their part, charged and put to flight the shot a horse, cut betweene the Towne and the tattell, and take from them 600. Oxen, 700. Sheepe, and 60. Mares, and some Moares, all which they caried to Gertrenberge, to the great reliefe of the Souldiers there.

Mountioy.

The second of August, his Excellencie passed from the Hage to Utricht, he dined at Tergowe, from thence he came by Oden water, and from thence to Mountfoyd, a strong Towne, at night hee came to Utricht, where by the Lord North hee was receiued with great ioye of shot.

Newes yelded to the Enemy.

In this meane time, to wit, on the 29. of July, the Enemy lying part before Berke, the residue came before Newes, which Towne was no sooner summoned, then it yelded to the Enemie, and on the next day they take a little Towne called Alpin, both these Townes belonged to the Graue Maurice.

Berke.

The second of August, the Enemie hauing passed by Berke as before, diuers of his company were cut off as straglers, and further, a great spot of horse, the men that were taken were hanged: amongst whom, a young Lad which was taken, confessed to Skinke, that as the Prince passed by Berke, on a hill made this speech, My Souldiers (quoth hee) you may see here this Towne, neither great nor strong, but so manned, that assure your selues you shall receiue blowes enough, and no wealth, wherefore we may now passe with no dishonour, but if we stay here long, it will be dill, onour to passe away, therefore say what you minde to doe, and presently they were all contented to depart, and so ther passed from the Towne. The third of August, the Prince seeing he could not passe any thing by water, but Berke letted it, besides hee had a conuoy of venison, wine, &c. which was by them of Berke taken away with fifty men that had the conducting thereof, the Prince noting that the principall men that annoyed him, were there where the Prince saw the Towne weake, hee returned to it againe: for Skinke had no sooner taken the fifty men, and others, but asking them whose men they were, and they answering the Princes, they were streight waies hanged, which doings of Skinkes, caused the Prince to returne his Army to Berke, on the said third of August: on which day hee passed with three Cornets of horse from Alpyn where his Munition lay, to Oson, a Towne of the Duke of Cleues, a small league from Berke, and came with certaine to view the Towne of Berke, which Skinke perceiuing, streight issued out of the Towne with certaine horse and foote and charged the Prince which had three Cornets of horse, and 500. footemen, yet Skinke put him to the retreat to Alpyn to his quarter there.

The fourth day hee came with his maine Battell, and passed on the South side of the Towne, Towne, though often times he were charged and lost many of his men, yet he abode there.

Lord Vchal and Farnier slaine. Berns.

On the third of August, the Lord Marshall the generall of the Horse, &c. with some thousand horse and footmen, passed in the night far into Brabant, and came early in the morning, to the great Dorpe Dell Stilucring-benke, set it on fire, and burned it into the ground. There was with the Lord Marshall two hundred Kernes, who shewed their courages, for none were so ready to burne, nor so ready to kill all that came in their danger, so that few escaped them. Comming further, they came to a Dorpe, more like a good Towne, not farre from Sattingambusse, wherein is a Castle and a strong Sconce, but the wild Irish kernes neither fearing that nor threate, tanne by the sides of the Sconce, tooke it presently, and put to the sword all in it, and tooke the position to themselues. Those of the Towne had crossed the way with trees, in such sort as the horsemen could not passe to the Towne, but with great labour, but the Irish entred the Towne only, and burned it to the ground, saueing none that came to their hands, so our men returned to Gertenberge, not hauing foure of their Irish-men

The 5. of August, his Excellency passed from Utricht to Tergowe, where he stayed till the 7. being honorably entertained: this towne is very strong, situate so, that all the Country round about may speedily be drowned. About this towne is the greatest nurserie of fruite that men there present had euer seene, and by them thought impossible to serue many Countries, with trees of all sorts, but peares especially. The ground about Tergow is a 14. foote broad, is nought else but the most braue trees that can be seene. This towne hath the most faire market place, that hath ben seene of many, in the middest whereof, standeth a faire State house, in the which his Excellency did eate and was lodged. The 7. of August his Excellency passed from Tergow to Utricht, by the which he must passe through Doon waters, by the Wargers of which town, he was honorably receiued, all the towne throughout ouerhead was hanged with garlands of flowers for his welcome. The 19. he passed from Utricht to Reine, and there stayed all night. The next day he passed to Arnam. About this time a ship was sent from the Bishop of Tullen to the Prince, laden with Canon shot, and powder, the master of which ship, either mistaking the Bishop, the Prince, or their Religion, so sone as he came where he might well recouer Berke, where Skinke and his force lay, he by one meanes or other, so opened the ship, that the water entred, so that he and the rest, were forced by that meanes to retire to Berke. In this ship was a Commissary of good account with the Prince, whom the master of this ship did conuey to Skinke, who was no sooner come, but Skinke entred iudgement with him, and he desiring to bee vsed like a gentleman, Skinke answered, he should bee hanged with his face towards the enemies Campe, for (quoth he) I know you desire to see your friends and so it was done. This losse of munition made the Prince want of his will, for battery of the towne, only planting fiue Canons in two places. Further, at the same time, there came newes to his Excellency, that the horse and footmen of Gelder had often put the enemy to losse, and had taken 150. horses from them, besides a number of them slaine.

The 17. of August, Sir Iohn Norris passed ouer Iselll by Arnam iconce, (a bridge of boates being there made with some 3000. English footmen, and 600. 7. hundred horse.) And about the same time, the Prince remoued some part from Berke to Alpine, a dutch mile from Berke. The 21. of August, the Lord Marshall passed ouer the riuer by Arnam sconce, with 3000. footmen and 600. horse toward the leager. The 23. of August, his Excellency passed ouer the water by Arnam Sconce, with 2000. or more footemen, and 100. or more Launces. The Irish kernes were no sooner come to the Campe, but that they passed neere the enemies, and brought them 120. Cowes. The 24. of August, the Leger rose and passed to Eltham: there is nether Eltham and vpper Eltham, both haue beene houses of Religious women, most sumptuously built: the neather standeth neere the Reyne, the vpper standeth an English mile from the Reyne vpon an high hill, and in such a place as few the like for prospect: where a man standing may behold 100. Parish Churches. This cloyster was of such credit and estimation, that none came there by the order of the place, but thee was a Barrons daughter at the least. The Lady Anne of Cleue was brought vp in this cloyster. The 27. of August, his Excellency passed from Arnam to the Campe of Eltham. The 28. hee caused all the English to bee marshalled into squares, and two Preachers made to them 2. Sermons in the field by the hill side of Eltham cloyster. The 30. of August his Excellency passed from Eltham to Dowbrough with all his Army, except only those that the night before were sent to lie about the towne. On the North side was an Iland to the which was sent a Scottish Regiment: which that night with their pioners did intrench within 80. yardes of the North part: On the west side came the Regiment of Sir Th. Sherly. On the East side, was the Regiment of Sir W. Stanley, and the Lord Marshall: on the South-east side was his Excellency with the regiment of the Lord Audley. All the residue, as Sir Iohn Norris, Mr. Digby, and diuers other regiments, as well English as dutch, were placed between these quarters, euery one in part indeauoring to intrench neere the ports, so that the same night, though with some alarums from the Towne, were the whole ports of the Towne intrenched, so that none could issue without danger. The same night also that his Excellency came before Dowsborough, him selfe in person with the Lord Marshall in the night, with their guards went from their tents to view the South trench, being neere the Towne, there was a base shot at them, which though all were together, yet receiuing amongst them all, but the L. on the belly, pierced his buffe ierkin, his doublet, and hurt him somewhat: this shot missing his Excellency, made them returne. The last of August, there was nothing but intrenching, and some vollies of each side, for that the ordinance was not come. The first of September came our ordinance, which being landed, and drawne neere the places of battery, some of the demy-cannons discharged, to displace the ordinance of the towne, which was in part done, but againe in other places mounted. This day his Excellency removed from the East or southeast side, to the west side, into an Iland, the ri-uer Iffell running by it. The 2. of September halfe an houre before sunrising, began the battery of Dowdzorough, & was so throughly plyed, that with 9. battering peces, a marvilous breach was made. In time of which battery, Captaine Williams was shot through the arme, yet in this siege not 20. men lost, and a 20. hurt. About one of the clocke they agreed to parley, all our battells being ranged in squares before the towne to assault, the soulders had made the breach more strong then before with feather-beds, dung, timber, &c. and made in the midst a great sight, but fearing an assault, which they knew would be furious, they (as was sayd) agreed to parley: the conditions were, that the soulders should passe away with their liues only, the 15 rogers should haue all they had at his Excellence mercy, these things being agreed, about 4. or 5. of the clocke in the afternoone, all the soulders with their wiues, passed out the breach away. The women that passed with the soulders, it was a grieuous thing to see how they were ransacked till the Earle of Essex and diuers other gentlemen came downe the breach, & by smiting the soulders, made them leaue off rifling them: his Excelencies expresse commandement was, that none should take ought from the towne, but that was not obserued, for much of the goods was spoyled. Captaine Berroes was appointed to keepe the towne, who's En-signes with Captaine Prices colours was set in the breach. The Captaines and soulders that were sent to saue the towne from spoyle, did to the contrary, for they made bouche & moll horrible spoile, wherewith his excellency was greatly displeased. The 5. of Sep. his Excelency went into the towne and there dined, and afterward viewed the towne. The same day master Anthony Sherley and other Captaines came to the Campe, and declared that the enemie came to Wesell, and with a piece of ordinance, beate backe our shippes wherein our men were, and killed some of them, and further, beate them downe the riuer. The scituation Dowdzorough stan-deth by the riuer Iffell, an arme, or illuing of the Reine by Arnam sconce, and runneth along through the country of Ouer Iffell, it runneth also by Suthfield, and is in the Peruince of Suthfield, and fiue English miles from Suthfield, and fiue miles or more from Arnam. It standeth in a most fertile soyle, pleasant, and fruitfull ground. It is of reasonable strength, hauing high walls, not rampired but in certaine places, hauing a water running round about it, it is about the bignesse of Arnam, nigh an English mile and a halfe compasse. The order of the assault of this Towne (as it was determined) sir John Norris had the honor giuen him to enter the great breach, sir William Stanley with his regiment had the secounding of sir John Norris, County Hollocke had giuen him the small breach with his regiment. These ranged themselues in the most brauest manner, but his Excellency offered parley as yee haue heard. The 9 of September word came that sir Martin Skinke was gotten from out of Berke, and the 11. the same Skinke, Captaine Tho.
with some other braue soulduers lances, came to the Campe before Dowdzorough. The 13. of September, his Excellency with all his forces came from Dowdzorough, and that same night incamped himselfe before Suthfield, but by for-want of a bridge could not goe ouer the water, this night he intrenched himselfe very neere in diuers places, and on the morrow he made a bridge, which passed ouer to the other side. The 15. of Sep. his Excellency leauing sir Martin Skinke in his absence passed to Deuentry, but shortly returned, for that he was informed that the Prince with his whole forces was marching towards Suthfield. This towne of Suthfield is very strong, beeing in diuers places parted, in all which places is such strength, as all must be won ere the towne be wonne. It standeth a good distance from the riuer Iffell, but hath a sconce on Iffell of incredible strength, for Hollocke with all his force, and our Englishmen a two yeares since lay at it three quarters of a yeare, but could not winne it: but now his Excellency beganne to besege it, and for that his forces were not sufficient to incampe it round about, hee framed himselfe to doe his best to winne the sconce, for by that meanes hee might the more easily win the towne. The first night our men intrenched at a Church beside the Towne, but for that they thought after it was not so commodious, they passed not for it, and therefore went on the other side of the water to intrench the Sconce, for that out of it, there issued both horse and footmen which did greatly annoy our Campe, for none could passe or repasse from Deuentry or otherwise for them the strength of the Campe, but they were taken or in danger, if not rescued. The 18. of September Skinke tooke on him to make a Sconce neere the enemies Sconce, which the same night hee beganne, though the Towne shot sore at him, and also the Sconce, yet he followed his worke, and so fortified it, that it was sufficient for greatnesse, to hold men to keepe it, and sufficient for strength, to hold out what the enemies shot could doe against it, and this sconce Skinke kept on that side the water, that passage could not so well come to the sconce, but he did sinke their boates. His Excellency the next night caused another sconce to be made iust by the enemies sconce, so that the enemie was by these two sconces so kept in, that they were kept from issuing out for their pleasure. The 20. of September, the enemy lyingnet far off at Langham or 9. miles English, sent in the night to Suthfield, certaine Cornets of horse, which were suffered to enter by our men, and further to passe away againe to the enemies camp they brought nothing into the towne to relieue it: moreouer all the whole English Campe lay on the other side of the towne, ouer the water, so that readily a sufficient po wer could not be made.

A fight before Zutphen

The 22. of September, was the most braue fight performed of our side that could be. The enemy this night put into Suthfield, some hundred wagons with victuals, which being perceiued, straight waies sir William Stanley went with his owne company, which were some 200.
to stand as a baricado, sir John Norris ouertooke him, being sent to the service and said to sir W.
Stanley. There hath bene (sayd he) one words of displeasure betweene you and me, but let all passe, for this day we both are employed to serue her Maiestty, let vs be friends, and let vs dye together in her Maiesties cause. Quoth sir Wil.
Stanley, if you see mee not this day by Gods grace, serue my Prince with a valiant & faithefull courage, account me for euer a coward, and if not be bee, I will dye by you in friendship.
Thus the long quarrell begun in Ireland was here ended with such friendship, as made all men reioyce: both of them serued so forwardly this day, that the one could not tell much how to commend the other, onely the one serued with footmen, the other serued with horse: sir Wil.
Stanley marched with his footmen, but the enemy was come to the Church, where our men had at the first placed themselues, there was of the enemies 2200. muskets and 800. pikes, which were prouo to guard the place for their refuge, (to wit, the intrenched Church.) The L. Audley, with some hundred and fifty men, by great haste made to his Excellency, attained at length to goe, who made so great haste, that he ouertooke sir William Stanley ere the skirmith beganne, which was hote, but the Lord Audley and Sir William Stanley, not liking the hot vollies of musket shot, pressed neere the enemy, and themselues at the push of their pike with their men put the whole company to retreat to the hold, which done, they retired a little backe out of the musket shot, and there made a stand: the Earle of Essex Lord Generall of the horse, the Lord Willowby, sir William Russell, and sir John Norris, with three Cornets came to charge the enemy. There were of the enemy 15. Cornets, of which 5. or 6. were Albanoys, the rest were Spaniards, or Italians. The Albanoys issued, which our men charged so furiously, that it was thought at the first shocke, there were a thirty or forty of the enemies ouerthrowne, then our men went to the curtelare, which they so furiously plyed, that the enemy after some three quarters of an houre retired to their pikes, losing of foote and horsemen, as the prisoners since taken confesse, besides hurt, an hundred men of their bauell, amongst which was County Anobal, also Captaine George, the Commander of all the Albanoyses, was taken prisoner, besides, more twenty Commanders, some Captaines, some Ensigne-bearers, Lieutenants and other officers: but to sir John Norris he gaue the first charge, who with his pistol in his hand, offered to discharge it on a braue man, but his pistoll would not goe off, which he seeing, strake it on the head of his enemy and ouerthrew him. The Lord Willowby, with his lance in his rest, met Captaine George, and vnhorsed him, so that he fell into a ditch, and cryed to the Lord Willoughby, I yeeld you prisoner, for that you be a seemely knight (this he spake in French) the Lord Willowby came not to take prisoners, but passed on with his curtelaxe in his hand, and his whole cornet after so furiously, that it was wonder to see, the Lord Willowby was so forward, that oftentimes, but twice especially, hee was like to bee taken prisoner, his bases were pulled off from him, but rescued by our side: when the skirmith was done, and all retratted, Captaine George being in his Excellencies tent, would not grant to be put ouer to any, but to him who vnhorsed him, whom he knew, if hee saw him in his armor, the Lord Willoughby came in armor, this is the knight that I am prisoner to, & I yeeld to him, and so the Lord Willoughby had the prisoner adiudged to be his. The 3. the Earle of Essex charged with his Cornet: who so encouraged his men, for the honor of England, said he my fellowes follow me, and with that he threw his lance in his rest, and ouerthrew the first man, and with his curtlax so behaued himselfe, that it was wonder. Sir William Russell with his Cornet, charged so terribly, that after he had broke his lance he with his curtlaxe so plaid his part that the enemy reported him to be a deuill and not a man, for where he slew 5. or 7. of the enemies together, thither would hee, and so be-haued himself with his curtelax, that hee would separate their friendship. Among all the rest sir Phil Sidney so behaued himselfe, that it was wonder to see, for hee charged the enemy thrise in one skirmith, and in the last charge he was shot through the thigh, to the great griefe of his Excellencie, and the whole Campe, who being brought to my Lord Lieutenant, his Excellency sayd: O Philip, I am sory for thy hurt, and Sir Philip answered, O my Lord, this haue I done to do your honor, and her Maiesty seruice. Sir William Russell, comming to him, kissed his hand, and sayd with teares: O noble sir Philip, there was neuer man attained hurt more honourably then yee haue done, nor any serued like vnto you. Hee was conueyed to Arnham, where he continued till this end, in such kinde of godly behauiour, that both the Preacher did wonder at it, and the chirurgions did admire, the one seeing his wise godlinesse, the other his valia-ant courage, with patience to abide all kind of paines. The Cornet of Sir Philip Sidney was at this time at Deuentry, vpon this occasion, his Excellency feared Deuentry, for that it had often beene in question of reuolting, but the Prince of Parma hauing occasion to bee im-ployed otherwayes, could not come that way:

now (as is aforesayd) his Excellency fearing that while hee were winning one towne hee might lose another, the Prince being so neere, sent Sir Phil. Sidneyes Cornet, his owne cornet, and maister Rob. Sidneyes Cornet, all into Denentry, and of footmen Captain [illegible], with his soulders, and Captaine Ward with his: thus was the cause Sir [illegible] Sidney was alone without his Cornet at this seruice, Sir Hen. Parker also was at this seruice, and serued most brauely. All the time this skirmish was with these Cornets, so our footmen were in fight with the enemie, and by fine force, made them once to gaine retire to their fastes. The enemy being retired to his strength, all our horse made a stand by the musket shot, which played on them sore, and braued the enemy, bidding him come forth if he durst, but he would not: which Sir Iohn Norris seeing rode to his Excellence and had him be merry, for had he not, he should this day the honourablest day that euer you had, for a handfull of your men haue driuen the enemy three times to retreat this one day. Further he willed his Excellency, either to send for more strength, or else to sound the retrait, which last request he granted, for that his strengths were otherwise employed, and so the retrait being sounded both by drum, and trumpet, our Captains came backe in good order euery man to his quarter with great praise and honor. We lost men of account at this fight, Captaine Matthew, and Captaine Tho. Wilford is thought to be dead, he came with Skinke from Werke in hope rest to be in more safety: We lost of Caterans, horse, dead, about sixty.

The 25. of September, our men seeing the great aduantage that a certaine Iland lying in the riuer betweene the fconce and the towne, would doe them, and further that there was therein some souldiers of the enemy, which greatly annoyed them in shooting as they passed any way, our men therefore set vpon it, furnished with the souldiers, and put them to flight, many of them leaping into the riuer were drowned, some were killed, but in fine, our men inconced there, and the towne shot at them, but did them little hurt.

The 28. of September, his Excellency with a great part of his Campe, remooued to the other side of the towne, and there beganne to intrench: leauing the Sconces well manned, it was thought the Towne was neuer so well victualled, for by his Excellency, the prouante was cut off, and euery Souldier had halfe a Crown a weeke, which greatly contented them, and this was payed to them truely, so that a Souldier might by this meanes be able to pay the vnqualler, and that made many resort to the Campe. Further Deuentry was so store that by that meanes, victuals were brought the more fully to the Campe, for at Deuentrie is great plenty of victuals. The Horsemen had fome shillings the weeke loane, to finde them and their horse, which was better then the prouante: his Excellency knighted maister William Harton, and maister Henry Vmpton, who were then sent for to returne into England to their friends.

W. Harton, H. Vmpton, knighted.

The 29. of September, our men set vpon the Ile pe sconce of the enemy, which with some difficulty they obtained, but after thinking to win another sconce there were many of them slaine, as well as on the other side, was the like or worse, there were of our men slaine and hurt about an 100. In this Ile sconce as was reported there were fiue fights, which were won that night, and certaine trenches of the enemie, and further intrenched almost round about the great sconce, so as they of the same could now hardly issue out, or any come in to them.

The 2. of October, in the night there passed into Zutphen, 5000. of the Princes folke, a 4000. footmen, and a 1000. horsemen, these passed into the towne, all in order vntrobled of our Campe, these companies brought no carriages into the towne, but all the wagons were to come after. The victuals which the Princes power had gotten in Dyent, and Duent, was conueyed into Zutphen, permitted by his Excellency, for that his men were otherwaies imployed, those of Longham did cut off some straglers of the Princes power as they passed by them. The 4. of October, they of the sconce at Zutphen called for a parly, which was granted, and County Hollocke for that he spake Dutch, stept out of our fconce, and parlied with them, and after long talke, one of the souldiers shot a musket, which as County Hollocke was speaking, shot into his mouth, and out by his eare, so that it smote away the iewel hanging at his eare. The 5. of Octob. came to Deuentry many of our horses, and about midnight, taking all the garrison of horses in the Towne, passed from thence to Langham where they all o take the horses of the garrison, and went about an exploit, which was, they hearing of a conuoy of victuals comming to Suthfield, they determined to haue cut it off, but they could not meete with it. There was of our men at this exploit pretended, a fine or fiue hundred horse, the leader whereof was sir William Russell. The same 5 of October early in the morning our canons being placed against the lesser sconce, they played at it till 3. or 4. of the clocke, at which time maister Edward Stanley, Leader of Sir William Stanleyes Company came to assault the breach, but before he came to the Breach, the Enemy had a Fight or Trench full of souldiers placed there for to offend vs, and defend the Sconce, which souldiers all at once discharged their muskets, killing onely one man, Edward Stanley entred the Trench with all his men, killing some of the enemies, and the rest fled. In this Trench he stayed till our Canons had made the breach cleare, then maister Edyward Stanley before his men clambred vp the breach, but a braue man of great stature, Captaine of the sconce stood alone in the breach with a pike, & thrust at him, which pike with the one hand he defended, and with the other caught hold to get vp till at the last he was throwne downe by a bullet throwne out of the sconce: the second time he assaulted the breach, but this Captaine so defended it, and kept him downe as was wonderfull: and although our men with the Cannon did play on the breach, yet he still fought, and did not flieee till at the last a Cannon cut of the Iland stroke the ground from vnder him, so that hee fell out of the breach into the Sconce: but in fine, this braue leader of our men, led them by the breach, and first entred the same, then was the fight in the Sconce, where at the first our men killed foure or fiue, at the second the like, at the length, they hauing made a traine, three or foure of our men were burnt, but the Souldiers of the Sconce fled out at a little wicket, which our souldiers chanced to light on, and killed to the number of thirty, so our men possessed the lesser Sconce, with the losse of three or foure of our men, and fiue or seuen hurt. This seruice being done, his Excellency seeing the valour of maister Edward Stanley, gaue him thankes, and calling Captayne Reade, knighted them both. This taking of the lesser Sconce, greatly terrified them of the greater Sconce. The next night, the County Williams men lying neere them, they with a foze volly of shot, discharged at them, and bad them hanse vp, for sayd they, you will play but as County Hollock, spend powder and shot, and lose your men, and hanse vp when you haue done. This sudden volley of shotte, put Graue Williams men in doubt that they would issue, wherefore they had thought to haue giuen alarum, but finding them so quiet after, they stayed their enterprise, and listened what would follow, and hearing no noyse or shew of Souldiers, they passed neare the Sconce to see the event, at length they might see a fire in the Sconce, which made them to passe neerer, and at length entred the Sconce, where they found a ten or 12. men, which fled (as was thought) into the water and were drowned. Thus had the cowardly praters made a fire, and ran away by the light thereof. Thus was the great sconce which was so well manned, so well prouided of powder and shot, that they wanted none, yet without all salt or charge, breach or any thing to distuay them, they ranne away, to their vtter infamy and reproch.

County Hollock shot into the mouth.

The seuenth of October, his Excellency passed to Arnam, there to visite Sir Phillip Sidneys lying of his hurt received as is afore shewed, before whose going he made Knights, these Captaines, and Gentlemen following: Sir Henry Goodyere, Captaine of the guarde, Sir Henry Norris, Sir Iohn Borroves, Sir Iohn Winkefield, Sir Roger Williams, Sir Robert Sidney, Sir Philip Butler. Those were knighted, Sir Henry North, Sir Thomas Dennis, Sir William Knowles, Sir George Farmer, Sir George Digby, Sir Stewyard. Sir Beauoyrd: besides these, were made Knights Bannarets, these following: the Earle of Esser, the Lord Willowsby, the Lord Audley, the Lord North.

There was (saith my cousin Henry Archar) a strange thing happened at Werke, in the time of Skinkes gouernement there, which I thought good to impart: as the Souldiers were repayring and working, to make the towne strong, a souldier comming by said, you worke and worke, but the enemy will haue the Towne within this weeke: which words being duly noted and taken grieuously, that hee should so discourage the Souldiers, hee was taken and carried to Skinke, who without any circumstances, condemned him to be throwne off the great steeple of the towne into the Reine, which was accomplished. But he falling off from a monstrous height light in the water, and rising againe, as the nature of the water is, to saue one by twise or thrise, he had both life and memory, such as he offered to submme, and scrabling got out of the water: but Skinke had taken such an hatred against him, that he caused him to be bound hand and foote, to haue bene cast againe into the Riuer of Reine, saying that Cotwell Mayor being there, so perswaded him, that the poore mans life was saued.

The ninth of October, County Hollocks Cornet of Horses, lying at Langham, take a fiue Waggons, which hadde carryed the Connoy before spoken of into Suthfield and a fifteene of them being laden with hurt men that were wounded in the Sconce, he put them all to the sword, and tooke the wagons into Lanham.

The 15. of October, his Excellency passed from Deuentry to Arnam, to Sir Phillip Sidney there lying sicke, as is afore shewed.

On the 17. of October, the sayd Sir Phillip Sidney, Knight, a valiant and towardly gentleman, sonne and heire to Sir Henry Sidney, (late aforesayd deceased) of his seruice received at Zutphen in Gelderland deceased, vpon whose departure he so like vp his minde & courage, that the preacher that came to instruct him in Christianity, might rather learne of him than teach him his assurance in the promises of Christ. From thence he was brought by water to Flushing where he was kept eight dayes, on the 1. of Nouember, he was brought to the sea side by the English garrison, which were 12. hundred, marching thare and thare, shot, halberts, pikes, & Ensignes, al trailing, the Burgers of the towne following: his body being imbarked, the small shot gaue him a triple volley, then the great ordinance, &c. On the fift of Nouember he was landed at the Tower wharfe, and conueyed to the Minories without Aldegate, on the East side of the City of London, from whence, he on the sixteenth of February next following, was conueyed to Saint Pauls Church in London in order, marshalled by Ro. Cooke, alias Clarenceaux King at armes. Imprimis, 9 rose men in blacke gownes 32. for hee was so many yeares old, Sergeants of the band fife, and drum. Ensignes trailed. A politicke exployte, or Deuice by which Sir William Pelham Lord Marshall.

The 18. of October, his Excellency passed with great sorrow for the losse of his nephew, Sir Phillip Sidney, to Vtrike: and on the same 18. and 19. dayes of October, sir William Stanley gaue in charge to his officers, chiefetaynes, and commaunders, as also to his Souldiers, that they should goe into Deuentry by 15. by tenne, by fire, and by thee, which commaundement they did fulfill, so that for the most part they got them into the Towne, being nothing misstrusted of the Burgers, they got into harborow, and close places, that they were not espied. Also other Captaines sayd to their Souldiers, if you will goe fiue or six, or somewhat more to Deuentry, to recreate your selues, take with you store of powder and shot, for feare of the enemy, which liberty they were ready to take, and performed accordingly, so that there was by this meanes gotten into the Towne well knowne 1200. English souldiers: On the 19. day in the morning, came sir William Stanley, with some troupe of his men, and in the aftertoome sir William Pelham L. Marshall with his troupe. The Councell of States with master Killegrey, master Kely, and other were debating of matters all this day with the Burgomasters, nothing mentioned of the garrison that there should be placed: further those of Southfield in disdaine, did tell those that passed by their towne to Deuentry, that they should hye them, or the gates would be shut. The Lord Marshall being come to his lodging, sent for all the Burgomasters which were in the Counsell, as before, who being come, hee told them that his Excellency both for their owne safetie, and suppresse on of the enemy, was fully determined to put a garrison of men there, and for that before time hee had found them strange in graunting, he had sent him thither, for that the Camp was now ready to breake vp, to know in short their determination, whether they would receiue a garrison or not, and for that his haste required no long stay, they to giue him answere on the next morning by 8. of the clocke, that he might send word to Vtrike to his Excellency, which the Burgomasters promised to answere according to his request, now all this night did sir William Stanley and others with the Lord Marshall, take Counsell what were best to doe, which was agreed that all the souldiers secretly theuld on the morrow at 7. of the clocke bee in the market place with their furniture this order being taken, all with quiet rested, but the burgers which made that night a double watch, and chayned all the streets, made fast all passages, and further did make and man all the ports most strong.

In the morning early by fire of the clocke, al the Burgomasters were assembled in the state house, to agree of this purpose. About 7. of the clocke the Lord Marshal came to the statehouse with diuers gentlemen and others, who knocked and were let in, straight sir W. Stanley also entred with his traine all appointed for the purpose, by this time were all our Englishmen assembled in the market place, which the townesmen seeing were all in pitious feare, the women crying out for feare to be spoyled. The L. Marshall asked them for a direct answere, whether they would haue a garison or not giue me (quoth he) a direct answere, for I must so haue it. One of the principall Burgomasters rose softly and stole away, which being told to the Lord Marshall, hee sayd: fetch me presently him that is gone, or by the liuing God, before whom I stand, you shall all die for it, and delay not, sayd he, but doe it, and straight was hee fetched again. Then demaunded he for what cause this night euer all other, they had made so strong a watch, whereforee they had chayned their streets, &c. but they answered not: well sayd he, euery one of you set his hand to this bill and deliuer ouer your authority, to these whom his Excellency hath set down, or before God you shall all die, you haue not to deale with a nation simple or foolish, or such as wil be led in this or that like sort, comming hither to spend their goods, toile their bodies and venture their liues, & now be accounted such as your subtilty should ouer-reach. They forthwith at his commaund (being sore afraid) set their hands to the bill, and gaue their authority to protestants, appointed by his Excellency: well, sayd he, send one of you straight to all those Burgers, that are on the walls, and rampiers, and command them to passe to their dwellings, and to let them forthwith bee vnarmed, which was presently done. Then hee commaunded them to bring to him the keyes of all the ports or gates vppon the like paine before spoken of, which was also done, with sweating both the old, and new officers to the Queene of England. This being done, all that before were suspected to bee Enemies to the Englishmen, were turned out of their places of authority. There was a fowre thouthousand Souldiers, all Burgers in this towne, which for the most part watched and warded, besides a number others, as too rich for such paines, boyes, which are all counted to be a twelue thousand fighting men, wherefore it requireth great care and wisedome to deale in this sort. The campe at this time brake for the most part vp, to the Garrisons, and all those companies that were appointed to the Sconce, went from Vtrike on the two and twentieth of October.

The Earle of Leicester returneth from the Low Countries, and arriued in England.

The 23 of October, the States of those parts came from Deuentry to Vtrike, where with his Excellency they sat in Councell, of determining all the 24. day, from morning till night. The 28. early in the morning, his Excellency passed from Vtrike, and came that night late to Rotherdame: On the 29. his Excellency passed from thence to the Hage, where he stayed some small time. The 8. of November he went to Delph, where he was banqueted, and went that night to Dunhage. On the 16. he passed from Hage to Rotherdame: and on the 17. to Dort. On the 18. hee take shipping to passe from Dort to Flushing, and being passed a 7. English miles from Dort, the yce was so great, and so oppressed his ships, that it indomaged the most strong ship in the Flete, so that perforce his Excellency was forced to land at Dort a poore Village, and in a Wagon to passe by land to Rotherdam, and there prepared ships, and when the winde serued, he passed towards Flushing, but calmnesse of the winde caused his stay against the Iles of Alcop wherein Flushing standeth, but in the morning hee landed at Camphere, and thence in a wagon he passed to Middleborough, and from thence to Flushing, where he take shipping toward England.

The 23. of November, the honorable Lord Robert Earle of Leicester, Lieutenant generall of all her Maiesties forces in the united Prouinces of the Low Countries, returning from thence, arriued at London, and went late that night to the Court of Richmond, where he was not so suddenly come, as forwardly welcome of her Maiesty, and thus leaning the seruice done in those united Prouinces the Low Countries or Netherlands (whereof thus farre I had receiued aduertisements from my good friend and neere kinsman Henry Archer, one of his Excellencies Gard) I returne to matters at home.

The Queenes Maiestie forseeing the generall dearth of graine, and other victuals, growne partly through the unseasonablenesse of the yeares past, partly through the uncharitable grandinesse of such as be great Corne-Masters, but especially through the unlawfull and overmuch transporting of Graine into forraigne Countries, under colour of licence graunted to Dover and Sandwich, by the advice of her honorable Councell published a Proclamation, and bake of Rovers to be taken by her Iustices for the reliefe of the poore: notwithstanding all which, the excessiue prizes of Graine still encreased, so that Wheat was sold at London for eight shillings the bushell, and in some other parts of the Realme, for 10. shillings, 12. shillings, 13. shill ings, &c.

The 20. of February, a strange thing happened, a man hanged for Felony at S. Lord Chancellour deceased.

The 12. of Aprill, Sir Tho. Bromley Knight, Lord Chancelor of England deceased, and was honorably buried at Westminster on the second of May. About the same time deceased Sir Ralph Sadler, Chancelor of the Dutchy of Lancaster, and one of her Maiesties priuie Councell. Also on the 16. of Aprill, deceased the Dutchesse of Somerset at Hanworth, and was buried at Westminster. Item, Edward Earle of Rutland, Barron Ross of Hamlake, Lord of Trusbut and Beauoire, Knight of the honorable order of the Garter, departed this life at London on the 14. of Aprill, and according to his desire was honorably conveyed from thence to his Castle of Beauoire, and buried in the Parish Church at Belfoyd, the 15. of May, where many of his noble ancestors and parents are honorably intombed.

Sir Christopher Hatton Lord Chancellour.

The 29. of Aprill, Sir Christopher Hatton Knight, Captaine of the Gard, Vice-chamberlaine, and one of her Maiesties priuie Councell, was made Lord Chancelor of England at Croydon, in the Archbishop of Canterburies house, where he received the great Seale in the gallery there. And the third of May, being the first day of the Terme, he rode from Elp place in Oldbourne, to Westminster, there to take his oath, before whom went about the number of forty of his Gentlemen in one liuerie blew, and chaines of gold, diuers Persuiuers, and other Gentlemen of the Court, vpon foote, cleathes, the Officers and Clarke of the Chancerie, and then the Lord Chancelor, hauing on his right hand the Lord Treasurer, and on the left hand the Earle of Leicester, after whom rode certaine of the Nobility, the Iudges of the Realme, many Knights: and lastly, a great troupe of their retinue.

In this meane time, the most fortunate seruice for England, performed by Sir Francis Drake in Cales: the 19. of Aprill, with his lateff erploits in Cape S. Vincent, and Capesaker, done the twenty one of May, written by a Gentleman of his company, was such as followeth.

T. Fenner. Seruice of Sir Francis Drake at Cales, and Cape S. Vincent.

He hauing discouered (by advice of two ships of Middleborough that came from Cales, with whom he met in 40. degrees the 16. of Aprill) and by them understanding that there was great prouition in Cales, and thereabout, appointed to come for Lisbone, he with all speed possible did bend his force thither, to cutte off their power and prouition: so on the nineteenth of Aprill, an houre before Sunsetting, he entred the harbour of Cales, and his Fleet: there checked with him at the entring thwart the Towne, fire Gallies: but they in short time retired vnder their fortresses. There fled some twenty French ships to port Royall, and some Spaniards which could not be hindered of the flight by reason of the shelos. There was sunke by Sir Francis, at his comming in with shot, one argosie of 1000. tun, furnished with thirty peeces of brasse, and richly laden. There were to the number of 38. ships undertaken before night, and victors of the Rode: thirty hulks Hollanders confiscated to the King, and their goods sold to the Kings vse, 24. of them were stered, the other five were at port Royall laden with wines and bread, and to be presently sull laden for Lisbone. One Carrike of 1400. tuns appertaining to the Marques of S. Cruse fired. Fiue great Biskeis fired, foure of them lading and taking in of victuall for the Kings prouision for Lisbone, the fift a ship of 1000. tun, bound for Lisbone, hauing in her great stoze of pipes, much yron, nailes, spikes, yron hoopes, hoopes, and such like fired. One Whatley laden with wines, of 250. tonnes, for the Kings prouition, which the English brought to Sea, and discharged part of her wines for prouision of the Fleete, and then fired her. There fiue boates, of about 400. tuns, laden with Bisket, whereof they fired one, and kept the other two. Ten barkes more laden with wines, raisins, figges, oyle, wheate, and such like: they fired by supposition, 38. ships and barkes, fired, sunke, and brought away, amounting in iudgement to 13000. tun of shipping, &c. this was for the first erployt. The second was as followeth: about the 21. of May, they arriued at the Castle of Cape-saker, and three other strong holds all which they tooke, some by force and some by submission. They take at seuerall times of theyr ping, barks, and carrels, aboue 100. laden with hoopes galley oares, pipe staues, timber, and other prouisions of the King of Spaines, for the furnishing of his forces intended against England, which they burned, and consumed all the other boates, and nets thereabouts, to their great hinderance. Thence they came before the hauen of Lithboine, anchoring neere unto Cape Tales, where the Marques of Saint Cruse was with his gallies, and seeing them chase his ships a shore, to take and carry away his barks, and carrels, was content to suffer them there quietly to carry, and likewise to depart, and neuer charged them with Cannon shot.

Earle of Leicester Lord Steward of houshold. Earle of Leicester went into the Low Countries.

The 18. of June, Robert Earle of Leicester, was made Lord Steward of houshold, and Robert Deuereux Earle of Essex, was made master of her Maiesties horse. The 25. of June, Robert Earle of Leicester tooke shipping at Margate in Kent, towardes the Low Countries, where he remained not long, but returned. This yeare was a late spring and a cold summer, so that at midsummer, season in the cods at London (where they be most forward) were sold for 8. pence the pecke, yet afterward great plenty, and sold for 8. pence the bushell, or better cheape, no cherries ripe, till S. James tide, or Lammas, and then such plenty, that they were sold for a penny the pound, and not aboue. The moneth of September, vehement cold, white frosts, windes, boysterous in the Moyth, sometime haile, snow, and sleete, and yet a reasonable good harueste for corne, praised be God.

Very cold spring, sommer, and harueste.

Although this peece of peere 1587. were but as the vigil of the next ensuing yere 1588. concerning which yeere many ancient and strange prophesies, in diuers languages, and many excellent Astronomers, of sundry nations, had in very plaine termes foretold, that the yere 1588. should be most fatall, and ominous vnto all estates, concluding in these words or to the like effect, viz. And if in that yeare the world doe not perish and vtterly decay, yet Empires ouerall, and Kingdomes after shall, and man to ease himselfe shall know no way, and that for euer after it shall bee called the yeere of wonder, &c. yet for diuers yeares past, by reason of the afforesayd generall predictions, all Europe stood at gaze, vehemently expecting more strange and terrible alterations, both in Imperiall and Regall estates, than euer happened since the world began. Which fayre mistaken reckoning hath ben put out neare halfe a hundred yeares, and plainly discouered, that England was the onelie subiect of that times operation: for albeit the Spanish prouision for those yeares past were to be wondered great, for speciall seruice by Sea, and Land, yet was there all possible seruice, concerning their intent, vtterly vnprouided fully furnished.

The Queene of England hauing certaine intelligence of her aduersaries great strength by Sea in Spaine: (the resistible power, and ambition of the Duke of Parma in Flaunders: and the secret practise of the Duke of Guise in France, for leauying of soulders, &c. whose particular purpose and pretension, follow in their proper place) sent Sir Francis Drake to Sea this summer with a strong fleete, who burned, sunke, and tooke an innumerable saule of Spanish Shippes, hoping thereby to haue preuented the Kings determination, yet in his Iudgement, which was singular, assured the Queene, that the Spaniards would attempt nothing in the next yeare, the which the as little beleeued as feared.

Yet notwithstanding the premonent regard of her owne, her people and countryes safety, seeing her subiects creadine forwardnesse in their owne defences, knowing by experience the Auncient and Reuengefull minds of the Spaniards, for iniuries and damages done by Hawkins, Chr. Carlil, Norris and Drake, against the Portugals, entertainment and in vnkindnesse to Antonio, Competitor to the Crowne of Portugall, hauing out lerum, Manie Crowned in Lisbone: but aboue all other his earnest desire to reduce England to the Romish Catholique Religion, or rather indeede to possesse himselfe of the Imperious seat and sweet soile of England, by meanes whereof, at one instant he might be reuenged of the Hollanders, and seemed of his Indies being perswaded he should be backed and seconded by the English Romane Catholiques and Male-contents, wherein hee was vtterly deceiued.

The Duke of Parma, preparation against England.

English Ministers.

The Queene and Councell, for two yeares space, caused the Ministers to manifest vnto their Congregations, the furious purpose of the Spanish King, Dukes of Parma, and Guyse, with the dangerous dissimulation of the French King, by whose paines, and industry, the whole Communalty became of one heart, and minde, and began to retaine a stronger opinion touching the Spaniards setled resolution for the inuasion of England, than either Queene or Councell. The English nation were so tombled in heart, that I dare conclude, I want Art likely to expresse the sympathy or heat between the subiects and the Souldiers.

Means made from Spaine, vnder colour of peace, but more forcibly tending to warre, of infinite desire to grapple with the enemie, after many meetings both of Spaine and Rome, and diuersity of Councells thereof ensuing, to wit, Nauigation, Expeditions, Commanders, Leaders, and all other circumstances vnto their seuerall charges, euer all which I omit for feare, English preparations by Sea and Land for defence.

Robert

Robert Earle of Leicester, was Lord Generall, and Henry Lord Houmdon, was Generall for the Queenes person.

England is diuided into 4. seuerall Armies for the defence of the Realme, and seruice of their Prince, and Country.

Cities, Countries, Townes, and villages, the Cinque Ports, and all other hauens of England manifested as great forwardnesse in their seuerall loue and duty, as either subiects could performe, or a Prince expect: To single out the admirable deuterity, and boldnesse of any one particular place, or people, were a iust wrong to all, yet for a tast of them all, thus much may be said for London: After the Councell had demaunded what the Citty would doe with their Prince, and Country in vre. the Lord Maior, and Aldermen, humbly desyred their Honours, to let downe what their wisedomes held requisite in such a case: the Lords demaunded that two thousand men, and fifteene ships, the Citie craued 3. dayes respite for answere, which was graunted, and then entreated their Lordships, in signe of their perfect loue, and loyaltie to their Prince and Country, kindly to accept tenne thousand men, and thirtie shippes, amply furnished: And euen as London, London-like gaue president, the whole kingdome kept true rancke and campaige.

London.

Gentlemen of the Inner Temple.

The Nobility.

The whole Nobility most nobly like themselues, and like Members of the higher Orders, in hart and confirmation knit their hearts in one, whose vnanimitie, valour equalling their loue, allured euer Spirit to gaine of triumphant victory.

Gentlemen of the Inner Temple.

About three yeares before that which tyme the Citie of London was greatly troubled, and charged with continuall musters, and trayning of souldiers, certaine gallant, active, and forward Citizens, hauing had experience both abroad, and at home, voluntarily exercised themselues, and trained vp others, for the ready vse of war, so as within two yeeres, there was almost three hundreth Merchants, and others of like quality, very sufficient and skilfull to traine, and teach common souldiers, the managing of their peeces, pikes, and halbards, to march, counter-march, and ring, which sayd Merchants, for their owne perfection in military affaires, and discipline, met euery Tuesday in the yeare, practising all y'nall points of war, and euery man by turne bare orderly office, from the Coppozal, to the Captaine, some of them this yeere had charge of men, in the great Campe, and were generally called Captains of the Artillery garden, and these tooke president from the Merchants of Antwerpe.

Ingenious.

The English Nauies hasten to the Seas, each squadron hath his charge, and know their time and place, for Rendeuous, & to hold new Councels as occasion serues, & first the narrow seas were strongly guarded, by the Lord Henry Seymor, to interrupt recourse twixt Port, and Port, vpon the French and Flemish coasts, or 60 flying fregates, with newes from Dunkerke, into Spaine, or from Spaine vnto the Duke of Parma, backe againe.

In the west countrey they held a councel whether it were better

The English flottes appointed for the west, kept due watch, and watch vpon the Ocean, clearing all hauens, creekes, and corners, from suspition, in as great state, and bragge to behold, as if in hearty kindnesse they had come, to haue celebrated Neptunes great Festiual. The chiefe Commander of all this mighty Armado, was the Lord Charles Howyard, Englands high Admirall, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Sheffield, with many other Lords, and full thirtie Gentlemen, both of name, and note, of whom ye 70 may read, besides that man of fame and fortune, Sir Francis Drake, vice-admiral: in this expedition, Hawkins, and Frobisher, had worthy place, sure I am his auntrust, and both of them, with the aforenamed Lords, and maister Roger Town-end, were shortly after knighted by the Lord Admirall, for seruice done vpon the enemy. Thus the Queene hauing sent competent Sentinels, and strength, to guard her confines, and secure her land, from sudden inuasion: the Councell vpon mature deliberation, gaue order for the executing and disposing of land seruice, and chiefely what strength, and in what place were best to plant an army of defence, and in the end it was concluded, the Rauenes should be at Tilbury. The ground hauing bene surueyed before, forthwith were Trenches cut: their next thwart neighbour Graueseend, was then likewise fortified, and Westerne Barges thither brought to make a Bridge, like to that of Antwerp, to stop the entrance of the daring foe, and giue free passage, both to horse and foot, betweene Kent and Essex, as occasion serued.

To charge and encounter the chiefe Commander of this mighty Armado, the Lord Charles Howyard, Admirall of the narrow seas, was appointed Generall of the Queenes forces by Sea, and Vice-admirall of the Fleet.

All the Shires and Cities of the land, hauing their trained souldiers aptly furnished with Captaines, officers and fit abilliments for war, attended the hourely pleasure of the Prince, prouided alwayes, and was euer meant that all Frontier ports, either to the sea, or other nation, should still retaine their proper strengths, and from the Inland only to select such men as were fittest for the generall campe.

It was a pleasant sight to behold the souldiers, as they marched towards Tilbury, their cheerefull countenances, courageous words, and gestures, dancing and leaping, whereso euer they came, and in the Campe their most felicity was hope of fight with the enemy, where oft times diuers rumors ran of their foes approch, and that present battell would bee giuen them, then were they as ioyfull at such newes, as if lusty Giants were to run a race: in this Camp were many old souldiers, and right braue Commanders, who although in their greatest force, did neuer exceede the number of three thousand horse, and fifteene thousand foote, yet there were ready in all places, many thousands more to backe and second them, and it was found good policy, not on the sudden to keepe too great an Army in one place.

Preparation to the Campe at Tilbury.

Thus England being in al points furnished, and in good readines for their owne defence, I will speake a word or two concerning the Hollanders, then leaue them a while and report of their aduersaries estate, and preparation.

The Hollanders came roundly in with three-score sayle, braue ships of warre fierce and full of spleene, not so much for Englands ayd, as in iust occasion of their owne defence, knowing the originall, & ground of this hostility to procede from themselues, with thirtie peres continued sharpe warre. These men fostering the greatnesse of the danger that might ensue, if the Spaniards should chance to winne the day, and get the mastery ouer them, in due regard whereof their manly courage was inflamed to none.

The Hollanders.

Preparation in Spaine to inuade England.

The King of Spaine vpon pretence, and reasons before alleaged, after three yeares deliberate aduice, was three yeeres preparing this two-fold army in Spaine, whereof hee made Alphonsus Perenius, Duke of Medina Sidonia, chiefe generall, and Don Martino Ricaldo, of Cantabria, vice-admirall: which army by the ayde of the Clergy, the Princes of Italy, as well friends, as feodaries, the seuen Kingdomes in Spaine, the entire state of Portugall, together with the helpe of Mariners, Pylots, Munition, Tackling, and victuall from the Northwell parts of Europe, was now fully furnished, and boast the middle of May, riding at Anchor, in the riuer Tagus, neere Lisbbone, consisting of one hundreth twenty eight bessels for warre, viz. Carricks, Galleons, Argoseys, and foure Galliasses, two thousand fiue hundreth fiftie fiue pieces of great ordinance, twelue thousand Mariners, and twenty thousand land souldiers, besides voluntaries, pitlers, hospitals, and shippes of Artificers to attend them. When the King beheld this mighty host, obseruing well their matchlesse strength, and plenteous prouision for sea and land, as well for others, as themselues, to wit, oyle, wine, rice, salt, biskut, horses, mules, carts, carriages, powder, shot, saddles, apparell, pick-axes, and shouels. Hee sayd, it might well be called the Inuincible army, it was euer meant this army should haue beene at the Groyne, before this time, to haue taken the full aduantage of the yeere, for so the Dukes of Guyse and Parma did expect, whose preparations in all points, were in a better readinesse, at the beginning of June, according to the Kings appointment, then they were afterward: for seeing the Summer halfe spent, they doubted whether the King would send his Army this yeere, or no, but the King could not helpe it, for that his ships were furnished in diuers ports, and through contrary winds could not be united, vntill this present, so as they were constrained to anchor at Lisbone, when they should haue hoysed sayle at the Groyne, to wit, about the beginning of June, the King would not permit any wiues, or common women to bee in these ships, whereupon diuers women, hired themselues a shippe, and went along with the fleete, who in the great danger made their escape, by beeing thrust in at Curis, as the nauy pulled from Lisbone to the Groyne they were soze shaken with tempests and lost foure of their great ships.

Concerning the particulars both in Spaine and Flanders. You may read Mr Hacklait in his booke of English voyages.

This proud nauy was generally called by the Spanish faction, the inuincible Armada.

The English secure and negligent.

June and July being almost spent, and no appearance of the enemie, the English thought the Spaniards would not come, some shippes being better victualled then the rest made out vnto the Irish coast, others tooke harbour in the West Countrey, their Captaines, Officers, and others kept reuels on the shoare, daunting, bowling, and making merry, euen at the instant of the foes approch, and in their view, contrained to toe their ships by maine strength out of the Hauen, in whole ecrule, thus much may bee sayd, vpon delay of the Spanish Nauy, and behoues the calling backe of foure of the Queenes great shippes from the Lord Admirall, to come to Chatham, it was generally vnderstood, that at the beginning of July, the Duke of Parma, has slacked his Martine promtion, and dayune most of his land forces towardes the Rheme, and that the Duke of Guyse, had cleane dissolued his Campe, whereupon, notwithstanding an especiall aduertisement from forreine parts, certifying the very day, the Spaniards hoysed sayle from the Groyne, to come for England: there were some of right honorable ranke, and of great iudgement, that sayd it was a French tale, and a Popish bragge and that the Spanish King and Councell were too wise, and too well aduised to send an army of such consequence vppon so dangerous a coast a. England, especially in so farre spent season of the yeere: these words flewe quickely into the eares of the multitude.

The Duke of Parma, euer since the Spanish councell had concluded for Englands inuasion, with all diligence and industry, prepares all manner of Mauall force which his postes would beare, and to such ships as hee had made within the land, hee cut new riuers to conuey them downe from Gaunt Iper and Esse. here, into his coast Townes, Graueling, Donkerk, and Newport: hee proclamied liberall pay vnto all sorts of Mariners, and by that meanes was furnished from Holland, Lubecke, Hambrough, and Dantzic, with store of saylers, and some shippes, hauing by this time vnder his owne command, to yee hundreth and sorty ships, small and great, flat bottomed, to land his men with speed in any open strand: which lay neere vnto London, of the Queenes Campe, hee had likewise thirty thousand gallant souldiers, fiue thousand lustie horse, and excellent expert Leaders in the field, and in Cities neere vnto the Sea: hee had also prepared nimble engins called Cats, vpon which hee meant in haste to mount his ordinance, to make fierce battery at his first assault, faces of emptie casks, and other things, to make Bridges ouer Hauens, and Riuers, with many other things of timber, barred about with yron, for sundry vses both by sea and land, to stop Hauens, and land passages, besides the infinite number of large faggots, and bagges of earth two foote long, and halfe a yard wide, being prouided onely for his first landing, when euery man should carry a faggot or a sacke of earth, to make present shelter for their first defence, vntill by other meanes they might entrench themselues, knowing the English to be apt, and resolute to forbid them landing, and preuent their vtmost fortifications.

The Fleming a common pyrate, chancing to be 2. dayes in company with the Armado, he very iubtilly went from them, & the 16. of June by he ascertained the Lord Admiral, of the Spaniards approch, or els the Spaniards might haue burne the English ships lying in Harbour.

For this seruice Fleming obtained his owne pardon, and a pension during his life.

Preparation made by the Duke of Parma in Flanders, for inuasion of England.

About 2. yeeres before, or lesse, when Spaine and he were farre waded in this present preparation, to the great admiration of all men, especially to the expert commanders of his gallant lant Army, vnto whom hee would say some-times, I know you wonder at this great, and strange preparation for sea and land, which you see in this Country, and the daily newes of the like in Spaine, but concerning the Kings pleasure for their imployment, I assure you I am altogether ignorant, onely this it pleased his Maiestie in generall tearmes, to acquaint mee thus farre, by his letters, that with all conueniency, he meant to inuade & repaire a raging aduersary, that daily annoyeth him, & all Christendome: whose vallailes hourely vaunt, to take his Highnesse prisoner in his chayre, and force him to sue for mercy at their Soueraignes feete: their land is pleasant, plenteously flowing with milke and hony: the people proud, and full of wealth, no quoyne amongst them, but pure gold, and siluer in the poore mans purse: their houses rich, and stored with plate, the women faire and delicate: such is the people, and the land, whereunto I must lead you, take courage therefore, and thinke not long to gayne possessions, built by others spoyle, for there is good hope of great aduancement. To the meanest man, in briefe, I pray you stand assured, the present action now in hand, is chiefly enterprised for your generall good, and when my Master shall make more knowne to mee, then shall you know your hearts desire, &c.

The Dukes secret purpose for himselfe.

The Duke herein had a secret meaning for himselfe, for presently vpon the complot of this expedition, a pedigree was very priuately drawn, to proue the Dukes title to the English Crown, by which meanes, with his high command in Campe, together with his greatnesse in popularitie, as well amongst his enemies, as his friends, being generally famous for a most noble, wise, valiant, & mercifull Prince, if he could once set footing in England, he meant to prouide for one, and to that effect Monsieur Guerdor Gouernor of Calis, would many times say, ye Englishmen take heede of Parma, lest you find him a Cat, for if he once catch hold on you, it will be hard to shake him off.

The Duke of Parma dissembleth deeply with the Queene of England.

Notwithstanding all the foresayd practise and preuention for present war, yet the Duke to his greatest disgrace continued still smooth semblance of desired peace with the Queen, & vnder that pretence entertained the English commissioners this yeare in Flaunders, vntill the approach of Spaynes Armado, which double dealing of the Duke much displeased the Queene, and changed her wonted honorable opinion of him, which not long before she published in a pamphlet made in her owne defence, wherein she cleared her selfe of his imputation, hauing diuers times accused her to practise his death, and iustified him to be the worthiest man that euer possessed that place, &c. but this cauelelle dissimulation of the Duke, preuayled so farre with her, as shee resolued not to credit any forreyne estate, but wholly to rely vpon her subiects loue, and loyalty.

The Duke of Parma for the more speedy attraction of the English Catholiques vnto the speciall liking, and consent of his Kingly hope, when he had brought England vnder Spaines subiection, procured Father Allen, the English Iesuit to be made Cardinall, by whose Synons craft, and Ciceronian eloquence, he presumed much aduantage, and assuring the Cardinall, that if by any meanes he could obtaine the Regall estate, then next vnto himselfe, he should be as fortunate: but the Cardinal surfeiting with ioy of his present dignity, and future hopes, forgetting himselfe and his best friends, vpon the sudden, and before his time published in English, the whole proceeding of Pius Quintus, and Gregory the thirteenth, against the Queene, and therewithall signified her Fathers great disturbance of all Christendome, her continuing the same to the vtter ruine of Europe, and the Christian faith, if speedy preuention were not had, all this he manifested at large, with whatsoeuer scandall else might serue his present turne, or future drift; but the ensuing ouerthrow of the Spanish fleete at Calis, brake both their hearts and hopes, for neither of them liued long after.

Father Allen the English Iesuit made Cardinall to preter the priuate purpose of the Duke of Parma.

Henry Duke of Guyse, desirous to reuenge of the Queen, and pleasure his especiall friend Philip the Catholique King; This spring vseth his best meanes to raise a power, to conioyne with the Spanish Nauie, when it should approach, and passe by Normandy to the Flemish coast: his force in France was scarce 12. thousand strong, although the common bruite thereof was twice so much; but whether through want of pay, or his Kings long Iealousie of his exceeding greatnesse, or his owne doubt that the Spanish Nauy would not come this yeere, by reason it stayed two moneths longer then either Parma, Guyse, or the English expected, I cannot directly say, but about the end of June the Duke dissolued his Campe.

The Duke of Guyse seuereth forces in France to coniome with the Spanyardes to inuade England.

The plot and purpose of the Spanish King, for imployment of all his prepared forces, was thus. The Duke of Medina with his two-fold Army, should first directly bend his course for Flaunders, and from Alexander Duke of Parma to receiue order, and direction for all matters vnto whom the King had giuen especiall power and authority in that behalfe: the Duke of Parma with his shippes and souldiers, vnder safe conduct of the great Armado, should land in Kent or Esser, as neere the Campe or London as hee could. I shou'd haue told you that the Guyses force in France should first haue landed in the West Country, by protection of the Spanish nauy as it past along, and by that meanes vpon the sudden, to haue drawne the most part of the English force into Hampshire, Deuonshire, & those parts, whilest Parma with his great host might make inuasion. There were twelue thousand in the Armado, appointed to land in Pozkelbire, or thereabouts, presently after the arriuall of the Duke of Parma. Thus hadde they determined in one weeke to inuade England in diuers places, besides their assured hope of Irelands reuolt.

The Spanish plot.

The Spanish nauie hauing refreshed themselues at Groyne, after twenty eight dayes rest, set forward for England about the 11. of July, in the greatest Pompe that euer eye beheld. matchlesse in state, commaunding their passage where soeuer they came, exceeding far the force of those two thousand warlike sayle of great Symeramis, or like the number at commaund of the Egyptian Cleopatra, or these 12. hundreth well prepared ships, tailed by Charles of Fraunce, with like full purpose of Inuasion, for reuenge vpon King Richard the second, for dammage done by his grand-sire Edward the 3. in his French Conquest: but this proud Nauy hath moze skilfull guides, and in the ouerlooking of her strength, sets forward boldly to performe their charge (though in stealing wise) as if necessitie hadde constrained them to take aduantage of home-bred Traytors, or ambitious Rebels, risen against their state, and not like soudiers sent in cause of iust hostilitie, to encounter with an honorable enemy, without one summons, or defiance vnto Armes, according to the law of nations.

The Spanish Nauy discouered.

The 19. of July, the English Admirall vpon direct knowledge of the enemies approch, sends speedy summons vnto the all English fleet, who still retained their former courage. The Spaniards by this time were entred the mouth of the narrow seas, whose number, state, & strength being well obserued by the Lord Admirall, and rightly conidered, that it was now no time to dally, or flatter in so imminent dauger, in depth of humane iudgement, and discharge of duetie to his Prince, and Country, inkantinently dzessed his Letters by his brother in Law, sir Edward Hobby, vnto her Maiestie, signifying the great difference in power betweene the English, and the Spaniard, and therefore seeing the English Nauall forces far inferior to the Spanish Army, aduised the Queene to send more ayde to the Sea, and to make ready the cheefe strength of her Land forces: at which newes the Queene foorthwith commands more Ships to the Sea, whereupon, yet in voluntary manner, the Earles of Oxford, Northumberland, and Cumberland, sir Thomas Cecill, Sir Robert Cecill, Sir Walter Rawleigh, maister Thomas Gerrard, maister Arthur Gorge, Sir Thomas Vaughan, and many other honourable personages, were suddenly imbarked, committing themselues vnto the present chance of warre.

The Lord Admirall sendeth word to the Queene of the Spanyardes approach and strength.

Fresh supplies from England to the Sea.

Gentlemen and Yeomen of sundry shires, bordering on the Sea, knowing many of the English shippes to bee very weakely furnished with victuall and munition, out of their singular zeale, and loyalty: sent chearefully such prouisions, as either they could make or was prouided for their families, yea, such was the integrity of the English, as the Recusants offered their seruice, and were desirous to take their fortune with the common soudiers.

The integrity of the English.

The first fight of the English with the Spaniard.

The 21. of July, the Spaniards came as high as Plimmouth, where diuers English shippes lay fast in Harbar, the rest gaue charge vpon the enemie, the Armado then draines it selfe into the fashion of the cresent Moone, each side prepares themselues speedily to fight, with Braues and Brauadoes, their shrill sounding trumpets, and their rattling drums, lends mutuall courage vnto both Battailes, and lowd thundring Cannons, sends swift messengers of death: both Armies striue to get aduantage of the wind, but the English hauing much more quicke and yare, winne their desire, and Englandes Admirall in person came the onset, and for two houres space, maintained a valiant fight, vntill night drew on, and wanting store of the English fleete, which as yet could not by any meanes come into their ayde, they backt about.

The second fight, and after foure continuall fighting.

The next day the English nauy hauing well increased, gaue charge and chace vpon the enemie, Squadron after Squadron, seconding each other like swift bozsemen, that could nimbly come and goe, and fetch the wind for most aduantage. Now begins the furious fight on either part, and manly soudiers sirmely kept their stand vpon the Seruoord and Larboord side, and as occasion serues, some cry keepe a lake, others come hoe: if the seas waxe calme, it serues the English well to charge vpon the greatest Bulwarke of the Spanish fleete: and then their Gallialles, as Sergeants of the band would ofte fourth sometimes to succour their distressed friends, and other whiles with purpose to surpasse such English as they saw becalmed, whose vnmoueable oft the English with their brand fires would requite, sending their dole, vntill the Spaniardes blad ranne out at scupper hole, but if the winde grew bigge, and billowes playd aloft, then the Spaniardes with their lostie towers make full account to from the English comming in their way: sometimes the English in their eager fight fell foule vpon the daunger of their enemies, and so continued from the euening, vnto the breake of day: the Lord high Admirall himselfe was one whole night vnto the maine Battell of the Spanish Armie: both Nauies shewed great valour in their dayly fight, which commonly continued within the reach of Musket shot, and many times at pull of pike without intermission, saue onely when through want of winde, they were restrained: the English chiefe taines euer sought to single out the great Commanders of the Spanish hoste, whose lotte Castles beare great sroyne of their encounter: but whilst left both Armies were thus contioyned, Don Pedro de Vaides, a Chiefe Commander of the Army, fell foule vpon one of his fellowes and brake his foze-mast, who being maimed and left behind, lay like a little Elephant, in the open field beset with eager Hounds, who hearing commanded to yeelde, sayd he would yeelde to none, but to his equall, and asked in whose squadron hee was fallen, they answered into Drakes squadron, then he said fetch him for I will yeelde to none but to a Commander like my selfe, Drake being returned from chacing certaine Easterlings, Don Pedro began to articulate, but Drake peremptorily told him, it was now no time to stand vpon tearmes of Composition, whereupon hee yeelded, hauing caused all their Money, Plate, Iewels, Apparrell, with whatsoeuer else, their Don Pedro taken.

Sir Francis Drake was appointed by the Lord Admirall to carry the light boat night, but he neglecting the L. Admirals commandement followed after certaine Dutch Hoies, which were not of the Spanish sorte, whereby the L. Admirall followed the Spanish Admirals light, & was like to haue beene cast away.

In the meaning fir Francis Drake came after the L. Admirall, and found the Rose, Barke a ship of Sir Walter Raleighs, aboard of Don Pedro de Valdes, to whom he sent word that Don Pedro from Captaine Iacob Whitlocke, who commanded in the Roe-Buck, and sent word also vnto Dartmouth with two Pinnesses, having taken the best prisoners & other money, and Iewels into his owne ship. The Spaniards cut the Anchor cables.

present state could any way afford, to be layd open, to prevent the fury of the English when they came aboard.

After that another Galleon, by negligence was set on fire, and therewith consumed to the lower Decke, vnder which lay stoge of gunpowder, neuer touched: The Lord Thomas Howvard pitying their extreame misery, but not being able to lay aboord through extreamity of weather, saued the remainder of those scorched men to be sent ashore.

The Spanish Fleete for fiue dayes space hauing encamped many sharpe fights, and fierce assaults, roasting and diseasting from England to the coast of Flaunce, and from thence to England, and then to Flaunce againe, the fourth and twentieth of July, towards night, they cast Anchor neere to Calis Roade, the English likewise cast Anchor very neere vnto them.

Now rides the Armado at her wished port, 20 vnto whom the Duke of Parma sends present woord, that within three dayes, their forces should conioyne, and with first aduantage of Wind and Tyde, transport their Armes to the English coast, in meane space they would personally meete, and then determine betweene themselues, what was further to be done.

The Flemings, Wallons and the French, come thicke and three-fold to behold the sight, admiring the exceeding greatnesse of their shippes, and warlike order: the greatest hope 30 the outside neer the enemie, like strong Castles, fearing no assault, the lesser placed in the middle-ward: fresh victuals straight were brought aboord, Captaines and Gualters for their money, might haue what they would, who gaue the French so liberally, as within twelue houres, an egge was worth fiue pence, besides thankes.

Perfect notes.

Whilest this little Nauy like a Deuise Conquered, two thus at Anchor, the Spanish faction in sundry Nations had diuulged that England was subdued, the Queene taken and sent prisoner ouer the Alpes to Rome, where hauing vow, shee should make her humble reconciliation, &c.

In Paris, Don Bernardino de Mendoza, Ambassadour from Spaine, entred into an Ilady Church, aduancing his rapier in his right hand, and with a loud voyce cryed, Victorie, Victorie, and it was forthwith hunted, that England was vanquished.

But the next day, when truely was knowne, of the Armadoes ouerthrow, certaine Pages of aduerse faction vnto Spaine, in bitter scoffing manner, humbly prayed his Lordships Letters vnto the Duke of Parma, in fauour of their good fortune, to bestow vpon them some odde waste rak Mownes or Villages, as London, Canterbury, or Yorke, or so, whereat Mendoza hauing much disnayed, obscured himselfe, not daring to shew his face.

France, Italy, and Germany, were very doubtfull of the English state, and in those places, at this time, the English Merchants well perceiued their double eye, one while smyling on Spaines behalfe, and then vpon the English call a flearing looke.

The Queenes Nauy hauing well obserued the martiall order, and inuincible strength of the Spaniards, and that it was not possible to remoue them by force of fight, and therewith all considered the present purpose of the Duke of Parma, and their owne imminent danger, omitted no time, but according to the present necessity, the Generall with his Councell of warre, concluded to make their first stratagem by fire, and thereupon, the eight and twentieth of July, they emptied eight of their baselt Barkes, and put therein much combustible matter, which in the euening were subtilly set on fire, and with aduantage both of Wind and Tyde, guided within the reach of Canon shotte, before the Spaniardes could discerne the same, and then the same grewe fierce with sudden terrour to the enemy, who thought those floates to haue bene like the sundry workes of wilde-fire, lately made to breake the Bridge of Antwerpe, in which feare, they all amazed with shrikes and loud outcryes, to the great astonishment of the rare Inhabitantes, crying the fire of Antwerpe, the fire of Antwerpe, some cut Cables, others let the hawsers slippe, and happiest they could first be gone, though few could tell what course to take.

The first whereof that ranne a ground, was a Gallialle, hard by Calis walles, where the English freely tooke the common spoyle, vntill they began to take the Dominance, and to fire the shippe, whereat the gouernour hauing sore displeased, knowing the royalty thereof to be appropriate to himselfe, discharged his Canons from the Citadell, and draue the English from their benefite.

Captaine Iermy a Tunes worth who best tooke aboue thirty banneres & streamers out of the Gallias.

The next was a Galleon, which ran a shoare in Flanders.

Diuers others fell into the hands of the Hollanders.

The rest endeauoured by all meanes possible to cast Anchour before Gaualyn or Donkerke, hoping still to haue supply from Parma.

But the English forces being now wholly united, preuented their enemies conioyning together, and followed their footsteps to the Vttermost, continuing foure dayes fight in more deadly manner then at any time before, and hauing incessant cause of fresh incouragement, chased the Spaniardes from place to place, vntill they hadde driuen them into a desperate estate, so as of necessitie, as well for that the Wind was Westerly, as that their enemies encreased, and their owne prouision of Sayles, Cables, and Anchors, greatly wasted, resolued to shape their course by the Orcades, and the Moyth of Ireland: In whole pursuit, if the English had beene but meanly furnished with Victuall, and munition, they would haue brought them all vnto their mercy, but when they saw them past the Orcades, and the Scottish Seas, they made retreate. And if the Spaniards had but two dayes longer continued fight, fight, the English must haue made a retreat for want of shot and powder, and left the Spaniards to their most aduantage.

The Duke of Medina arryued in Spaine

About the end of September, the Duke of Medina, arryued in Spaine, being as much discountenanced at Court, as discouraged in his Journey, and of all his Royall Nauy which hee carryed fourth, there returned only thirteene sayles, foure distressed, the rest whereof, some were taken and spoyled by the English in the narrow Seas, and some taken by the Hollanders, and some made a fayre escape by landing in Scotland but the most perished vpon the Irish coast and taine by Gallowglasses, whose generall losse was much lamented, though Spaine, for that euery noted family had lost a kinsman, or a neere Allie.

The Queene goeth in person to the Campe at Tilbury.

The Queene vpon certaine knowledge of the Spaniards comming, as aforesayd, forthwith setled all her land forces in warlike readinesse, but ordayned no more Campes then that at Tilbury, and when shee saw her enemies to consist onely of two parts, to one purpose, that is to say, the Dukes of Parma, and Medina, minding directly to conioyne, and that the Duke of Guyse was silent, so as the inuasion could but be in two places at most. Shee went in person to Tilbury, where her presence and Princely encouragement, Bellona-like, instilled a second spirit of loue, loyalty, and resolution into euery Souldier in her Army, who hauing at it were ramished with their Soueraignes sight, that as well Commanders, as common Souldiers quite forgate the fickleneese of fortune, and the chance of warre, and prayed heartily, the Spaniardes might land quickly, and when they knew they were fleated, began to lament. The Camp being disclosed, both Prince, and people prayed God for their deliuerance.

Post mille expletos à partu virginis annos;
Et post quingentos rursus ab orbe datos,
Octogesimus octauus mirabilis annus,
Ingruet, infecunis tristia fata ferat:
Si non hoc anno totus malus occidet orbis,
Si non in nihilum terra fretumque ruit:
Cuncta tamen mundi sursum ibunt atq; retrorsum,
Imperia, & luctus vndiq; grandis erit.

The same in English.

When after Christs birth there be expired,
Of hundreds, fiftene yeres, eighty and eight
Then comes the time of dangers to be feard,
And all mankind with dolors it shall fright:
For if the world in that yeere doe not fall,
In Sea and Land then perish no decay,
Yet Empires all, and kingdomes alter shall,
And man to eate himselfe shall haue no way.

Touching these Prophesies or predictions, I wholly referre you to the Reader, called the second comming of Christ, published in the yeere 1583. by Walter Thomas Rogers, Dedicated to Edmond Archbishoppe of Poyke, wherein you may find many things to this purpose: Reade aduisedly, and Iudge Christianly, &c.

The first of Ianuary at night, a great wind in the South-east, blew many houses, ouerthrew trees, and ouerwhelmed great barnes, both in Kent and Essex.

Tempestuous winds.

The 30. of Ianuary the Queenes Maiestie came from Richmond to Westminster, and was receiued by the Maior, Aldermen, and Commissioners of her City of London, in robes of Veluet, and chaines of gold, all on her charge, with the Captaines of the City, to the number of three hundred 5. and 20. of the cleerke by torchlight.

The tenth of Februarie began the Parliament at Westminster.

Parliament at Westmin.

In this moneth of February, diuers seuerall Letters for leuying foure Companies in the Low Countries and for raising foure moneths of two hundred Footmen, were presented at London, & elsewhere in other places, some were set on the pillorie with their eares nailed vnto, some their tongue pierced with an yron, and hanged on trees, &c. which the Queene sent to other.

Francis Kett burnt at Norwich.

About this time one Francis Kett, Master of Art of Cambridge, was conuented before Iohn Bishop of Norwich, for hee hauing diuers detestable opinions against Christ our Sauiour, and was burnt here in the City of Norwich.

The 29. of March by the Queene the Parliament brake vp: at the which Parliament was granted vnto her Maiestie 32. subsidies of 2. s. 8. pence the pound, and foure fifteenes, and a tenth.

Parliament dissolued.

The 14. of April, Charles Howard Earle of Nottingham

rundell was arraigned at Westminster of high Treason, and was found guiltie by his peeres, and had iudgement accordingly.

Portugall voyage, and cause thereof.

When the whole kingdom had giuen thanks vnto God as aforesayd, for their ease obtained victory, against the late glorious Spanish Armado: then the Queen & Councell vpon deliberate consultations, aswell concerning the prelention of a second inuasion by the Spaniards, whose fifty reuenfoegements, and generall preuision for the like purpose, was by good intelligence made known, as also to manifest vnto the whole world, the power, and valour of the English, to propagate their honor vpon the greatest Potentate of the vniuerse, being ascertained that the entire Nation retained still their late courage, and resolution. Thereupon concluded with the prime of the ensuing Spring, to furnish a lusty army to the sea, of meet skilfull saylers, valiant leaders, & expert commanders, and for the more prosperity, and abetting of this expedition, the Queene was pleased to accept into her protection, Don Antonio, late King of Portugal, hauing from time to time, vsed all possible inducements, to moue the Queene thereunto, assuring her, that in his cause of quarrell for the Crowne, there should be no hazard of battell, nor slaughter of her subiects, but only to land him in Portugall, and there leaue him to his fortune, where he allured himselfe, the Portugals would ioyfully receiue him, and conioyne other forces against the Spanish faction, but neither preued true, vpon consideration whereof, and the premisses, the Queene made Sir John Norris, a most valiant renowned man at armes, and of singular iudgement in martiall discipline, and Sir Francis Drake, a most excellent Nauigator, famous, and fortunate, Generalls ioyntly together.

Two Generalls in this voyage.

In this present enterprise, the Queen aduentured 6. ships, and about three score thousand pounds in money: the two generalls, and their particular friends aduentured fiftie thousand pounds, the rest of the charges concerning ships, seamen, victuall, munition, &c. was wholly supplyed by London, the Cinque ports, and Hauens in the West Country, Ipswich, Warwich, New-Castle, and other Port Townes Northwards, being in all, one hundreth sixtie and six sayle, small and great.

The Aduenturers.

The Generals by vertue of their Commissions pressed foure thousand men, which was more then needed by forty hundred, because the number of voluntaries did not onely exceede that rate, but were dayly sued vnto by many to accept their free service in this expedition, yet notwithstanding they exceeded their commission further, and pressed more, for which they both received a checke, by reason it was very apparant, the admirable forwardnesse of all men, who from the highest to the lowest, so much loued and honoured the Generalls, and affected the present enterprise, that if was superfluous to presse any, whose number so dayly encreased vpon them, as they refused many, yea at this time such was the frowardnesse not onely of Sayelers, and Souldiers, but also of Aduenturers in the voyage, that contrary to expectation, and wonted dexterity of other former voyages, they were fully furnished, and ready to sette forward, according to the first appointment, a matter seldome performed by the English, to the great aduantage of their enemies.

The people forward onelie.

The Earle of Essex, though much suspected, yet vnknowne to the Queene, by meanes of sir Roger Williams, made his secret position to make the Generals vpon the coast of Portugal, Colonell Williams having sent his Regiment with the Generalls, lingered vpon the coast, to receiue the Earle, and his company, and then set forward.

The Earle of Essex by knowne to the Queene goeth to Portugall.

The eighteenth of Aprill, the sayd Generalls with fourteene thousand haue land souldiers, and some thousand expert Saylers, with many Gallant Knights and Gentlemen, right valiant leaders, and meet skilfull Nauigators, set sayle at Plimmouth for this expedition, viz. first to goe to Saint Andreas, and all other Hauens, where knowledge should be giuen them of any remainder of the Kings shippes, in his last yeeres voyage, or any other assembly of ships, prouision, or munition, and doe to their best, to burne & destroy them, then to land Don Antonio safely in Portugal, and to surprize and spoyle the Ilands, and returne, but contrary to this direction and determination, whether through diuision of the Generals, or sinister instructions, sent them after their departure, or whether through improuisnesse of their fierie spirited souldiers, whose liues were loathsome to themselues, vntill they were in action. The simple truth could neuer be plainly vnderstood, though the pretext were, that they onely came why the English crost their best fortunes in Portugal and the Ilands, by attempting to win the Groyne, was, first to burne a Galleon, two hulkes, and certaine Gallies of the last yeares seruice, and then to winne the towne for a Rendeuous, if they should be driuen to retreat, &c. and thereupon after 6. dayes sayle, hauing contrary winds, they landed in a Bay, within two myles of the Groyne, and instantly besieged the base towne.

The whole number of souldiers and sayers.

The purpose of this voyage.

The next day early, Generall Norris surueyed the strength and situation of the towne and Hauen, and where it was aptest to be assaulted and vndermined, because it standeth vpon a Necke in an Iland: this Iland is as pleasant, and healthfull a place, as any is in Spayne, vnto which many repaire to recouer health. But if those Townes be once infected, they are longer in recouery of their wonted health, then other places of grosser aye: And at this time it was infected, by entertayning sicke persons, of the last yeres voyage for England, and when the Generall had obserued as aforesayd, the strength of the wall, and manner of the bay ditch, made a fierce tryall by Escalade, which in that space he might land his great Artillery, to preuent the former danger of the kings shippes, which liewisely annoyed him the day before, at which time Generall Drake with fiue hundred men, made the like attempt attempt by Sea at the wall of water, in which space, Collonell Bret, Collonell Vmpton, Captaine Winkefield, Captaine Hunter, and others with their regiments, made hot assault vpon the base Towne, in diuers places, whereat the Inhabitants all amazed flodde quickly for the most part into the high Towne, which could not be impeached by the assaylants, because they knew not their secret passages, and though the most part escaped, yet many were slaine at first entrance, and many which hid themselues in secret places, were dayly discouered and taken, amongst whom of note then taken in the base Towne, was Don Iohn de Severa, a Commissary of victuals, who informed the Generals of many matters, concerning the Kings purpose and prouision, &c. In the base Towne was great quantitie of victuals, and all manner of munition, which the Commissary sayd was for a new Armada, or store-house, for a second voyage into England, the common souldiers, finding store of wine in euery Celler, careleste of their proper healths, present danger, and imployment, or ought thereof vntill they were senseleste, and vnserniceable, which immoderate drinking bred the plague of pestilence extreamely. The Generalls for redresse thereof, caused the heads of all wine vessells to be stricken out, according to a former president, vpon the like occasion in the conquest of Saint Domingo, Lago, &c. lest the whole Army should haue perished by that disorder, they were faine also to sinke two ships which were infected, thinking thereby to haue cleared themselues of that contagion, but could not. The aforesayd Gallions and Hulkes, perceiuing the base towne to be taken, they ouercharged their Ordinance, fired their ships, and then.

A great disorder in drinking a mong the English.

The plague began a mongst the English.

The resolution of the Englih.

The Generalls perceiuing their souldiers to be very apt, and resolute to performe any exployts, omitting neither time or opportunity, presently attempted to winne the high Towne, in which attempt, they take a Cloyster adioyning to the Towne, for reseue whereof, and to releeue the Towne, there appeared two thousand Spanyardes marching towards them, in such violence, as though they would haue entred in despite of their enemies: but at first resistance, they turned their backes, and fled in as great disorder as they made approach, whose Celeritie in running, exceeded the English, who pursued them a large myle, and could not ouertake them.

The high towne besieged and assaulted.

The Spaniards made a bauado.

The Generals caused many executions to be made into the land, who continually brought in much Cattell, and other prouision.

The high towne besieged.

The Artillery being planted neere the wals of the high towne, attempt was made to take a great store-house of munition, adioyning to the wal, which the Spaniards preuented by setting it a fire. The greatest want the English had to maintaine this siege, was great Artillery, els doubtlesse the higher, with the lower, must haue known England for their gouernor, but hauing warily planted such as they had for their owne safety, and most preiudice of the enemy, hauing well prepared to make assaule, summoned the towne to a parley, whereat some in the towne shot at the drummer, and vnmercifully after that, there was one hanged ouer the wall, and a parley desired, wherein they signified that the parties executed, was he that shotte at the English drum, requiring safe warres with promise to performe the like.

The English vndermine vnminable, yet hee found one place hopefull; the high towne where his peoners in three dayes labour, being the seauenth day after the winning of the base Towne, bedded their powder, but not farre enough into the wall, by which time the great Artillery had made a breach in another part of the wall, hauing all men readie at an instant, some to enter the breach, others to make a fierce attempt vppon that place, which the powder should blow vp, &c. but contrary to expectation, the powder being fired, found a vent, and bake out backward, by meanes whereof, their present labours were all lost: the same night the miners beganne to worke againe, and within two dayes attayned the foundation, against which time, all things were in their former readinesse, then was fire giuen to the trayne, which blew vp halfe the Mower, vnder which the powder was planted: the resolute assaylants appointed for that place, with speede, and courage, gaue a fierce assault, and were entred the top of the new made breach, but on the sudden the other halfe of the Mower fell vpon them breaking their limbes, beating their weapons out of their hands, and ouerwhelmed many in the heap of stones, at which strange accident, the soulders all amazed, forsooke their leaders in their most distresse. Amongst others that perished in the ruines of the mine, was Captaine Sydenham; hauing some or fiue great stones lying on his lower parts, could neither stirre himselfe, nor bee relieued by any reasonable meanes, and beeing the next day slaine, there perished twelue persons attempting to releeue him.

Generall Norris vpon certaine intelligence that the Conde de Andrada, with 8. thousand men lay in Camp, within 6. miles, vnto whose aide, the Conde de Altemira, had leuied twelue thousand, meaning forthwith to conioyne their forces to reseue the Groyne, to besiege the English in the base Towne, to stop them from further inuasion, and to set vpon them when they should imbarke, &c.

The Spanish Army to reseue the Groyne.

For speedy preuention of their conioyning as otherwise, the next morning early, the Generall in person onely with nine regiments, went to visite them, viz. in the vaunt Guarde, the regiment of sir Roger Williams, sir Edw. Norris, and Collonell Sidney, in the Battell of the Generall, Collonell Lane, and Collonell Markeriye, and in the reareward, Sir Henry Norris, Collonell Huntley, and Collonell Brett, leauing the other fiue regiments with Generall Drake, to guard the Cloyster, and Artillery, Generall Norris, being as aforesayd, some by breake of day, marched towards the enemy, very faire and easily, hauing commanded his men, vpon paine of death, not to stirre, or bring any cause whatsoeuer, either to discharge or breake array without a signall giuen them, and being come to the top of the hill, they marched by three, and three, in a ranke, which made a great shew vpon the side of a mountaine, so as the Spaniards deemed their number to be far greater then they were.

Heere vnto the Spaniards Campe was a riuer, which had a foord, and a bridge, where they lay strongly fortified, the Generall still marched on, as if he meant resolutely to passe the foord whereupon the Spaniardes drew some of their forces from the bridge to the foord, from whence came many large volleyes of musket shot, as thicke as hayle, and lighted oft vpon the English Army, who obeying their Generals command stirred not, nor discharged one peece, the neerer the English approached the Foord, so much the more the Spaniards thundred out their shot, vnto euery which volly flying round about their eares, the General turning his face towardes the enemy, would bow his body, and vale his Bonnet, saying, I thanke you sir, to the great admiration of all his Campe, and of Generall Drake, who by this time was come to the hill top, to make supply and to behold the fortune, but vpon the sudden, the Generall bent his course towards the Bridge, and hauing giuen his Souldiers a signall vnto battell, made a fierce assault, being at first very sharply resisted, where sir Edward Norris, and others being at push of pike, and Pel-mell was striken downe, and very oūgerously wounded in the head, with an arming sword, and was instantly relieued by the Generall; the Spaniards perceiuing the resolution of the English, notwithstanding the competency of their owne number, and prouision as Baracadoes, and defences, against all assaults, betooke themselues to flight, after whom the Vauntgarde of the English, being in number some thousand, made pursuit foure miles, three seuerall waies, killing all they could ouertake, and in their returne they found many hid in vines, and hedges, which they slew also. After that Captaine Merkes went three miles farther, and surprised a Cloyster wherein he slew two hundreth persons, in the Spanish camp was store of victuals, Ammunition and good apparell.

Burning this seruice, the Saylers also went a shore, into an Iland next adioyning to their shippes, burning and spoyling whatsoeuer they found.

The Generalls hauing held diuers Counsels, and seeing the infection to increase exceedingly amongst their people, and wanting great Artillery, to performe any great Matterry, and hauing by the last conflict freed themselues from common daunger of their enemies, so as without hazard or interruption they might depart at pleasure. The eight of May, they imbarked themselues, after they had fired euery house in the base Towne, and whilest they were at Sea, being vnreached by contrary winds, the Generalls were diuided in opinions concerning the rest of their purpose, and imployment, but in the end, they agreed vpon these Articles following.

Articles set downe, and agreed vpon by sir John Norris, and sir Francis Drake, Generals of her maiesties forces written aboard her Maiesties good shippe, called the Reuenge, the fourteenth of May, Anno Dom. 1586.

First, our landing place, with Gods fauour, to be within the Burlings, twelue leagues on this side Lithoone, if winde and weather permit it.

2 That fiue Souldiers shall be left aboord, euery one of the smaller vessels, ten aboard of euery ship of the second sort, and fifteene aboord euery one of the best.

3 That no manner of spoyle bee made in Portugall, and that euery Captaine haue speciall charge giuen him to command his officers that no man in any wise be suffered to straggle from his Colours.

4 That no house be burned in Portugall, or any fire vsed, but such as must needes bee of necessitie, vpon paine of death.

5 That no man, woman or child in Portugal be hurt or spoyled, by any person whatsoeuer, vpon payne of death.

6 That no Church, Monastery, Image or Crosse, bee spoyled in Portugall vpon paine of Death.

7 That no souldier spend his powder, bullet, or match more then that as shall bee needfull, whereunto euery Captain shall specially charge his officers, to looke carefully to this and all other necessarie matters.

8 Finally it is agreed by the Generals, that no manner of Hospitality, whatsoeuer bee at any time vsed to any Portugall, vpon paine of death.

The winde beeing contrary, it was nine dayes before they could recouer the Burlings, where they met the Earle of Essex and his brother Walter Deuereux, Sir Roger Williams, Sir Phillip Butler, and Sir Edward Wingfield, after they had run, as farre as Cadize in Andaluzia, seeking the English Army, beeing for the most part ignozant of the Generalls secret determination, and of their being at Goyne.

The Earle of Essex meeteth the Generals.

The fifteenth of May, they landed within two miles of Peniche in Portugall, with great daunger of shot from the Castle, and of drowning the wind being bigge. The Conde de Fuentes issued forth of the Towne with fiue companies: the Earle of Essex with his company and leaders, seeing them approch, prepared to giue encounter, then the Conde changed his course, as if hee meant to charge vpon the Generall, who was marched vp to the Sand hills, But when hee beheld the English hold on their course, he retired into the land, and being pursued he made a stand, and stood a while at push of pike, then the Generall and the Earle of Essex with their Forces made Approach neere vnto the towne, which they found vnfortified and and the inhabitants fled: and hauing possessed themselues thereof, they summoned the Castle to a parly, and when the gouernor thereof vnderstood for certaine, that their late king Don Antonio, was there, he yeelded the Castle, with such munition as he had, promising the neighbor Country should come vnto their ayde, who when they came, were only a few religious persons, and other poore people.

So soone as the Generals had planted garrison in the Towne, and Castell, with prouision for cure of sicke, and wounded persons, then they absolutely concluded, that General Norris with his land forces, should presently march towards Lithbone, where Generall Drake, should meet him with his nauall forces, Artillery, and other furniture within so many dayes, and then conioyne their strength, to make a resolute assault by Sea, and Land, vpon which solemne Agreement, Generall Norris, with the Earle of Essex, and the rest appointed for Land seruice, continued their course toward Lithbone, in which iourney, the common people of the Country would shally cry, Viue el rey Don Antonio, which was the greatest ayd the English had of the Portugalls. The Campe being lodged within three miles of Lithbone, there died many English men, which some say, was by eating of hony, others say they were poysoned by drinking of standing water, the foure and twentieth of May, the Earle of Essex and sir Roger Williams, with a thousand men, went forth in the night, and lay in Ambush, neere vnto the City: and caused an Alarum to bee giuen, meaning to performe some speciall exployt, but notwithstanding, the loud Alarum, neither Citizens nor garison would issue forth, which the Earle perceiuing, hee departed by breake of day.

General Norris and the Earle march to Lithoone.

The 25 of May, in the euening, the Generall with his Campe came to the Suburbes of Lithbone, where Sir Roger Williams, and Captaine Anthony Winkefield, with fifty shot scoured all the streets vntill they came neere the high Towne, and met with none but old folkes and beggars, crying, viue el re Don Antonio, &c. The rest fled into the City, who though they fired many chiefe houses, yet they left much wealth behind them.

The Suburbes of Lithbone taken by the English.

The English after fiue dayes tedious march, were extreame weary, which the Spaniards plainely perceiuing, issued forth vpon them very lustily in three places, especially vpon Colonell Bretts quarter, who being at rest, with as much spade as might be, set his men in order, in which fight himselfe with Captaine Karsey, and Captaine Carre were slayne, the Earle of Esser strongly resisted, and chased them backe to the high Towne, Captain York encountred their horsemen, and forced them to fly into out houses which stood open, where they were found and slaine instantly, in this attempt the Spannish garrison of Lithbone, lost many of their Commaunders, and common souldiers.

And whereas Generall Drake, contrary to the expectation of Generall Norris, and the Earle, came not vnto their ayde according to his faithfull promise, but had altered that pernicious course and found an easier exployt, being now possest of Calacais without resistance, in whose Apology, for not performing what hee freely vndertooke, notwithstanding any former imputation touching his personall vallour thus much may be sayd.

Generall Drake breaketh his promise & commeth not to Lithbone.

1 First, hee was expressly commaunded by the Queene, not to endanger any of the Ships Royall,

2 Secondly, hee could not assay to passe the Riuer vp to Lithbone, without extreame hazard of Saint Iulians Castle.

3 If in the attempt, any of his vauntgard should by shot or any otherwise founder in the Riuer, then could not the rest follow.

4 If any of the vereward by any misfortune should perish in the Channell, or that the enemie of purpose after the nauy was past, should sinke some of their owne great vessels in the streame, then could hee not returne without great losse, and extreame danger.

Lastly, if none of these should happen as aforesayd, and that hee had gone in full strength vnto Lithbone, in which space the English land forces should be discomfited, and the winds holde contrary, then had he no meanes of relefe, but rest subiect to the spoyle, or mercy of the enemy, &c.

The English by this time had performed many valorous attempts, neere Lithbone, and other places, sufficient to manifest vnto the Portugalls, their faith, and forwardnesse to conioyne with them, for re-establing of their late King, but finding them rather careleste, then otherwise, and seeing very apparantly that all hopes, plots, and protestations, made by Don Antonio, to bee of none effect, or likelihood, and that their men by sickenesse decreased dayly, and the most part of their Artillery and field furniture was with general Drake, whom they knew to haue alienated his determination, as also vnderstanding that the King of Spaines power dayly increased, and would shortly take aduantage of their diuision, being vpon experience to well assured, that the Portugalls onely sought wealth, not warres, Generall Norris, in Marshall order, prepared to retire himselfe and all his Traine, towards Calcais, being the day in which generall Drake should haue come vp to Lithbone.

General Norris and the Earle return from Lithbone.

The Portugals faint hearted.

Within two dayes after they were come to Calcais, they had intelligence that the Spaniards in Lithbone had made head of purpose to bid them battell, whereat the English greatly reioyced, and marched foorthwith in very good order vnto the place where the Spaniards pretended to try their fortune in the open field, but the night before the comming of the English, the Spaniards had dislodged their Campe, then the Generall and the Earle caused a trumpet to follow them to Lithbone, with a particular Challenge from the Earle, that fifty they durst not abide the hazard of a set battell, yet if they would try the Iustice of their cause in single fight, or any fiue, eight, or ten, if they had any any of like qualitie, but the messenger could get no answere, neither to that, nor to other former Letters written by the generall to the like effect, with reprehension of their scandalous and false reports, depraving the Generall and his Government, accusing the English to sly disorderly, from Lisbone, &c. Presently after that, the Generalls took the Castle of Calcais, which being in their possession, they imbarked at pleasure, and from the second of June, they employed their time in taking a fleete of Easterlings, many of them being laden with coyne, and munition. And whereas their chiefe determination, next unto the replanting of Don Antonio, was to surprise the Ilands, as well to possesse them as to take the spoyle, such was the extreamitie of pestilence at this time amongst their souldiers, who by that meanes were almost halfe wasted, so as in their best iudgement, they saw themselues altogether unable to performe any great matter, they bent their course for England.

Reasons why the English attempted not to winne the Ilands.

The Generals arrive in England.

Generall Drake arrived at Plimmouth, the one and twentieth of June, and Generall Norris arrived the third of July, with great indignation one against the other.

Certain rude Souldiers punished to burne Bartholomew faire.

Concerning their Saylers, and souldiers, some of them went into Barbary, some into France, others into Flanders, and the rest came to Plymmouth, where they had fine shillings in money, and their furniture allowed them.

Certaine of those furious vndaunted spirits, after they had performed many vnruly prankes, in diuers shires, began to plot how they might atchieue some speciall act, to relieue their present want; and in the end concluded to surprise Bartholomew faire, and to that purpose fine hundred of them were assembled about Westminster: the Lord Maior hauing knowledge thereof, vppon the sudden raised almost two thousand men very well appointed and about tenne a clocke at night, they marched as farre, as Temple barre, to repulse that Rout, and then the Lord Treasurer sent word by the Chamberlaine of London, that the rable was dispearst and gone, and then the Citizens returned.

London in Armes.

Don Antonio, returned into England with the Generals, and after that went into France, where he liued and died in very poore estate.

The 26. they tooke the lower towne by assault, together with great store of Ordinance, Victuals, Cables, Ropes, and other furniture for shipping.

Voyage for Portugall.

About the first of May, they fought with the Spanyardes at Puente de Burgos Bridge, where the enemy feeble with losse of seuen hundred men.

The seuenth of May, the lower Towne of Groyne was burned, and on the ninth, our fleete set sayle, the thirteenth the Earle of Essex, with master Walter Denoreux his brother, sir Philip Butler, sir Roger Williams, and sir Edward Winkefield, met with our fleete. The fifteenth, the whole nauy arrived at Peniche in Portugal, where in despight of the enemies, our people were set aland, and the same day wanne both the Towne and Castle of Peniche. After this they diuided the Army, whereof part marched with sir Iohn Norris, by land to Lisbone, the rest with sir Francis Drake passed by Sea to Castcales. The 24. our men entred the suburbs of Lisbone, where they obtained rich spoyles spoyles, and plenty of euery good thing. The twentie seuenth, the army being viewed, was found to be weake, and of sm all force to sustaine so great a siege as that was like to bee, besides the want of powder, and some other necessaries: for which causes, after Counsell taken, they left Lisbone, and came to Castcales, without any great fight or skirmish, where they tooke the Castle, & thence returned for England. There followed them nine Gallies, who fighting with two English Marchants ships, by comming of the Queenes shippes discharging but one piece at them they retired, and so our ships came safely to Vigo, where landing our men, the towne was taken, and the Country walked, &c. More at large this matter is published in print both in Latine and English.

The one and twentieth of June, sir Francis Drake arriued at Plimmouth, and on the third of July, Sir Iohn Norris, with the rest of the Fleete arryued there also.

Great lightning and thunder.

The 1. of August at night, was the greatest lightning and thunder, that had at any time bin seene or heard about London, in the memory of any man liuing, and yet thankes be giuen to God, little hurt heard of.

Sir Iohn Norris and Sir Francis Drake, being returned, as ye haue heard, many of their Saylers, and Souldiers, shortly after their landing, fell sicke, and dyed of a stanch bred amongst them on ship bord, other some of them so rudely behaued themselues about the Country, about the Court, & elsewhere, that many men mistiked of their doings, and diuers of them being appzehended, on the 27. of August, one was hanged on the end of a signe, at an Inne dooze in the Towne of Kingstone vpon Thames, for a tzaytoz to the reit. The 29. of August, two moze were hanged in Smithfield, two at the Mowerhill, two besides Westminster, and one at Dyborne.

Disordered Souldiers executed.

About the 21. of September, the Citizens of London furnished a thousand men to be sent ouer into France, to the ayding of Henry late King of Navarre, then challenging the Crowne of France as rightfull inheritor by lawfull succession. Also diuers shires in England sent into France to the same ayde, some shires a thousand, as Kent and other shires, and some shires lesse. All which companies were sent ouer into France, vnder the conduct of Peregrine Bart, Lord Willoweby, and Ereby.

Men furnished into France.

Lodowicke Grinell pressed to death.

The first of November, Lodowike Grinell, of Wilcote in the County of Warwick Esquire was brought from the Mower of London, to Westminster, and there at the Kings bench bar, being accellary to murder, wherewith he was charged, was arraigned, and found guilty: but standing mute, had iudgement to be pressed to death: and was accordingly executed in the goale of the Kings bench in Southwark on the fourteenth of November, on the which day for committing the murther, as principall, his man was hanged in the Palace Court at Westminster.

Citizens of London fined by Star. An. Reg. 32.

In this moneth of November, the Citizens of London were sundry times fright ed by casualtie of fire about new Fishstreete; that times in one weeke, the Citizens raised lights, hanged out at euery doore, and euery man laboured for his owne safety.

This present yeare 1589. had also a share of the last yeares planetary influence in France also, betweene the French King and the Duke of Guyle, the King vpon long conceiued iealousie of the Dukes estimation and greatnesse in generall reputation, as well with the Clergie, Peeres, and common people of France, as with the Emperour, Kings of Spaine, and Polland, as with the conclaue, all which greeble had ostentimes from his father, who winne Callis from the English, and after that obtained the rest by his owne valour, prowesse, and discreete carriage of himselfe in his sundry services for the King, against all forraine occasions, and domesticque insurrections, so as for diuers yeares past, and at this time the Dukes reputation, honor, and credite in Fraunce, was farre greater then the Kings. The Queene of England had often animated the King to suppresse the Guyse, and his faction: but doe what the King could, such was the generall loue of all men vnto the Duke, as all attempts were baine, vntill this time, and notwithstanding the kings secret practise to cut him off, yet the Duke had tane intelligence of the Kings intent, and that the next morning early, there would be a dangerous Councell held, for performance of some deadly purpose, concluded vpon last night, by the diuelish Councels against his person, and it was further told him, that his chiefe aduersaries onely for 2. dayes space, were bourely whispering in the Kings eare, had spectall offices given them, and with hurrying intercourse from place to place, deliuered them as if they were distract, and that his inward friends, were much discountenanced, and Duke Dispernon, the Kings great Fauourite, was made Commander of a new, and vnknowne guard, &c. vnto all which aduertisemences, the Guyse gaue no credite, saying, the King is as honorable, as mighty, and therefore will not murder me, he is wise, and considerate of my euer loyalty, and many wounds in my body, giuen by his enemies in his sull defence, &c. and therefore will not intend any hard measure against me: Thus the Duke flattering himselfe rested secure, and by any meanes would not vnite his friends for his owne defence, early in the morning it was told the Duke, that his Maiestie had sent for him to come to Counsel immediatly, and when the Duke came to the Court, he saw watches in corners, and the gates double guarded, and well armed, and at the great Chamber dooze stood his deadly enemies in armes, at sight whereof, proffering to draw his rapier, some ssued forth from behind the Arras and slue him, when the Dutchesse of Guyse vnderstood thereof, then went she and her husbands mother vnto the King, and begged the body of the Duke to bury it, but he roughly denyed their request, whereat the old Dutchesse was extreamely bered, and with a furious spirit rayled vpon him liberally, whereupon the King committed her to prison: About that time when the Duke of Guyse was slaine, the King had sent diuers to the lodging of Cardinall Guyse, who strangled him with his Lyppet: The death of these two Noblemen being knowne vnto the people, they instantly like mad men, and swarmes of Bees, seeke out the Duke of Guyses Brothers and friendes, implozing vengeance on their King, amongst which, a Capuching Fryer, in his owne person, moze forward then the rest, tooke vpon him to auenge the death of the Duke and his brother, vpon the person of the King, and being asked if he durst loke an angry King in the face, hee answered, yes, yes, yes, and kill him to, and in this rage, makes haste vnto the King, vnto whom with his left hand offered a petition, and as the King stooped to take it, the Fryer with his right hand stabbed the King into the body, with an ouenomed knife, wherewith he died, and the Fryer stabbed to death, with the same knife, by such as were about the King. The King being dead, which was called by the name of Henry the third, of the ancient house of Valois, there remained none of that kamily. After him rightly succeeded Henry of Burbon King of Nauarre, amongst whom the Leagers very strongly and straungely for many yeares, made such resistance, as in the end, the King consented vnto most of their demaundes.

The French King slaine.

The French King to forced to flee to Diepe, he is encouraged onely by the English.

The Duke de Maine forceth the King to fly to Diepe.

The Queene of England reliueth the French King at an instant, & in his most neede.

The said Henry the fourth being altogether too weake to attaine the French Diadem, by reason the greatest part of Princes, Peeres, and common people of Fraunce, had long before combined themselues in league against him, and were sustayned by the Emperor, the King of Spaine, and the Dukes of Parma, and Sauoy, by meanes whereof, they forced their new King this present yeere in September to fly into Diepe for his last refuge, and shippes were come into the hauen, to haue transported him into England: But at this instant the Duke de Maine, had taken the full aduantage of his fortune, and resolutely continued his siege, the King must either haue yeelded or imbarked for England, the King thus distressed sent speedily post to the Queene of England: as to his best and sweet friend for ayde: who with all expedition leuied 6000. lustie soulders, well appointed vnder the commaund of that excellent braue soldier Sir Peregrine Bartt, Lord Willoughby, son to the late Dutches of Suffolke, the sudden repast of whose approach to Diepe, caused the Duke de Maine very hastily to raise his siege and goe into the field: the King was not a little animated and cheered at sight of the Lord Willoughby, with the Queenes kind letters, and the English forces. And from that time forward the leaguers fainted, and the King by degrees preuayled in France, hauing incessant successes of munition, victuall, men and money from England, besides the Queenes singular care, and great expence of men, money and shippes, for the extirpation of the selled Spaniardes in Britany, which was performed only by the valour and industry of the English, vnder Captain Iohn Norris and his brethren, with many other of like noble disposition.

Note.

And albeit, the Kings wars against the Leaguers, and their Alyes, continued very fierce for diuers yeares, and his greatest wants hourely supplyed from England, yet the King would neuer permit the English to possesse any particular City, Towne, or Castell, for their Rendeuous or safety, neither doth any French Chronicler truly expresse or acknowledge the Queen of Englands fauours, manifold great expences of money, & waste of her people, directly imployed in this needfull seruice, although the King with his owne mouth, hath diuers times acknowledged it.

The Duke de Mayne, as aforesayd, after hee had neglected his great aduantage vpon the King at Diepe, and for feare of the six thousand English which came with the Lord Willoughby by reason their number, and prouision, was famed among the French to be thrice as great, as indeed they were: The Duke vpon diuers pretences retyred with his Campe vp into the land, after whom the King with his forces marched, as well to giue Battell, as to besiedge Townes, and Cities, for at that time his most best friendes were present with him, because there were not ten Colonies of note throughout all France, that could enduce to heare him named: The chiefe Princes and Peeres with the Commons of the land, in their Aristocracy, like to the Netherlanders vpon semblable pretence, Confederated against his Legitimation and right of succession to the Crowne, hoping and presuming to bee backed, like vnto their next neighbours, but the King perfilled in his vndoubted right, being forced for the most part to beare his passage with the sword: the Duke with his friends and confederates, chiefe of the Leaguers, which name of holy League, and Leaguers, they imposed vpon themselues by way of Catholique combination, for conseruation of their established Religion, by reason the King was generally reputed amongst them as an heritique, and for nine yeares space they distinguished themselues, and their faction by that title from all others, the Queene of England dayly animated the King against them, who of himselfe, after he had regained possession of the field performed all kingly valour and resolution, and in a plaine set Battell, ouerthrew the Duke with all his strength, as well Spaniards and Wallones, as native French, and forced him to flie with small attendance vnto Paris, where fearely he was receiued, and his chiefe friend, Count Egmond, retyred as hastily into Flaunders, vnto the Duke of Parma, yet the Duke after sundry encouragements as well by his forraine, as domestique friends, reinforced himselfe, and very stoutly kept the field, encountring his enemies, & relieuing his friends: the King not beeing a little heartned with this great victory, forthwith prepares to besiedge the great City of Paris, and Saint Dennis, who hauing taken diuers Townes, and done his best to stop reliefe, by land and water, approached with his whole Campe, before Paris, the fifteenth of Aprill, omitting neither time nor opportunitie, yet neuertheless in all his actions, actions, and attempts, not only there, but in all other places, hee shewed himselfe a true King and kind father, preserving lenity, and suppressing seuerity, the City of Paris hauing but bare fiftene dayes warning, to prouide themselues, and repaire their many ruines, being at this day the most populous City of Europe, and altogether vnprouided of competent munition, or ten dayes victuall for the multitude: notwithstanding there were many, that forsooke the City for feare of the Kings coming, with as much speede and diligence as was possible, increased their prouision, fortified their weake walles, beate downe such outhouses as might giue annoyance, and euery one according to their ability, gaue frankely towardes the common charge, the poorer sort that had no coyne, bestowed their labour as occasion serued. This headlesse people, and distracted multitude, vpon certaine knowledge of the Dukes late ouerthrow, with their dayly decrease of their other friends, were as loath to endure the apparant misery of warre, if they resisted, as to admit the Kings Gouernment if they yeelded, yet through perswasion of their Preachers, and encouragement of the Nobility, they became wonderous resolute to abide all extreamities, rather then to giue place to Heresie, executing imaginarie Iustice without the Authority of some of Law, vpon all such as either desired peace or impugned their setled determination, of which kind of offendors, to the number of twenty were throwne into the riuer.

And whereas the Parisians were neuer knowen to admit any garison but of themselues, yet at this time of their owne earnest desire, they entertained three thousand Lance Knights and made them Maisters of their Store-houses, munition, and chiefe passages, because neither the Citizens nor other inhabitants should presume of fauour, either through kindred or acquaintance, and after much adoe, they chose the Duke de Nemours for their Generall, in whose name all things were ordered. The King as fast as he could procured them of all manner of succour, both by land and water, and destroyed all their milles, neere vnto the City, his whole force at that time, was but twelue thousand foote, and three thousand horse, wherewith he besieged that mighty City with the suburbs of S. Dennis, which not long after for want of foode yeelded, as diuers other strong holdes had done before.

About the middle of May, the chiefe rulers of the City began exactly to survey their store and prouision, and to calculate their number of people, that could not make their owne prouision: and they found two hundred thousand of that sort remaining with them, and that there was a pound of bread a day for euery one if the siege should continue yet a moneth longer, within which space or within few dayes after they perswaded themselues, that the Duke de Maine, had practised with the King of Spain, that the Duke of Parma and his brauo leaders should conioyne with the Army of Leaguers to raise the siege and driue the King from all his hopes in France, but through delayes the King tooke heart of grace, and the Cities misery dayly encreased, in whom the olde Prouerbe was truely fulfilled, Viz. while the grasse growes the horse starues, for about the end of June, the former alowance of a pound of bread a day was come to sixe ounces, and within few dayes after, to foure ounces, and in the beginning of July, an Egg was well worth six pence, and within few dayes after, worth twelue pence, hauing by this time eaten vp almost all their horses, Mules, and Asses, so as dogges, cats, Pyes, and rats, either quicke or dead, were of the best sort holde for dainty meate, and solde for much money, and in August a pound of bread was worth sixe shillings, and a pound of butter fiueteene shillings, Rich Iewels, plate, braue apparell, and gallant coaches might haue beene bought for the wealth of their poore possessors wanted Almes basket, many poore people were seene to eate raw Dogs flesh in the streetes, the intrailes whereof they would hide in stinking places for another time, was secretly found by others and eaten lustily with the soueraigne sauce of all meate namely hunger, the Popes Legate and the Spanish Ambassadour, Don Bernardine de Mendosa, allowed forty pound of money euery day during this extreamity, to be bestowed in bread, and giuen to the poore, at this season it was hard to distinguish the poore from the rich, the seruant from the maister, and the Noble from the peasant, this intolerable penury pinched the Nobility, and great Ladies, as well as the Communalty, and albeit through hayly preachings, and other perswasions, the most part of the Multitude, still sore against their mindes, endured this vnspeakeable calamity, yet some murmured, and cryed outright for peace with the King, who were euer answered with the vsuall or common Answere of all Leaguer Women, when the King summoned them to yeeld: viz, that if the King would submit himselfe into the bosome of the Church, then they would prostrate their liues, and seruice at his feete, otherwise they would take warning by Germany, England and Flanders, &c. and rather endure the extremity of death and famine as they had begun, then admit his gouernment.

And as the Duke de Mayne practised abroad to increase his strength, hoping speedily to raise the siege: so the King for his owne behoofe, stirred vp a faction within the Towne vpon aduantage of their misery and diuision, which faction, preuailed so farre, shewing many reasons why they should yeelde, and affirming it was impossible, to hold out twenty dayes, though they should eate one another: so as the Gouernour with other Dukes, Earles, and Barrons, were faine to vse all policy, paynes and industry, to appease that daungerous vproare, with promise to yeelde within eight dayes, if in that space the Citie were not relieued, and the siege raised: & from that time vntill the comming of the Prince of Parma, which was not within 20. dayes after, they holp the people in great obedience, but by that meanes the Kings purpose was preuented: who determined not to depart, vntill he had brought them to his proper obedience. And they as resolutely bent themselues in resistance, & in their dayly discourse, touching the Kings ayders, Ordinance, Hoyse, and Munition, they would say, be of good cheere, the King is only backed and furnished from England, but wee and our friends, are seconded from Italy, Spayne, Flaunders and Germany, besides the matchlesse strength of resolute Leaguers in this holy Vnion: but amongst other things of note, concerning their present hopes, and feares, and encrease of hearts griefe, to their emptie stomacks, it was now harueſt time, and the hungry Parisians, might be hold round about them, in their enemies possessions, but of their owne sowing great store of goodly ryge corne, and being rauished with the sight and desire thereof, many of them perished by their enemies, in issuing forth to gather some. The King and the City skirmished oft; and prisoners taken on either part, by whom their seuerall estates were made knowne, especially the misery of Paris, was now familiarly vnderstood of the King, and thereupon he made no doubt but to win it within few dayes: but vpon the suddayne, and contrary to his expectation, the Duke of Parma, with his well ordered Campe, and expert Commanders, entred Fraunce, coniopned with the Duke of Mayne, and marched towards Paris, vpon the certayne knowledge hereof, the thirtieth of August, the King withdrew all his forces from Paris, being in number fifteene Thousand Footemen, and almost fiue thousand Hoysemen, and in all haste prepares himselfe to encounter with the sayd Duke. The Parisians, seeing their enemies retired, and knowing their chiefe friends were come, and with them all hope of reliefe and liberty, issued forth and found all their Churches thereabouts vtterly defaced, whereat they were soze vexed, saying, this is the vsuall custome of Heretiques, to spoyle and ruinate Churches, then they returned into the City with all possible gladnes, and notwithstanding their present vncertayne estate, and long sillayned daunger and misery, became instantly secure and negligent, and the same quickely was made knowne vnto the King, who within few dayes sent certaine companies of his most resolute souldiers in a darke night, vnseene and vnsuspected they came into the suburbes, and hauing quietly rayled their ladders, vpon the wall, with great silence began to make assault, and would haue surprised that place, if it had not bene for two Iesuites being more Zelous then the rest of such attempts, who of their owne accord, watched that night, and perceiuing the first man that ascended the wall, one of them stroke him on the head with his Halbard, wherewith he fell from the ladder into the Ditch, and then the Iesuites made an Alarum, whereupon the assaylants leeude, and left all their Ladders behinde them.

The Duke of Parma with eleuen thousand foot & three thousand horse, marcheth through France to Paris.

The siege of Paris raised.

The King had like to haue surprised Paris on the sodaine.

And from this time during that vnnaturall bloody and intestine warres, the City was neuer in like danger, and had the King continued his siege but only 3. or 4. dayes longer, the City muſt haue bene glad to open their gates with prayers that it would please his Maiesty, to accept their humble submission, by reason they had long since, not only eaten by all their Oxen, sheep, Hozses, Mules, Dogs, Weares, Mice, and Rats, with all kind of carrion whatsoeuer, but also all vine leaues, and all manner of Beasts skinnes, and greasie Leather, and all kind of Rots, and Herbes, and for almost three weekes space there was no manner of bread to bee found in the Towne, Neither in Monasteries, nor Noblemens houses, there were many that did beate bones to powder, and boyle it in water, vntill it were thicke, and then eate it, by meanes whereof, for more then halfe the time of the siege there were found dead in the streetes that dyed of famine, at the least thirty thousand, and as Mounsieur Pier Cornex affirmeth in his Booke, the which Duke he Dedicated to the Dutchesse of Nemours, touching the whole siege; being then an eyewitnesse of the premisses, sayth, that of his proper knowledge, there were eaten in the Towne, two and twenty Children, the like was neuer knowne since the destruction of Samaria and Ierusalem, the most part of the people wanted shirts, hats, shoes, and all manner of apparell. And in all places in stead of pleasant Consorts, and melodious musicke, maine shricks and outcryes, of men, women and children, whose best medicine and meanes of reuenge was patience.

The fift of January, about fiue of the clocke in the euening, before the Twelfth day, began a great and terrible Tempest of Wind in the South west, which continued with great vehemency till about 11. of the clocke of the same night, this in the City of London blew the Tiles off mens houses, and ouerthrewe many chimnies, and caused many men feare the ouerthrow of their houses: one of the three West gates of Saint Paules Church, to wit, that next to the Bishoppes Palace was broken with the bolts, barres, and lockes of the same gate, so that it was blowne ouer. In the Country, houses and barnes were blowne ouer, and some of them blowne farre from the places wherein they stood, besides Trees in great numbers blowne vp by the rootes. Of the Seas, no man can tell what harmes were done, by ships and barkes cast away. About Southampton, the ships, and barkes riding at Anchor, were driuen a land and sunke, the like was neuer seene thereabouts.

An. Reg. 33. Imbassadour to the Princes of Germany.

The Account of Dureine, now Duke of Bulian, by the late marriage of his wife, was sent in Imbassage from Henry the 4. now King of France, vnto her Maiestie, to intreat her to interpole her credite with the Princes, Protestants of Germanie, for the raising and sending of an Army of Raitters, or horsemen vnto the ayde of the sayd French King his master, against those of his owne subiects, &c. that doe oppose themselues against him, vnder the name of the Holy League: whereupon her Maiesty addressed Sir Horatio Palauicino Knight, with Commission to ioyne with the sayd Princes, touching those preparations. In the performance of which Imbassage, was spent all the Winter season with such good successe, that thereupon this Army of the Almaine horsemen was leuyed and sent into Fraunce about the end of the summer following.

This yeere 1590. neere Bologna, a Cow calued foure Calues in one day.

1591. Men sent into Britaine.

In the moneth of April, three thousand footmen were sent from hence into Britaine in France vnder the conduction of sir John Norris Knight, to ioyne with the Prince Dombes, son of the Duke Montpensier, and Generall of the French Kings forces in that Prouince: which companies haue sithence beene from time to time supplyed.

The 16. day of July in the morning, Edmond Coppinger, and Henry Arthington, Gentlemen, repaired to one Walkers house, neere vnto Broken-wharfe of London, where conferring with one of their sect, named William Hacker, of Dwndale, in the Countie of Northampton Yeoman, they offred to annoint him King, but Hacker taking Coppinger by the hand, sayd: you shall not neede to annoynt me, for I haue beene already annointed in heauen by the holy Ghost himselfe. Then Coppinger asked him what his pleasure was to bee done. Go your way both (quoth he) and tell them in the City, that Christ Iesus is come with his fan in his hand to Iudge the earth. And if any man aske you where he is, tell him he lyes at Walkers house by Broken-wharfe, and if they will not beleeue it, let them come and kill me if they can: for as truely as Christ Iesus is in heauen, so truly is he come to Iudge the world. Then Coppinger said, it should be done forthwith: and thereupon went forward, and Arthington followed, but ere he could get downe the staires, Coppinger had begunne below in the house, to proclaime newes from Heauen of exceeding great mercie: that Christ Iesus was come, &c. with whom Arthington also cryed the same wordes aloud, following him along the streets from thence by Watlingstreet, and Oldchange toward Cheape, they both adding beyond their Commission, these words: Repent England, repent. After they had both thus come (with a mighty concourse of the common multitude) with an vniforme cry into Cheape nere vnto the Crosse, & there finding the throng and preasse of the people to encrease about them in such sort as that they could not well passe further, nor bee conuenently heard of them all, as they desired: therefore they gotte them vp into an emptie Cart which stood there, where in they stood not onely vpon the words of their former cry, but they reading something out of a paper, went more particularly ouer the offices of Hacker, how he represented Christ by partaking a part of his glorified body by his principall spirit, and by the office of seuering the good from the bad, with his fan in his hand, and of establishing the Gospell in Europe, &c. telling also the people, where they saw him, where he lay & remained: that they were two Prophets, the one of mercy, the other of Iudgement, sent and extraordinarily called by God, to assist him in this great worke, and were witnesses of these things, &c. And thereupon the one of them pronounced Mercie, great comfort, and vnspeakeable ioyes, to all that should repent presently, bee obedient and embrace this acceptable message, and opportunity offered: And the other denounced terrible iudgement if they repented not, which should euen presently (also) fall vpon them, and especially vpon the City of London: affirming that all that beleeued them not, were condemned body and soule: with other matter against her Maiesty, and some of her Maiesties honorable Prime Councell, which I ouerpasse: And whereas they had purposed to haue gone with the like Cry, & Proclamation, through other the chiefe parts of the Citie, but the preasse was so great, as that they were forced to goe into a Tauerne in Cheape, at the signe of the Sperneyo, the rather because a Gentleman of his acquaintance plucked at Coppinger, whilest he was in the Carte, and blamed him for his demeanour and speeches.

Coppinger and Arthington preached on a cart in Cheap and vpon the sodaine so beladed the people, that they held them as Prophets from God.

From thence they went by backe lanes, crying as (before) Repent England, repent, &c. to Walkers house at Broken Wharfe. This strange accident being quickly blowne through the City, all was in a Buzze, and a kind of astonishment, what to thinke of the matter, and being speedily brought to her Maiesties eares, two of her honourable Councell were presently dispatched vnto London, to take further notice of the whole matter: so that about one of the clock in the afternoone Coppinger was sent for, whilest Hacket and Arthington were brought, before those honorable Councellors and others at the Lord Mayors, to be examined: whose examinations I ouerpasse: but in the end it was thought good, that Hacket should come to tryall: so that on the twenty sixt of July, hee was brought from Bridewell to the Sessions house, neere to Newgate, before the Lord Mayor, and other Iustices, where being arraigned, hee was by two seuerall indictments found guilty: as to haue vttered and spoken diuers most false, and Traiterous words against her Maiestie, to haue rased and defaced her Maiesties armes: as also a certaine Picture of the Queenes Maiestie, and did maliciously, and traiterously thrust an yron instrument into that part of the said Picture, that did represent the brest and heart of the Queenes Maiesty, &c. He had Iudgement, and on the twenty eight of July, he was brought from Newgate, towards the place of execution, after tenne of the clocke in the morning, albeit by reason of the incredible multitude then in the streetes, but especially in Cheape.

He practised vpon the Picture how he might kill the Queene.

Hacket hanged in Cheap.

All the way that he was dragged vpon the Hurdle, he continued his counterfeit vaine, one while crying out, Iehouah, Messias, Iehouah, Messias: another while crying out, thus, Iohn, Iohn, Iohn, how the Heauens open wide, and the Son of God comneth downe to deliuer me: when he came vnder the gibbet (which was reared hard by the Crosse in Cheap) he was exhorted to aske God and the Queene forgiuenesse, and to fall to his prayers: but he, instead thereof, fell to railing and cursing of her Maiestie, most villanously, and then began a most blasphemous and execrable prayer, against the diuine Maiesty of God. They had much adoe to get him vp the ladder, where he was hanged, and after bowelled and quartered.

Coppinger died in Bridewell.

On the next day being the nine and twentieth day of July, Edmonde Coppinger, hauing wilfully abstained from meate (as was sayde) died in Bridewell. And Arthington long after in the Counter in Woodstreete, was referred in hope of perfect Repentance. Note of this you may reade in a Booke nowe extante, intituled, Conspiracie of pretended reformation, &c.

Earle of Essex sent into France.

In the moneth of July, Robert Earle of Essex, master of her Maiesties Horse, a yong Noble man of great Valour and expectation, was by her highnesse appointed to haue the charge and Conduction, as her Maiesties Lieutenant generall, of 4000. footemen, and some number of horsemen, and pioners sent into France, for the assistance of the French King, against the confederates of the League. In which expedition his Lordshippe was also honourably accompanied with sundry Gentlemen, and Souldiers, that voluntarily followed him in this seruice. During the time that the Earle intended these French wars, Walter Deuereux a yong Gentleman, and forward in Marshall actions, and brother to the Earle, was slaine with a small shot before Roane in Normandy.

Proclamation against the Iesuites and Seminaries.

In the moneth of October, a Proclamation was published, conteining a declaration of the manifest troubles pretended against the Crowne, and estate, by Seminaries and Iesuites, subborned by the Pope, and King of Spaine, to infect her Maiesties subiects, with the poyson of their seditious Religion, and vnder colour thereof, to trayne them vnto their pretended Treasons, for the betraying of this estate vnto the Spanish Tyranny and inuasion. For the better preuenting of which imminent dangers, a speciall charge was thereby giuen to all her Maiesties officers and ministers, vigilantly to looke vnto their seuerall charges, of the forces appointed to bee in a readinesse for the necessary defence of the Realme. And for the better expelling of the fraudulent attempts of those Iesuites, the very seducers of all treason, and rebellions, disguising themselues in their habite and apparell, sometimes like Gentlemen, and sometimes like Seruing-men, and so insinuating themselues into the Families, and seruices of Noblemen, Ladies, and Gentlemen, to couer themselues from suspition, and apprehension: It was by the sayd Proclamation prouided, that special Commissioners should be appointed in all Shires, Cities, and Port Townes of this Realme, to inquire out this pernicious brood, and such as may bee reconciled by their inchantments, thereby farther charging all manner of persons, of whatsoeuer degree or condition, to retaine none into their houses, without due examination of their conditions, manner of life and conformity in the religion, and to keepe thereof a Register, to bee theirein vnto the said Commissioners, if they shall demande the same, vpon suspicion of the disloyalty of any such persons.

Commissions for inquisitions.

Not long after the publishing of this Proclamation, her Maiesty addressed Commissions vnder the great Seale of England, generally into all partes and diuisions of the Realme, for the purpoles aforesayde: The faithfull execution whereof, according to the order prescribed, will in time discouer and vnmaske, these Iesuiticall hypocrites, and diminish the ouergreat swarmes of them, spreading the secrete poyson into the heart and bowels of this politicall body, indangering the sense, feeling, and life thereof.

Bren O Royrke of Ireland arraigned.

The twenty eight of October, Bren O Royrk, a great man of Ireland, was arraigned at Westminster, where he was found guilty of high Treason.

The articles contained in the indictment against Bren O Royrke, Lord of a great territory, and Country in Ireland, named Breny O Royrke, who accounted himselfe to haue descended of one of the Monarches that were in Ireland heretofore: at his arraignement at Westminster, on Saint Simon and Iudes day, master Iohn Ly of Kathbride, a Gentleman out of Ireland, being assigned by the Lords of the Coun-

Councell and Commissioners to interpret betwixt the Iudges, and the sayd O Royrke, who did expound and declare in Irish, the articles ensuing, and also all speeches vttered by the Iudges, and the sayd O Royrke.

That the sayd Bren O Royrke, sought the deposition of her Maiesty, from her Regall seate, the destruction of her person, and the ouerthrow of her realme of Ireland, at Dromaher, and other places in Ireland, the 2. of July, in the 28. yeare of her Maiesties raigne.

That the sayd O Royrke stirred vp and procured Alexander Mac Coonel, and Dwell Mac Coonell, being enemies to her Maiestie and her sayd Realme of Ireland: to raise forces against her maiestie in Ireland and after that, releeued and succoured them, the second of August, the 28. of her Maiesties Raigne.

That the sayd O Royrke at Dromaher aforesayd, caused the picture of a woman to bee made, setting to her Maiesties name, and caused it to bee tyed to an horse tayle, and to bee drawne through the mire in derision of her Maiesty. And after caused his Gallioglasses to hew the same in pieces with their axes, vttering diuers traiterous and rebellious words against her Maiestie.

That the sayd O Royrke, when Sixtus the fift of that name was Pope, and Philip the Spanish King, had bent their forces against England, and after dispersed by her Maiesties fleete, till they came about Scotland, and so to Ireland, and arriuing there, the sayd O Royrk, did entertaine, releeue, and succour, at Dromaher aforesayd, and other places, diuers of the sayd Spaniards, which were imployed to this intended inuasion. And after Proclamation, giuen by the Lord Deputy, vpon paine of death, that no man should keepe any of the Spaniards, but they to bee sent to his Lordship, by a day limited: yet the sayd O Royrke, kept the sayd Spaniards till the sayd L. Deputy went with her Maiesties forces to the South, at which time the said O Royrk, conueyed them thorow the North with a Spanish Fryer, and an Irish Fryer in their company, and so to Spaine, without making the sayd Lord Deputy acquainted therwith: and after receiued letters by the Fryer, from the said King of Spain, gratulatory for the entertainement he gaue to the sayd Spaniardes, Anno 30. of her Maiesties raigne.

That the sayd O Royrke, procured and caused one Thady O Harte, and his sect, with diuers other to enter into actuall rebellion against her Maiestie, so that the sayd Thady and others did burne Ballymote, and other places, and after that done, the sayd O Royrke did releeue and succour the sayd Traytors that were entred into the sayd rebellion.

That the sayd O Royrk, did enter and burne Ballingasse, with diuers other villages in the County of Roscomon, and murthered O Kane, at Cozlier, Christopher Caddell, and diuers others of her Maiesties Loyall Subiects, and spoyled and carryed away the prayes of the sayd Townes.

That the sayd O Royrke, did violently enter into the Towne of Knocke Mullen, and diuers other villages in her Maiesties Realme of Ireland, in the Barrony of Tyzerell, in the County of Sligo, and burned the sayd Towne, and murthered one Chenem-Wood, a Gentleman, with diuers other of her Maiesties loyall subiects within the sayd Barrony of Tyrill, and so continued his outrages, vntill hee was constrained by her Maiesties forces to fly into Scotland.

That the sayd O Royrke, being fledde into Scotland, did stirre vp certaine Scots there to insurrection, and to ioyne with himselfe their forces against her Maiesty in the Realme of Ireland. And also offered at Glasco, to the King of Scots, if hee would maintaine him, and suffer his subiects to goe, and ioyne with him, that hee would bring the Realme of Ireland to his subiection, contrary to his duty, and in contempt of her Maiesties Lawes, the ninth of March, Anno thirty three of her Maiesties Raigne.

Also it did appeare by the sayd Bren O Royrke, his speeches made in the Tower, where he sayd, that if the Spaniardes had first come in to Ireland, as they did into England, that Ireland had beene their owne, and that he would do them a piece of seruice.

To conclude, the sayd O Royrke, after many speeches by the Iudge and him vttered, beeing at the barre, sayd, that hee would not consent that any inquest, or Iury should passe vpon him, vnlesse hee might haue a weekes respite to bee giuen him, and all those witnings sent by William Fitz Williams, Rysten Bingham, and others in Ireland to bee deliuered him, and a good man of Law to bee assigned vnto him, and the same man of Law to bee sworne to deale as truely for him, as hee would doe for the Queenes heire apparant, if he were in his place. And besides this, that hee would haue the Queenes Maiestie to bee one of the Iury to passe vpon him. This his refusall to bee tryed, was entred at the request of her Maiesties Learned Councell. And after entry so made: the sayd Iohn Lye, beeing interpreter, was willed by the Lord chiefe Iustice, to tell him that the law was, if hee would refuse to bee tryed by twelue men, then Iudgement must bee giuen, according to the quality of those Articles of Treason, wherewith he was charged, and beeing obstinate therein, was guiltie of his owne death; yet that notwithstanding hee refused tryall. Then the sayd Iohn Lye, expounded vnto him his iudgement which was as ensueth.

That the sayd Bren O Royrke, should bee taken from thence to the place from whence hee came, there to be layd vpon an hurdle, so to bee drawn to the place of execution, there to be hanged vntill he were halfe dead, then to bee let downe, and his members and bowels to bee taken out, and burnt in the fire, his head to bee stricken off, and his body to be deuided at her Maiesties direction. This being expounded vnto him by the sayd Lye, he answered nothing but sayd, if that were their will, let it be so.

Bren O Royrk executed at Tyborne.

Upon Wednesday being the thirde of Nouember, Bren O Royrke was drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, his members and bowels burned in the fire, his heart taken out and holden vp by the hangeman, naming it to be the Archetraytors heart, and then did he cast the same into the fire, then was his head stricken off, and his body quartered. But before this was done: the sayd O Royrke yet standing vpon the cart, Walter John Lyes as foresayd, willed him in Gods behalfe, to remember the filthy and odious treasons that he committed against her Maiestie, with many other good exhortations, to drawe him to repentance, and to aske her Maiesty and all the world forgiuenesse: and how to forgiue all the world: yet he obstinately answered, that hee would not, but sayd that if the Queene would haue granted him space, and all such writings as the officers in Ireland, viz. William Fitz Williams, and Dicke Bingham, sent against him, to be giuen him to make answere to them, and also to giue him his life, that then he would aske her forgiuenesse, and from henceforth serue her truely. And further sayd, that hee did little thinke that the King of Scots would haue sent him to the Queene, without safety and good assurance of his life, and remittall of his offences.

The said Iohn Ly, did further vrge and intreat the sayd O Royrke to repent, and to aske forgiuenesse (as aloze) and likewise to forgiue, and that, that was the onely way for him to come to the heauenly Kingdome: and also told him, that all the Flanders by, requested and prayed him to do so: he answered and willed them to make meanes for themselues to come to God, and that hee would make meanes for himselfe, but no moze could be had of him, but fell to his prayers. The said Ly told him againe that he could not lawfully pray, being so obstinate, hard hearted, and to die without repentance, but it would not bee, and so the Cart went from him. Also Mylerus the Lord Archbishoppe of Tashell in Irelande, being present, was willed by the Flanders by, to counsell the sayd O Royrke, and the sayd Archbishoppe requesting him to call to God, with other good exhortations. The sayd O Royrke, turned vpon him and sayd, he had moze need locke to himselfe, and that, hee was neither here nor there.

Parliament, vpsake by.

My Lords, and you my commons of the lower house, were it not that I know no speeches preferred by any other, nor words deliuered by any substitute, can be so deeply imprinted into your minds, as spoken by her selfe, whose order and direction was but followed and deliuered by the Lord Keeper, I could bee content to spare speech, whom silence better pleaseth then to speake: And because much hath beene spoken much lesse shall I now need to speake of mine owne indisposition of nature, and small desire in priuate respect to be enriched by you present, which words shall not witnesse, but deedes by your former experience, hauing expended what I haue receiued, to the preseruation and defence of your selues. And thus much I dare assure you, that the care which you haue taken for my selfe, your selues, and the common weale, that you doe it for a Prince, that neither careth for any particular, no, nor for life, but so to liue, that you may flourish. For before God and in my conscience, I protest, wherevnto many that know me can witnesse, that the great expence of my time, the labour of my studies, and the trauell of my thoughts, cheefly tendeth to Gods seruice, and the gouernment of you to liue in a flourishing and happy estate, God forbid you should know any change thereof. Many wiser Princes than my selfe you haue had, but one onely excepted (whom in the duties of a child I must regard, & to whom I must acknowledge my selfe far shallow) I may truely say, none whose loue and care can bee greater, or whose desire can be more to fathome deeper for prevention of danger to come, or resisting of dangers, if attempted towards you, shall euer be found to exceede my selfe: In loue I say towards you, and care ouer you. You haue heard in the beginning of this Parliament, some doubt of danger, more then I would haue you to feare: doubt onely should be, if not prevented; and feare, if not prouided for.

For mine owne part, I protest, I neuer feared: and what feare was, my heart neuer knew. For I knew that my cause was euer Iust, and it manifestly vpon a sure foundation that I should not faile, God assisting the quarrell of the righteous, and such as are but to defend. Glad might that King my greatest enemie be, to haue the like aduantage against me, if in trueth for his owne actions, he might truely so say. For in ambition of glory I haue neuer sought to enlarge the territories of my land nor thereby to aduance you. If I haue bled my subiects to keepe the enemy farre from you; I haue thereby thought your safety the greater, and your danger the lesse. If you suppose I haue done it in feare of the enemy, or in doubt of his reuenge, I know his power is not to preuaile, nor his force to feare mee, hauing so mighty a protector on my side. I would not haue you returning into the Country to strike a feare into the minds of any of my people, as some vpon the arriuall of the late Duke, dwelling in a Spaniard shyre, fled for feare farther into the middle of the land, but if I had bene by him, surely I would haue taught him to haue shewed so base and cowardly a courage, for euen our enemies hold our nature resolute and valiant, which though they will not outwardly shewe, they inwardly know. And whensoeuer the malice of our enemies shall cause them to make any attempt against vs, I doubt not but wee shall haue the greater glory, God fighting for those which truely serue him, with the iustnesse of their quarrell. Only let them know to be wary, and not to bee found sleeping, so shall they shew their owne valour, and frustrate the hopes of the enemies. And thus far let mee charge you that bee Lieutenants, and you that in shires haue the leading of the most choice and seruiceable men vnder your banners, that you see them sufficiently exercised and trained, so oft as need shall require, that the wants of any of them bee supplyed by others to bee placed in their roomes, and that all decayes of armour bee presently repaired and made sufficient. The enemy finding your care such, and so great to prouide for him, will with the lesse courage thinke of your disturbance. To conclude, that I may shew my thankefull minde, in my conscience neuer hauing beene willing to draw from you, but what you should contentedly giue, and that for your selues, and hauing my head by yeres and experience better stayed, whatsoeuer any shall suppose to the contrary, then that you may easily beleeue that I will enter into any idle expences. Now in all I giue you all as great thankes, as euer Prince gaue to louing subiects, assuring you that my care for you, hath, and shal exceede all my other cares of worldly causes, whatsoeuer.

About the same time Penry a Welchman, a principall penner and publisher of bookes, intituled Martin marre prelate, was apprehended at Stebenheth, by the Vicar there, and committed to prison. The 19. of July, the Court of assise for Surry was holden & kept in Saint Georges field, many prisoners were there arraigned, condemned, and had iudgement, nintene were burnt in the hand but none executed. The 14. of Aprill, a woman was burnt in Smithfield for murthering of her husband.

Ferdinando Earle of Darby deceased. The 16. of Aprill, Ferdinando Earle of Darby deceased at Latham, whose strange sicknesse and death, gathered by those who were present with him at the time thereof, was such as followeth: his diseases apparant, were vomiting of lower or rusty matter with blud, the yealowe iaundies: melting of his fat, swelling, and hardnesse of his splene, a vehement hickocke, and foure dayes before he died, stopping of his water. The manner of his death, was wondrous strange, whereof I haue bene often required to set it downe plainely, but I could neuer get the particulars Authentiquely.

The causes of all his diseases were thought by the Physitians, to be partly a surfeit, and partly a most violent distempering himselfe, with vehement exercise, taken foure dayes together in the Easter weeke.

The fift of Aprill, about five of the clocke at night, he fell sicke at Lucowby, where he vomited thrice.

The 6. he returned to Latham, and feeling healthy to sinke more and more, sent to Chester for a doctor of physicke.

The 7. before the comming of the doctor, he had cast seuen times, the colour of his vomits was like to soutie or rustie yron: the substance very grosse and fattie: the quantity aboue seuen pints, the smell not without offence, his waters were in colour, smell, and substance not vnlike his vomits. The same night he tooke a glister to draw the course of the humours downe-ward, which wrought fiue times and gaue some ease.

The 8. he tooke a gentle infusion of Rubarb and Manna, in a draught of chickin broth, which wrought very well nine times.

The 9. because of his continuall bleeding by mouth, with his vomits, hee was instantly intreated to bee let blood, to diuert and stay the course thereof, but by no meanes hee could be perswaded thereunto, wherefore that day onely fomentations, oyles, and plaisters were outwardly applyed, to stay and comfort his stomacke.

The 10. he tooke one other glister, which wrought well fiue times.

The eleuenth, hee tooke one other purge which wrought with great ease, nine times, vpon the humours. The same night hee tooke a little diascordium, with the syrope of limons, and scabious water, which somewhat stayed his stomacke, and gaue him some rest.

The twelfth, because his vomiting continued still, hee was moued to take a bomit, that thereby the bottome of his stomache might be cleared and cleansed from so vile and loathsome matter wherewith hee was troubled: but by no perswasion hee would yeeld thereunto, notwithstanding the same day hee tooke a medicine to procure sweat, but pacuayled not, the very same night his water stayed vpon a sodaine, to the astonishment of all.

The 13. all meanes were offered to prouoke water, as glisters, iniections, fomentations, oyles, pultises, plaisters, and stirrings, but nothing happily succeeded.

The 14. and 15, was vsed an instrument called a Catheter, which being conueyed into his bladder, was strongly sucked by the Chirurgion but no water followed.

The sixteenth day, about fiue of the clocke at night, hee most deuoutly yeelded his soule to God.

In all the time of his sicknesse, hee often tooke Bezars stone, and Vnicornes horne, his pulse was euer good, his strength indifferent, the number of his vomits were 52. and of his stooles 29. his Physitians were Doctor Canon, Doctor Iaymar, Doctor Bate, Doctor Case.

A true report of such reasons and coniectures, as caused many learned men to suppose him to be bewitched.

The first of Aprill, being the munday before his honour fell sicke, a woman offered vnto him a supplication, or petition, wherein her request was, that it would please him to giue, or assigne her a dwelling place neere vnto him selfe, that shee might from time to time reueale vnto him such things with speed, which God reuealed vnto her for his good. This petition was thought vaine and therefore refused.

On the fourth of Aprill he dreamed that his Lady was most dangerously sicke to death, and in his sleepe being sore troubled therewith, he wept, sodainly cryed out, started from his bed, called for helpe, sought about the chamber, but sleeping and waking, but being fully awaked was comforted, because he found her well: here we omit strange dreames, or diuinations of diuers graue men, which happened before or about the time of his sickues.

On the fift of Aprill, in his chamber at Bromley about fiue of the clocke at night, there appeared suddainly a tall man, with a gastly and threatning countenance, who twise or thrise seemed to crosse him, as hee was passing through the chamber, and when hee came vnto the same part of the chamber where this shaddow appeared, he presently fell sicke, and there vomited thrise. After, Goborne one of his Secretaries attending then vpon him saw nothing, which more amazed him. The same night he dreamed that he was in fighting, and twise or thrise stabbed to the heart, and also wou nded wounded in many other places of his bodie.

The tenth of Aprill, about midnight, was found in his bed chamber, by one master Hallall, an Image of ware with haire, like vnto the haire of his honours head, twirled through the belly thereof, from the nauell to the secrets: this Image was spotted, as the same master Hallall reported vnto master Smith, one of his Secretaries, a day before any paine grew, and spots appeared vpon his sides and belly. This Image was hastily cast into the fire by master Hallall, before it was viewed, because hee thought by burning thereof, as hee sayd, hee should relieue his Lord from witchcraft, and burne the witch, who so much tormented his Lord, but it fell out contrary to his loue and affection, for after the melting thereof, he more and more declined.

The twelfth of Aprill, one Lane a witch demanded of maister Goodrie, whether his honor felt no paine in his lower partes, and whether he made water as yet or no: and what very time, notwithstanding all helpes, his Water vtterly stopped, and so remained till he died.

Sir Edward Filton, who with other Iustices examined certaine witches, reporteth, that one of them being bidden to say the Lords prayer, sayd it well, but being conjured, in the Name of Iesus, that if shee had bewitched his honour, shee should not be able to say the same, shee could neuer repeat that petition, Forgiue vs our trespasses, no not although it was repeated vnto her.

A homely Woman, about the age of fifty yeeres, was found mumbling in a corner of his honours Chamber, but what God knoweth. This wise woman (as they termed her) seemed often to ease his honor, both of his vomiting and hickocke, but so it fell out, which was strange, that when so long as he was eased, the woman her selfe was troubled most vehemently in the same manner, the matter which she vomited, being like also vnto that which passed from him. But at the last, when this woman was espied by one of the Doctors tempering and blessing (after hermanner) the iuyce of certaine herbes, her potte wherein to shee strained the iuyce, was tumbled downe by the sayd Doctor, and shee rated out of the Chamber, notwithstanding shee did still say that shee would not cease to ease him, although she could not perfectly helpe him, because he was so strongly bewitched. All physicke wrought very well; yet had he none or little ease thereby, his diseases were many and his vomits, with stopping his water grieuous, yet euer his pulse remained as good and perfect as euer it did in time of his best health, till one quarter of an houre before hee died. Hee himselfe in all the time of his sicknesse cryed out that the Doctors laboured in vaine, because hee was certainely bewitched. Hee fell twise into a trance, not able to moue hand, head, or foot, when he would haue taken Physicke to do him good. In the end he cryed out often against all witches and witchcraft repoling his only hope of saluation vpon the merits of Christ Iesus his Sauiour.

One excellent speech, cannot be omitted amongst many in the time of his sicknesse, especially the day before he departed, at which time he desired one of his Doctors, whom hee especially loued, to perswade him no longer to liue, because (sayth hee) although out of the loue, thou wouldst stir vp hope of life: and dost employ all thy wit, art, and trauaile to that end; yet knowing for a certaintie that I must now die, I pray thee cease, for I am resolued presently to dye, and to take away with mee only one part of my armes, I meane the Eagles wings, to will I fly swiftly into the bosome of Christ my only Sauiour, and with that he sent for his Lady, and gaue her his last Vale or farewell, desiring her to take away and loue his Doctor, & also to giue him some Iewell, with his armes and name, that he might be remembred: the which thing, immediatly after his death was most honorably performed. His spirituall physitians, were the Bishop of Chester, and maister Lee his Chaplaine.

Then was it by the Court declared vnto them, how they had bene charged with high Treason against her Maiestie: had bene tryed, found guilty and had receiued iudgement; wherefore it was demanded of them, what they could say for themselues, and should not suffer death accordingly: whereunto one of the Portingales began in his language to tell a long tale, but was willed to be short, which he answered could not be done without circumstance, &c. whereupon he was willed to hold his peace. The second answered by writing in his language, which being read by an interpeter, the Queenes attourney bad stay; for it was not true. Roderick Loppez in English made his submission, and affirmed, hee neuer thought harme to her Maiestie, &c. Then was called the marshall of the Kings bench, and appearing, he was charged with the prisoners, to conney them to the prison of the Kings bench, and there to deliuer them to the Sheriffes of London, with a writ to see them executed: so were they conueyed by water from Westminster to the Bishoppe of Winchesters staires in Southwarke, from thence to the Kings bench, there layd on hurdles, and conueyed by the Sheriffes of London

This yere in the moneth of May, fell many great showres of raine: but in the moneths of Iune and July, much more: for it commonly rained euery day or night, till Saint Iames day, and two dayes after together most extreamely: all which, notwithstanding in the moneth of August, there followed a faire haruest, but in the moneth of September fel great raynes, which raised high Waters, such as stayed the carriages, and bare downe Bridges at Cambridge, Ware, and elsewhere, in many places. Also the price of grayne grewe to be such as a strike or bushell of Rie was sold for fiue shillings, a bushell of Wheate for six, seauen, or eight shillings, &c. for still it rose in price, which dearth happened (after the common opinion) more by meanes of euermuch transporting, by our owne Merchants for their priuate gaine, than through the vnseasonablenes of the weather passed.

1595. Dearth of corne and other victuall.

This yere by meanes of the late transporting of graine into forraine countries, the same was here growne to an excessiue price, as in some places from fourteene shillings to foure markes the quarter, and more, as the prize did fale, for all things else, whatsoeuer was sustenance for man, was likewise raised without all conscience and reason. For remedie whereof, our Merchants brought backe from Dantzike much Rie, and some whoate (not of the best) but pasling deare, yet serued the turne in such extremity: Some prentises and other young people about the City of London, being pinched of their victuals, more then they had beene accustomed, take from the market people in Southwarke, butter for their money, paying for the same but three pence the pound, whereas the owners would haue had 5. pence. For the which disorder, the said young men, on the twenty seauen of Iune were punished by whipping, setting on the pillory, and long imprisonment.

Disordered youths punished.

After the same time, certaine men for coyning were hanged: Also a scriuener in Holborne was hanged, bowelled, and quartered, for counterfeiting of a new Pattent, and setting to the seale of an old.

Coiners hanged.

The 29. of Iune, being Sunday in the afternoone, a number of vnruly youths on the Tower hill, being blamed by the warders of Tower straete ward, threw at them stones, and drawe them backe into Towerstraete, hasting hartened thereunto by sounding of a Trumpet, but the Trumpetter hauing bene a souldier, and many other of the company, were taken by the Sheriffes of London, and sent to prison. About seuen of the clocke the same night, sir Iohn Spencer Lord Mayor, rode to the Tower hill, attended by his officers and others, to see the hill cleared of all tumultuous persons, where, about the middle of the hill, some warders of Tower, and Lieutenants men being there, tolde the Mayor, that the sword ought not in that place to be borne vp, and therefore two or three of them catching hold of the sword, some bickering there was, and the sword-bearer with other hurt and wounded: but the Lord Mayor, by his wise & discreete pacification as also by Proclamation in her Maiesties name, in short time cleared the hill of all trouble, and rode back, the sword-bearer bearing vp the sword before him.

Proclamation for staying of vnlawfull assemblies.

The Queenes Maiestie being informed of these, and sundry other disorders committed in and about her Citie of London, by vnlawfull assemblies: And some attempting to rescue out of the hands of publike officers, such as had bin lawfully arrested, whereby the peace had bene violated and broken: Her Maiestie for reformation thereof, by Proclamation dated the 4. of July, straightly charged all her officers, both in the City, and places were adioyning to the Counties of Middlesex, Kent, Surrey, and Essex, that had authority to preserue the peace, and to punish offenders, more diligently to the best of their powers, for to the suppression of all offenders against the peace, vpon paine to be not only remoued from their offices, but to be also punished, as persons maintaining or comforting such offenders. And because the late vnlawfull assemblies and routs were compounded of sundry sorts of base people, some prentiseg, ses, and some others wandring idle persons, of condition, Rogues and vagabonds, and some colouring their wandring by the name of souldiers, her Maiestie, for better direction to her Officers of Justice, and inquision to bee made, notified her pleasure to her Councell, to prescribe orders to be published, and straightly observed, and for that purpose a Provost Marshall with sufficient authority to apprehend all such as should not be readily reformed and corrected by the ordinary officers of Justice, and that without delay to execute upon the Gallowses by order of martiall law. The orders prescribed were the same day also by proclamation published. Sir Thomas Wilford Knight, was appointed Provost Marshall for the time, he rode about, and through the City of London dayly, with a number of men on horsebacke armed, with their case of pistols, &c. This Marshall apprehended many vagarant and idle people, brought them before the Justices, who committed them to diuers prisons. On the 22. of July, were arraigned in the Guild hall of London, fiue of those brutish youths that were apprehended on the Tower hill, they were condemned of high treason, had iudgement to bee drawne hanged and quartered, and on the twenty foure of the same moneth, they were drawne from Newgate to the Tower hill, and there executed accordingly.

Which Sermon being ended, vpon the Church leades the Trumpets sounded, the Cornets winded, and the Quirristers sang an Anthemne. On the steeple many lights were burned: the Tower shot off her Ordinance, the Bels were rung, bonefiers made, &c.

Two Marshals at London.

The fift of February, two Marshals were chosen and appointed in the City of London, for the apprehending of vagrant and other disordered persons.

A ship built in Leaden hall.

This yeere maister Stickles the excellent Architect of our time, did onely to try conclusion, build a pinnace in Leaden hall, being of burden about fiue or fiue tun, which at pleasure might be taken a sunder, and ioyned together; it was drawne vpon a sled with wheeles to the Tower docke, where it was launched, but there came no good of it.

1596. Souldiers pressed and discharged.

The 9. of Aprill being good Friday, in the afternoone, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, being in Paules Church-yard, hearing the Sermon at Paules Crosse, were sodainly called from thence, and forthwith by a precept from her Maiesty and Councell, pressed 1000. men, which was done by eight of the clocke the same night, and before the next morning they were furnished of all manner of furniture for the warres, ready to haue gone towards Doner, and so to the ayde of the French in Calois against the Spaniarders, but in the afternoone of the same Saturday they were all discharged; notwithstanding on the 11. of Aprill being Easter day, about ten of the clocke before noone, came a new charge, so that all men being in their parish Churches ready to haue receiued the Communion, the Aldermen, their Deputies, Constables, and other Officers, were faine to close vp the Church doores, till they had pressed so many men to bee souldiers, that by 12. of the clocke, they had in the whole City one thousand men, and those, forthwith furnished of armour, weapons, and all things necessary, were for the most part that night, and the rest on the next morning sent away towards Douer as the like out of other parts of the Realme: but about a weeke after they returned backe againe, for the French had lost Calois. The Earle of Essex had the command of these men.

Souldiers pressed on Easter day.

Souldiers sent to Doner to haue bin transported ouer to Calis. Calis woone by the Spaniardes. An. Reg. 39.

In this moneth of Aprill 1596. whilest the French King busily besieged Laferre, Albertus the Cardinall, with a little Campe, pretending at first as if hee would raise the King from his siege, suddainly turnes his course and seates himselfe round about Calis, and in few dayes, though his valour and industry, gained both Ryse bancke, and part of the Towne wall: the Gouernour of Calis with his chiefe strength was forced to retire to the Citadell, the Queene of England vpon the first newes thereof, sent word to the French King, that if he doubted his owne ability, to send competent succours from his Campe to Calis, that then shee would instantly according to the present necessitie, supplie the City against the Spaniards, to his best behoofe: And to that purpose the States sent foure hundred resolute olde souldiers, who in despite of all the Cardinals forces, attained the Walles, and parlyed with the French, to giue them entertainement, comming only for their ayde, which sayd souldiers, not being receiued nor able to make long resistance without the Walles, were all slaine by the Spaniardes: for the French were al of one mind, being willinger the Spaniardes should possesse it, then to permit either the English, or other their friends to relieue it, saying, if the Spaniards win it, yet there is good hope by mediation of the Church to regaine it, but if the English repossesse it, they will neuer restore it.

The French refuse all English ayde, and wish the Spaniards should possesse Calis rather then the English should relieue it to the French K. saying we are neuer old enemies.

The Cardinall within twelue dayes won it, and in many places made it farre stronger then before, all which charges was repayed him according to the agreement made by Clement the seuenth and 8. betweene the Kings of France, and Spaine, by a day prefixed at the surrendering of Calis againe vnto the French.

About this time was publiched a booke intituled, A declaration of the causes mouing the Queenes Maiestie of England, to prepare and send send a Nauy to the Seas, for the defence of her Realmes, against the King of Spaines forces, to be published by the Generals of the sayd Nauie, to the intent that it shall appeare to the world, that her Maiestie armeth her Nauy only to defend her selfe, and to offend her enemies, and not to offend any other, that shall rebeard to strengthen her enemie, but to vse them with all lawfull fauours.

A declaration of causes why the Q. sent her Nauy, and vpon the seas.

To all Christian people, to whom this declaration shall come to bee read, or heard, greeting. Wee Robert Earle of Essex, and Ewe, vicount Hereford, Lord Ferrers of Chartley, Bourgcher, and Louaine, &c. and Charles Lord Howard, Baron of Effingham, Lord high Admirall of England, &c. hauing the charge of a Royall Nauy of shippes, prepared and sent to the seas, by the most excellent Princesse, the Lady Elizabeth, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, &c. doe giue all men knowledge that the sayd Nauy vnder our charge is by her Maiestie prepared and sent to serue on the Seas, for defence of her Maiesties Realms, Dominions and Subiects, against such mighty forces, as we are aduertised from all parts of Christendome, to bee already prepared by the King of Spaine, and by further promisions of men and shippes dayly sent for, are to bee mightily increased, to inuade her Maiesties Realmes: as heretofore in the yeare of our Lord, one thousand fiue hundred eighty and eight, was attempted (euen when there was a Treatie continued by both their Commissioners for peace) with a greater Army then euer before in his time was set to the Seas: though by Gods gouernesse, and the valour and wilesome of her Noble and faithfull Subiects, the same was notablie made frustrate. And because her Maiestie hath good intelligence of perfite amittie with all Kings and Princes of Christendome, sauing with the King of Spayn, who hath this many yeres most vniustly prohibited openly great enmitie by diuers actions, both against her Royall person, and her people, and Countries, without any iust cause first giuen on her Maiesties part. Therefore we the sayd Earle, and Lord Admirall, doe ascertaine all persons, that we are most straightly commanded by her excellent Maiestie to forbeare from offending in this our Voyage of any manner of persons of what Nation soeuer, except the sayd Kings naturall subiects, or such others borne strangers, as shall giue to the sayd King manifest ayde, with men, ships, Artillery, victuall, and other warlike prouisions for inuasion of her Maiestie. Which her Maiesties commandements we meane diligently to obserue: and doe therefore giue strait charge to all persons that shall serue in this Nauy vnderneath vs, vpon paine of extreme punishment to obserue the same, &c. R. Essex. C. Howard.

The fleet of Nauy, Sir Thomas Edgerton maister of the Rols, was made Lord Keeper, and had deliuered vnto him the great seale. The 11. of May, he rode accompanied of the Nobility, and others (the great number) to Westminster, and there tooke his place.

On Sunday the 8. of August, great triumph was made at London, for the good successe of the two Generalls, and company in Spaine, the winning, sacking, and burning of the famous towne of Cadiz, the ouerthrow and burning of the Spanish Nauy, and other accidents, as here followeth.

Triumph at London for good successe at Sea.

Anno Domini 1596. her Maiestie sent a great fleete to the Seas, consisting of seuenteene or eighteene of her Royall shippes, and three of the Lord Admirals, and of marchants shippes and men of warre, and victuallers about a hundred, and to these the States added foure and twentie: so that the whole fleete being assembled at Plimmouth, was about an hundred and fifty saile.

In abstract of the expedition to Cadiz 1596. drawne out of Commentaries written at large thereof, by a Gent. who was in the voyage.

This Royall fleete was commanded by the most Noble, & fortunate in all his aduentures, the Lord Charles Howard (now Earle of Nottingham) high Admirall of England, in the Arke Royall, wherein (by Gods fauor, and her Maiesties auspices) he defeated the great Spanish fleet, in the yeere 1588. And by the right honorable and renowmed L. Robert Deuereux Earle of Essex and Ew, and maister of her Maiesties horse and Ordinance: both loyntly her Maiesties Lieutenants Generall for this expedition by Sea and Land, their authority and power being equall, sauing that the one had the precedence at Sea, the other at land: the Earle was shipped in a new built 4 very warlike ship called the Du repulse. The Viceadmirall of the whole fleet was the Lord Thomas Howyard, second sonne to the Duke of Norfolke in the Prisance. The Rere-admirall, was Sir Walter Rawleigh, Captaine of her Maiesties guard, and Lieutenant of Cornewall in the Wallspite, both new ships. The Admirall of the fleete of the States, was Ion van Duyenvoord Lord of Warmount, in the Neptunus, a ship of foure hundred tuns.

The fiue squadrons with their Admirals and vice-admirals.

This whole fleete was diuided by the Lords Generals into fiue squadrons, euery one of these Chiefs aforesayd had their particular squadron and vice-admirall. The first squadron was led (as it was his right) by the Lord high Admirall of England: the second by the Earle of Essex: the third by the Lord Thomas Howard: the fourth by Sir W. Rawleigh, the fift by Monsieur Duyenvoord: And strait commandement was giuen throughout all the fleete that euery shippe should waite vpon the Admirall of his squadron. The Vice-admirals of these squadrons were, Sir Robert Southwell (son in law to the Lord Admirall of England) in the Lyon, to the Lord Admirall: Sir Francis Vere Lord marshall in the Rainbow, to the Earle of Essex: Sir Robert Dudley son to the Earle of Leicester, in the Nonparoille, to the Lord Thomas Howyard: Captaine Robert Crosse, in the Swiftsure, to Sir Walter Rawleigh: and Ion Gerbrantson in the N. of Holland, vice-admirall of the Hollanders.

The Lords Generalls, while they lay at Plimmouth (to arme & furnish themselues with euery thing necessary for so great an army) gouerned their charge with very good Iustice and Martiall discipline: and for instance hereof briefly this I observed: Two souldiers were hanged vpon the Hauen with papers vpon them shewing their offences: vpon the one paper was written: For drawing his sword and raising mutinie against his Commander. Vpon the other, For running away from his Colours.

His name was Hamnion.

There was also a Lieutenant that had taken fiftie pounds to discharge men that were pressed in Wales, hee was disarmed by Proclamation, and adiudged to repay the money, and banished the Army.

A souldier also in a dutch Regiment that had killed one of his companions, was by order of martiall law, tied to the party murthered, and so throwen both into the sea: And in Faro afterward an English souldier was shot to death of other souldiers, for killing a dutch sea Captaine. The Lords Generalls at Plimmouth also published a declaration of the iust causes which mooued her Maiestie to set forth this fleete against the King of Spain: admonishing also the subiects of all other Princes and States, of their daunger, if they vpon the sayd King with shipps, victuals or munition, which was translated into Italian, French, Dutch and Spanish, and dispersed.

The Souldiours were mustred at Plimmouth, and trained euery day by their Captaines, Collonels and Commaunders. The chiefe Commaunders and Officers of the army by land (besides the Earle of Essex, and the Lord Admirall, ioynt Generals as afore-sayd) were, Sir Francis Vere, Lord Marshall, Sir Iohn Winkfield, Campmaster generall, Sir Conyers Clifford, Sergeant Maior, Sir George Carew Master of the Ordinance, Master Astley, Secretary, Captaine Iohn Bucke Prouost Marshall, Captaine Oliuer Lambert, quarter master. The Collonels of the regiments of the army were, the Earle of Sussex, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir Thomas Gerrar, Sir Richard Winkfield, and Sir Edward Winkefield, of the voluntaries: besides the Regiments of both the Generalls, whole Lieutenants Collonels were, Sir Matthew Morgan, and Sir William Woodhouse, of equall ranke with Collonels: and besides the Regiments of the Lord Marshall, of the Campmaster, of the Sergeant Maior, and of the Dutch commanded, or to haue bene commanded by the Count Lodowicke, and all these regiments contayned not aboue ten thousand men.

The Queens Prayer.

And in this meane time of all this businesse at Plimmouth, the Queenes Maiestie (well considering, that the Lord of hostes blesseth the hostes, and forces of godly Princes, and giueth victory to the faithfull armies) made a very deuout prayer to Almighty God for the good successe of the fleete, and sent it by Captaine Edward Conway, to the Generalls, commanding that it should bee dayly said throughout all the Fleete. And here also they receiued instructions for appointing their priuate counsell for this expedition, viz. the Lord Thomas Howard, Sir Walter Rawleigh, Sir Francis Vere, Sir George Carew, and Sir Conyers Clifford, and here they ordered that there should be two flags vsed to hang in the toppes of the Lord Admirals ship about Councell causes, the one a flagge of the Armes of England, with a warning piece to call the select Councel, and the other the flagge of Saint George, hanged in the same place to call the common councell of all Sea Captaines and masters of ships, and besides that euery ship in the fleete should hang vpon their misen yeard, a white pendant foure elles long.

By these instructions the Way of Caliz was appointed the Rendeuous.

And they sent to euery ship certaine instructions sealed vp with straite commaundement to the Captaine thereof not to open them vntil such time as they were come to the South cape, vnlesse they happened in the meane time to be seuered from the fleete by storme, or other misfortune: and if they hapned to bee taken by the enemy, then to hurle them so sealed ouer board. But for breuities sake I passe ouer thus these and other like preparatiues to this iourney: and come to the matter.

The 1. day of June, all the souldiers and mariners being embarked and the wind comming to the Southwest and by South, the Lord Admirall of England being aboord the Arke, commanded his Maister Gunner to shoote off a peece to giue warning to all the Fleete to weigh Anchors and set sayles: which they did incontinent, and thus being vnder sayle (the Lord Admiral leading) they sailed the same day & night as farre as a promontory in Cornewall called Dodmans point: but the wind scanting, they were faine to returne againe, the greater ships into the sound of Plimmouth, & the lesser ships into Causon bay, by speciall caution of the LL. Generals, lest any Mariners should returne & gaine to Plimmouth: which they also preuented by sending commaundement to the Maior and Gouernor of Plimmouth, that they should suffer no boates from the fleete to come a shoare.

The next day following being the 3. of June we set sayle againe, and in a good houre, for from that time till we came to Cadiz, wee had faire weather, and the Wind prosperous: but wee neuer came within sight of Spaine till we came to the cape of Saint Vincent, and thereabout vpon the 18. day of the same moneth the Lord Admiral tooke an Irish Barke that came but a day or two before from Cadiz, of this Irishman the Lord Admirall enquired what forces were in Cadiz, what shipping in the Bay, what newes in the English Fleete: to whom the Irish man answered, that in the Towne were no forces more then ordinarie, but in the Bay there were 25. galles, and about 50. sayle of shippes, whereof foure or fiue were of those Gallions of the kings which are called the 12. Apostles, and two great Galliasses, three Frigates, three Zenanisses or Argosies, two great Biskaines, the rest were Merchants shippes rich, and most of great burden, and the lading of these ships, was munition, coyne, wine, oyle, silkes, cloth of gold, gold lace, quicke siluer, and aboue 150. quintalls of waxe, and diuers other rich Marchandise: and some were bounde for for the Indies, some for Britaine, some for Lisbone, and some for other places: and that there was no speech (that he heard) of the coming of an English fleet thither. By this time the Earle of Essex was come aboord the Arke, and there was a flag of the armes of England hanged in the shrowdes, and after consultation, and euery man returned to his owne ship, the Lords Generals hastened their course to Cadiz and vpon the 20. day of this moneth, being Sunday early in the morning, we came all to Anchor, within halfe a league of S. Sebastian a Fryery at the West end of Cadiz.

The Ships had aduertisement from Cadiz the day before we came thither, at 80. sayle of English ships, some off it Rayon, 20 of Portugall.

The Generals attempted presently to land neere to this Fryery at a desert called the Caliette, they filled many boates and barges with souldiers, and leaders, but the weather was very foule, and the Water went so high that two boates with some 80. souldiers armed, sanke, whereof some were drowned, the others by helpe of other boates were saued, and set aboord their owne shippes againe. This mischance did not happen as any token that God was displeased with our enterprize (as the sequell shewed) but that wee mischose the day attempting so great a worke vpon his day of rest. And it was also a mercy of Almighty God: for we could not haue landed there without great difficultie and much losse, for besides that the place was strong of it selfe, the Spaniardes had brought all the strength that they could to it.

The next day being Munday early in the morning, the Spanish fleete which rode at our comming before the Towne vnder the forts and bulwarkes thereof (by the aduise of Diego Soto maister of the S. Philip, the Admirall ship) shot with the tyde within the point of the maine land, and Castle of Puntall in the straites of the Bay: immediatly after the English fleete weighed, and came to Anchor neere the same place where the Spanish Fleet rode before, and there the fast S. Philip, and the rest plainly vpon our ships with their great Ordinance, and the Galles were very busie: but by the Generals commandement, sir Iohn Winkfield in the Vantgard, hauing some other lesser shippes ioyned to him, take them to taske, and so lamed them that they were glad to seeke to saue themselues: they crept by the shoare, first to the Puntall, and from thence into the Bay, and so to the bridge called Puente de Suaco, where striking their maskes and by helpe of certaine engines vpon the Bridge (contrary to the expectation of the Generals) they went round about the Ile of Leon, and came to Rota. But the eye & care of the Lords Generals was chiefly fixed vpon the Galions and other great ships before mentioned: whereupon they resolued to send that most noble Gentleman and great Sea-captaine, the Lord Thomas Howard to encounter with them in the Nonpareille, adioyning to him some few ships of the Queenes, (for the place was so narrow that hardly ten shippes could come to fight:) The other that were imployed in this enterprize with the Lord Thomas, were sir Walter Rawleigh, sir Robert Southwell Sir Francis Vere, Captaine Robert Crosse (aboard whom the Earle of Sussex was) Sir George Carew in the Mayrose, Captaine Alexander Clifford, in the Dreadnought and the Alcede of London. And although it were agreed in Councell, that the Lords Generalls should not hazard their shippes of greatest burthen, and of most charge in those straits and holes; yet the Earle of Esser could not endure to bee onely a Looker on in so honorable an action, but he put in amongst the thickest of them, and fought very Gallantly: which the Lord Admirall seeing (and being not able to bring in his owne ship) take his long boate and went presently aboord the Mirangoe, and went into the fight also, taking with him his Noble young son, now the Lord William Howard, of Effingham, being at those yong yeres very desirous to seeke and share honour with the oldest Captaines at all hazards.

The Battail at Sea.

This fight lasted till past none, and then the Gallions being cruelly rent and torne, and so much slaughter in them, that the blood gushed out at the scuppit holes, some resolued to fly to Porto Read, some to burne their ships, some ran their ships a ground: diuers Spaniards leapt into the water, whereof some swam a shoare, some were drowned, some taken, some slaine.

The Lord Admirall beholding this miserable spectacle of a Conquered fortune in these distressed Spanyardes, swimming about their ships, and crauing mercy, had compassion of them, and tooke his boat and row vp and downe amongst them, forbidding these cruelties, and preuenting the firing of the Spanish ships to much as was possible, which the Spanyardes remaining aboord in this desperate beaten estate chiefly intended, and first they fired the S. Philip, a ship of 1500. tuns, by whose fire a pinnace of Sir Robert Southwels was burned, but the men were saued. They fired also the S. Thomas, and the S. Iuan (as Signior Iantono affirmed to me in his house in Cadiz) but the other two Apostles, Saint Mathew, and S. Andrew, ships of 1200. tuns a piece were preserued from fire, and gates, and brought safe vnto England.

The battaile by Sea being thus happily fought, & victory obtained, the Lords Generalls (not willing to lose any opportunity) presently set in hand the landing of the souldiers, and in a very little space, there was such diligence vsed, that the Earle of Esser was aland neere the Puntall about a league from Cadiz, with 8000. shot and pikes: hee was accompanied with the Earle of Sussex, the Earle Lodowicke of Nassaw, the Lord Harbert sonne and heire to the Earle of Worcester, the Lord Bourke of Ireland, Sir Edward Winkefield, sir Robert Drury, Sir Thom. German, Sir Anthony Standen, maister S. Laurence, maister Alexander, and maister W. Ratcliffes brothers, and diuers other gallant Gentlemen aduenturers.

As soone as this Lord Generall was landed, hee dispatched presently three Colonels with their regiments to the Puente de Suazo, the sergeant Maior, and sir Christopher Blunt, and sir Thomas Gerrard, with charge so to impeach the passage of that bridge, that there might be no meanes left for any succours to come into the Isle of Leon to helpe the Spaniards, to breake downe that Engine, by helpe whereof the Gallies might passe, and also to surprise or force the Castle at the bridge foot called by the dutch Herods house: they did somewhat ruinate the Bridge, and returned to Cadiz that same night. But the Dutch (which presently after the Earles landing tooke the fort at Puntall) tooke also afterward that Castle at Leon, at the bridge foot (as E. Meteranus writeth) but I never heard so much before. The Earle of Esser hauing for his guid Captaine W. Morgan, marched apace with his army toward the Towne, although in no hope to lodge within it that night: vpon the way hee was encountred with 400. or 500. Caualleroes or horsemen of Xeres, and 600, or 700. footmen, but they were without any great difficultie beaten backe, and ran into the Towne, offering to shut the gates; but the Earle made such haste, as he entred with his troupes Pell mell with them: and some made such shift to get into the Towne that they climbed ouer the walles, shewing our men by that meanes another way to enter the towne if they could not haue got in at the gates, which they soone learned and put in practise: & by this the Lord Admiral was landed with his battaile of some 12. or 15. hundred, and followed the Earle with a very round march: hee was accompanied with all the chiefe commanders by sea, and Captaines of ships and their retinue, as the Lord Thomas Howard, and sir Walter Rawleigh, who was not able to march so fast as the rest by reason that he was hurt in one of his legges with a splinter in the fight with the Gallions. There were also in this march the young Lord Wil. Hovvard, sir Rob. Southwell, sir Ed. Hoby, who bare the Lord Admirals ensigne, maister W. Pager, sir R. Leuson, Master Philip Woodous, Master I. Townesend, Master Ri. Wes[illegible], Master Mathew Brown, Captaine Robert Mantell, Master Miles Corbet, Master George Bucke, Master Iohn Morgan, Master Tho. Woodous, and diuers other Gentlemen aduenturers, and men of quality, whose names I doe not now remember.

The Captaine of this Castle was Don Martin Chaydia Biskaine.

When the Lord Admirall came into the towne, he found the Earle of Esser skirmishing and fighting with the Spaniardes, who fought and fled still before him, others threw downe stones from the battlements of their houses, which annoyed much our souldiers, and some were hurt thereby. But after that the forces of both the Generalls were ioyned together, the fight and resistance of the Spaniards continued not long, but they fled into the Castle and into the Citadel or town house in the market place adioyning to the Castle, and into other their strong places. And here sir Iohn Winkefield riding vpon a nag wounded, hauing bin hurt before in the thigh, was shot in the head from a loop in the Castle, whereof he instantly died: yet before night the Citadel was taken, and therein the Generalls lodged that night, and they were maisters of the whole Moln (the Castle and the fort Saint Philip excepted) hath which also in the morning were rendred, the one to the Earle of Esser, and the other to the Lord Admiral, and their red ensignes displayed vpon the tops and walls of them. And the next night the Earle lodged in the Friery of S. Francis, and the Lord Admirall in the house of Don N. Ruygoes, whose son was Captain of S. Philips fort, where hee had three or foure hundred pikes and shot, & 8. faire brasse pieces of Ordinance, and wine and bread good plenty, as I my selfe saw being at the taking in of this fort by the commandement of the Lord Admirall.

The conditions whereupon the Corrigidor and the rest of the chiefe of the Towne yeelded, were these: they should haue their liues saued, and only their wearing clothes permitted them: all the rest of their goods and wealth should be spoyle and pillage to the souldiers, and should pay besides to the Generals for their ransome, fiue score thousand Ducates: and for the payment hereof, the Generals tooke sixty of the chiefest Regidores, Caualleroes, Clergie men, and Merchants for Rehenes or Pledges, and brought them to England, and here kept them till the money was payd. And now Proclamation was made, that no English man should offer violence to any religious person, to any woman or child, or any other of the Spanish nation in Cadiz: and the Generalls sent away boates, barges, and pinaces, first with the Ladies and the Religious, and then the men and all other of the inhabitants of Cadiz to Porto Santa Maria, excepting the Rehenes, and the prisoners of some English Captaines. The women were suffered by the Generalls to weare so much apparell as they were able to beare vpon them, and all their Iewels: and because none of them should be spoyled by our rude souldiers and Mariners, the Lordes Generalls themselues stood at the water gates and saw their safe imbarking. The Lord Admirall also let goe the rich Bishop of Cusco, who was his prisoner without any ransome, only he promised to send him a horse which he hath not yet performed. In this interim also the Lord Admirall appointed the reereadmiral to take some of the lesser of the Queens ships and Merchant ships (that drew but little water) for their more safety) to goe after the Spanish shippes which were fled to Porto Real, and there either to take them or to sinke, or to fire them, if they would not yeeld. But whiles this was determined, offer was made of two millions to the Earle of Esser, for the sauing and ransoming of those ships and their lading: The L. Admiral would by no meanes agree that the ships should be left to the Spaniards, nor ransomed; but only the Merchandise. But the Duke of Medina Sidonia Admirall of Spaine, decided this controuersie: for he being then at Porto Santa Maria, and alwayes ill affected to them of Cadiz, gaue order that the next morning before day, the whole Fleete at Porto Reall should be fired, which was put in execution: yet nevertheless our men made such haste thither that they recouered recouered much Merchandise and diuers pieces of Ordinance and other things, but none of the ships could be saued.

Thus this whole fleete which was valued by some of the best of the Spaniardes at ten or twelue millions of Ducates, was all either taken, sunke, or burned in a short space. In the towne of Cadize were 1500. pipes of wine, 2000. chests of Sugar, great store of Rice, much come and plate, and rich furniture in their houses: The King had also much rich merchandise in Duanas or Ware-houses, and a great deale of Treasure in the Castle, at which should haue bene preserued (and all whatsoeuer else was the Kings peculiar goods) for her Majestie by her right, if some had, or could haue performed the trust committed to them. But the losses which pinched the King most (his ships excepted) were the 1200. pieces of Ordinance which were taken or sunke in his shippes and his forts, and armour in his armory to arme fiue or sixe thousand men. All which riches, Treasure, Munition, Merchandize, Victuall, &c. of the Kings and of his subiects, there aboard the shippes and in the Towne, I heard valued by Pedro de Castilla, the Kings Iudge of the contratation, and Don Iuan de Soto, a principall Seaman, and Signior Fantonio the rich Florentine (three graue and well experienced men) to be worth twenty millions of ducates at the least.

These things being thus happily atchieued, and Sir Iohn Winkefield very honourably buried in Santa Cruz, the chiefe Church of Cadiz, with all the funerall solemnities of warre, the Drums and Trumpets sounding dolefully, the shot bearing the noses of their pieces downeward, the pikes trayled, his body was borne by fiue Knights, the Generals threw their handkerchiefs wet from their eyes into the graue, and at the instant the most part of all the shot great and small, aboard and a shoare were discharged.

The 27. day of Iune being Sunday, the Lords, Generals, with all the chiefs and Gentlemen of the army, heard a Sermon at Saint Francisco, where after dinner they made a great many Knights, euen all almost that did deserue it, or affect it, or not neglect and refuse it (as some did:!) this great indulgence of fortune, and exceeding accesse of honor to them in this atchieuement, mave them not onely bountifull, but prodigall of honour. But two very worthy Captaines (which were hurt in the fights at the entring of the Towne) were Knighted before the Towne was all won: Sir Samuell Bagnol, and Sir Arthur Sauage. The rest which were Knighted at the Friorie, and afterward, were.

There was great dispute about the keeping of Cadiz, and the opinions of all the olde souldiers and Sea-men asked: but because it appeared not how it might certainly at all times be relieued with men, munition and victuals, and for other causes best knowne to the Generalls, it tooke no effect.

The next day being munday, the Lord Admirall went aboord, to set things in order in the fleete, and to make ready for a new enterpriſe: and by his example alſo to draw the ſeamen and mariners to their ſhippes, that were loath to come out of the towne.

The Duke of Medinaes letters to the Lord Admirall.

About this time the Lord Admirall received (from his old acquaintance, ſince 1588.) the Duke of Medina Sidonia Admirall of Spaine, two very honorable anſwers to 2. letters which he had before written to him about the exchang of priſoners, Spaniſh for Engliſh in the Gallies: the Dukes anſwere was, that he liked well of the motion, and would doe in it ſo much as lay in him. But (he ſayd) that that charge was more particularly in the Adelantado of the Gallies, to whom he would write, which hee performed ſo effectually, that within a day or two, the Adelantado ſent a principall Captaine to the Lord Admirall, and he made a full agreement for the exchange of Engliſh priſoners in the Gallies for Spaniſh priſoners in our hoyes: and vpon the firſt of July following, about forty of our Engliſh priſoners were deliuered aboard the Arke by the Gally called La fama, and promiſe for the reſt which was afterward duly accompliſhed. This gally La fama, whereof Don Iulian Hurtado was Captaine, came from Rota to the Engliſh fleete, with a white flagge of ſafe conduct, according to the order of warre, but an ignorant Sea Captaine made a ſhot at her as ſhe paſſed by him, and hurt and killed three men in her, wherent the Lord Admirall was much grieued, and greatly offended with the Captaine, and threatned to haue hanged him: but the Captaine of the Gally and Don Pavo Parin one of the Rohenes, made earneſt ſuite to the Lord Admirall for his pardon, which they obtained.

The Earle of Eſſex ſtayd all this while in the Towne, with the reſt of the Commanders and Captaines, and companies of the Army by land, which he ſuffered not to be idle. Vpon the twenty eight day, the Ordinance was taken from the walles, Caſtles, and forts. Vpon the 30. day of June in the night, hee made a rode into the Ile, and burned, and raſed, and ſpoyled all that mought ſerue the enemie to any ſtrength or reliefe. The next day hee ſet pioners a worke, to raſe and deface the fortes and Caſtle in the Towne. The firſt of July, the Tower of the Cinadra was battered down. And laſtly, vpon the fourth of July ſet the whole Towne on fire (the Churches excepted) and ſaw all his men imbarqued, and came aboord laſt. And the next day the whole fleete ſet ſayle, and ſteered their coaſt to the weſtward: and in the meane time beſides the negotiation (which I ſpake of before) with the Gallies) the 6. of July the Generalls ſent a pinnace into Barbary with 40. ſlaues which had eſcaped out of the gallies, and came to them for ſuccour. And about this time ſir Anthony Aſtley was ſent into England to make report to her Majeſtie what had paſſed hitherto, and for other ſecret affaires of the Lords Generals.

From this time till we came to Faro, there was nothing done, but often meetings for conſultation about their next enterpriſe, and how to get victuals and freſh water: ſaving that the Gallies in a calme caught vp a fly-boat of ours bound for England. In this courſe we paſſed firſt by Rota, and by the point of Chipiona neere vnto which lie the Rockes called the Salmedinas, and by the Duke of Medinas tower or Almadzana for Tunny fiſhing: and by Arenas Gordas, in the mouth of the Bay of S. Lucar, and by Aymont in Portugall, and then we doubled the Cape Saint Mary, and ſo came before Faro a principall Towne of Algarua, where they reſolued to land.

But the firſt Generals ſent both their Lieutenants of their ſhips, Sir Amias Preſton, and Sir William Mounton, and Captaine William Morgan, to diſcouer the paſſage to the Towne by the channell in their pinnaces, in the euening, and to view the place, to eſpy the forces, and to learne what ſtagge that was, which they ſaw at their comming before the Towne, and to ſeeke for freſh water and victuals, and ſuch like inſtructions. They brought anſwere the next morning, that the people were fledde, and had carryed away their goods, and that they could not as yet finde any freſh water nor victuals: but yet for all this in the afternoone the Lords Generals landed with all their forces: but the Lord Admirall being not well, and hauing little hope of any reliefe there for their wants, returned aboord his ſhip, taking ſir Edward Winkefield with him, who was lame of a hurt which he had received at Cadiz in one of his legges, and indeede, it was the Earle of Eſſex his earneſt deſire that the Lord Admirall (ſeeing him ſo ill) ſhould returne to his ſhipper, and take that valiant Knight with him. Whileſt the Lord Admirall lay here at Anchor, the fleete of the Gallies came, and Anchored cloſe by the Engliſh fleete: but the Lord Admirall ſent a ſhip preſently to them to command them in his name, to depart from thence and goe further off: which commandement they obeyed as readily, as if the Admirall of Spaine had ſent it, and I rather note this becauſe I thinke it was the firſt commandement that euer they obeyed, being giuen them by an enemie vpon their owne coaſts.

The obedience of the Gallies.

The Earle of Eſſex being landed (as I ſaid before) and being deſirous to doe ſome exployt vpon the terra Ferma of Spaine, being alſo prouoked hereunto the rather by the enemy (who made braue ſhewes of horſe and foote vpon the coaſt all alongſt as we ſayled by) hee marched with his army that night to Faro (being about ſome two leagues from the place where wee landed) he tooke the Towne with eaſe, for the inhabitants had abandoned it, and carryed away moſt of their goods (as he was informed before) there was in the Nunnery ſome ſtuffe left, and in the Biſhops palace, and a Library of Bookes, valued at 1000. markes: there was alſo in the Towne ſome fruits, and wines, and a few hennes: and in the Fort there was ſome pieces of great Ordinance, whereof one was the fairеſt and longeſt Culuerin which the King of Spaine had, as it was eſteemed. And here the Earle appointed Captaine Brett a valiant Gentleman, and of very able body, to march into the Countrey with 800. Souldiers of the ſtrongeſt, choſen out of diuers bands: he marched ſome two or three leagues, and found a Towne called Loth, which he tooke and burnt, without any reſiſtance, but hee ſaw a farre off troupes of horſe and foote, (but none approached him:) but if any of his ſoldiers ſtraggled, or were left ſicke vpon the way (as many were) he found them at his returne pitifully mangled, ſome with their hands chopt off, ſome had their noſtrills ſlit, and others killed.

In this iourney he had got aboue a hundred Cowes and oxen, and ſome ſwine, for victuall, and was brought by an old Portugall to a well of good freſh water, but ſmall ſtore: and ſo returned to Faro to the Lords Generall, who after he had ſacked and fired the Towne, the third day returned to the Fleete.

And now being all aboord againe, the Generals with their councell held a new conſultation on what was elſe to be done, & how victuals and freſh water might be ſupplied: ſome had great deſire to goe for Lagos: but ere any thing was reſolued, the fleete was paſt the cape S. Vincent, where a ſtrong Eaſterly wind tooke vs and forced vs to ſtall off into the Sea ſome 80. leagues from the Cape, and towardes the Iles of Azores: & here they called a Councell againe, and reſolued to goe for thoſe Iſlandes, there aſſuring themſelues to haue plenty of freſh water and victuals, and there to lie for the Carakes and Weſt Indian fleete, and to encounter with the 25. Spaniardes men of War, which lay at the Iles (as the Generals were aduertiſed.) But neither did this purpoſe hold, for the winds comming contrary, they held a new conſultation, and that was to beare in with the coaſt of Spaine and Portugall, and to ſearch what ſhipping was in the harbours thereof as they paſſed. And this courſe was thought the beſt, and kept for the moſt part vntill wee came before the Groyne and Ferola. From thence Maiſter George Buck was diſpatched by the Lords Generals to her Majeſtie to make relation of that which had paſſed in the army ſince the fleetes departure from the Bay of Cadiz: and other particular buſineſſe of their Lordſhips for her Majeſties ſeruice.

The Lords Generals thus being come before the Groyne, the firſt of Auguſt, and finding no ſhipping there nor in Ferola, now lately reuicted to come for England, and the rather by reaſon of the generall wants of victuals and freſh water, and for that there were many ſick men in the Warſpite and in diuers other ſhippes of the fleete, and for a great leake that was ſprung in the Mainyard, and for that (which moued their Lordſhips moſt of all) her Majeſties commandement, that they ſhould lay forth but fiue moneths in this voyage. All which reaſons duly conſidered, the Lords Generalls now ſhaped their courſe directly for England, and vpon the 7. and 8. dayes of Auguſt they arriued with their whole fleete in Plimouth ſafely, thanks be giuen to Almighty God, who hath ſo bleſſed her Majeſty and her miniſters in all her deſignes and enterpriſes, with ſo much honour and good ſucceſſe, as he hath made her the mirrour of all Princely felicity in this world.

The 15. of Auguſt betweene the houres of eight and nine of the clocke at night, a houſe of timber lately ſet vp very high, and not fully finiſhed, neere to Saint Brides Church in Fleete ſtreete, ſuddenly fell downe, and with it one olde houſe adioyning, by the fall whereof the ſaid goodman named Cox, with a man ſeruant and a child were killed. We departed from Douer on thurſday the 16. day of September, 1596. and arriued at Dieppe in France the thurſday ſeuen night following, where both the Ambaſſadours, the right honourable the Earle of Shrewſbury, and Sir Anthony Mudnay Knight, were very Nobly entertained and feaſted, the firſt night by the Commander de Dieppe, Mounſieur de Chaſtes, who was inuited the next day to dinner and requited by the Earle, and in diuing the viſhipping of their houſe, and other their prouiſions, their Lordſhips paſſed the time in hunting for two or three dayes.

Sunday the 27. following, the Earle ſet forward to Roane, the Capitall towne of Normandy, and was met on the way by Mounſieur Feruagues, and his Traine, who conducted his Lord that night to the Caſtle of Cleere where he lodged.

Munday his Lordſhippes proceeding on, was encountred within two miles of the Citie of Roane, by the Duke Montpenſier, the Kings Lieutenant thereof, and about 200. horſe, of Nobles and Gentlemen his attendants, who bringing his Lordship to his lodging after some ceremonies of honorable entertainment to the his lodge: his Lordships lodging was in the market place, called Le March Veux, in a very faire house furnished with rich hangings, and tapits, their cloathes of estate, and two standing beds.

The Wednesday seuen night following being the first of October, the King made his royall entry into Roan, in which entring sundry messages passed betweene the King and the Ambassadors, praying them not to thinke the time long of his comming, for that he was to attend a preparation, which the Townes men had purposed for his welcome, hauing neuer bene in the City before: the manner whereof (for it was very Princely and full of rare deuises) I haue thought good to insert.

In the Suburbs of the Towne on the farther side of the riuer, was newly erected for the King, a most stately rome made of plaister of Paris, where his Highnesse stood with his Nobilitie to behold the companies, and generall Clarkes both of horse and foote, and to receiue the Townes meane submissions as they passed, which was most humbly performed by sire of euery company, and of his Maiestie most graciously accepted.

Fifth, the order of the Fryers Capuchins followed their Crosse, being of wood, vpon which a Crowne of Thornes, and three great nayles were fixed, their habit was russet, all bepatched, girt with hempton Cords, shirted with hairecloath, and barefooted, wearing sandales only. This order may haue but one habit for a man during his life, they lied standing and slept sitting, they liue by almes, and are much esteemed of the people.

Secondly, the Gray Friers being Cozeleers followed their Crosse of siluer. This order haue a Library in their house, containing sixand fifty paces in length, with three rowes of Deskes all along, replenished with many excellent bookes both of Philosophy, and the fathers, the most part manuscript.

Thirdly, followed the Carmelites and Celestines, fourthly the Jacobins, fiftly the Augustines. Then proceeded the Priests and Chauntries of the Towne in their Surplices, singing, bearing 42. Crosses of siluer, which was the iust number of the parishes and chappels in the towne, and euery Crosse had a great banner of a Saint richly painted thereon, besides two tapers of white wax in Aulter candlesticks, borne by youths, and euery taper armed with an Escutchion of the Kings armes.

Then followed the Print-maisters of Normandy, the Merchants of the Vicountyshippe, of the Riuer, Receiuers, Customers, Treasurers, Honorates, Procurators, and other officers of the palace.

Then came Batchelers, and Maisters of Arte, Doctors of Physicke, Ciuil Law and Diuinity. All these degrees were cloathed in very fayre, and reuerent Garments of Damaske, sattan, and blacke velure, long and large, and for the most part riding vpon Mules, distinguished by Virgers that made way before them.

Then followed in Gownes of purple cloath, and hoods of the same, with square Caps on their heads, the Officers and Councellours of the Chamber of Normandy, in which is kept their high Court of Chauncerie, and Parliament.

Then came riding on Mules to the number of forty in Scarlet, called De la robe rouge being Iudges, and Officers of estate, belonging to the sayd Chamber.

After them to he place, the foure Presidents of Normandy in robes of Scarlet, furred with Calaber, wearing on their heads great Caps of maintenance of blacke velure.

Then proceeded the seuerall bands of the Towne, containing foure regiments of foote, and three cornets of horse, suted in greene, russet, and Carnation satten, and velure, garnished with siluer lace, their hatts, plumes, scarfes, and shoes white: the furniture of their muskets, sether staues, and partisants, suitable to their colours, their ensignes, cornets, and standarts all white, emblasoned with the Kings armes, and enriched with his deuice, which was a Roman H Crowned, betweene two branches (as I take it) the one an Olive, the other a Laurell, his motto, or word, Hac dedit, His dabit vltra.

After vpon great Coursers rode forty enfant d'Honour or Henchmen, the properest and chiefest yong men of the towne, suted in greene velure, horsemens coates richly laced with siluer, their Caparisons and trappings answerable, their plumes, scarfs and backs, white.

Then came all the Gallants and young Gentlemen of the French Court, (conuetting and fetching vp their great horse) accompanied with diuers of the Nobility, as Barons, Viccounts and Earles, the Knights of the Saint Esprite were knowne by their blew Ribbands, and white Crosses hanging thereat.

The Chancellor, Mounsieur Cheuerny, rode alone after his place.

The Archbishop of Rhemes, did ride betweene the Bishops of Amiens and Eureux.

Then marched the Kings three guards after their Drums and Fifes. The Swissers with Shot and pikes, the Scottes and French with Halbards, the Kings Trumpets in hosemens coates of greene velure, and very well mounted, then tooke they place, and sounded oftentimes as they passed.

Mounsieur Straine, Maister of the ceremonies and one of the Captaines of the Guard rode together, after whom followed 3. Heraults, Anjow, Picardy, and Britaine, inuelled in rich coates of Purple Velure, embroydered with the Armes of France, each bearing his name in Capitall letters of gold vpon the left manch.

Then followed two Sergeants of Armes carrying Maces before the person of the King, who that day was mounted on a white courser, his owne apparrell, plumes, and hoses white, wearing the order of the S. Esprite at a broade blew Riband about his neeke.

About

About his person were his guard of Scots, and certaine footmen in white. And after him followed the Duke de Nauers, Duke de Namours, Duke Ioyeuse, and others.

Leaue we the King going to the City, and let vs by the way of preparation, know how the same was ordered for his entertainement.

Some 5. or 6. dayes before the King made his entry, the Bailiffes of Roane commaunded by sound of trumpet that all the streets through which his Maiestie should passe, should be cleansed, sanded, and their signes taken downe, hanging forth their fairest coueringes, and Tapits at their Windowes, and to cry, Viuele Roy as hee passed. All which being in a readinesse, the Windowes full of people of all degrees, the Greetes guarded with certaine Ensignes of muskets and infinite numbers of common people in euery quarter.

His Maiestie by this time was come to an vtter gate betweene the bridge, and the suburbs, which in the late warre had beene more than halfe ruined. This gate in two or three dayes with plaister of Paris they had halfe repaired, and the other halfe remained in ruine, for explication of a deuise which was thus. On the toppe of the gate were certaine personages maps of plaister, some carrying of stones, some Porter, some hewing, some leueling, and all so liuely that they seemed to want nothing, but very motion. Vpon the Arch of the part repaired sate Apollo with his lyre, vnder whom in golden letters was written this Prophesie.

Henrico iterum reparabitur aussice regnum.
And ouer the Portall.
Gallicarum vrbium restitutorem.

The King being past this gate, he came to the first gate of the bridge, which was made of 12. columnes about fourescore foot of height, the base bony Capitoll, Frize and Cornish, after the order Ionica. Ouer the Arch whereof in a table of embossed worke sate a personage representing Normandie, seeking her backe against two Leopards (the armes of the Dutchie) in her left hand, she held a Hart, her right hand she put forth to a figure, resembling the King, who seemed to raise her vp, vnder her was written, Da miteræ Dextram, and ouer her certaine drops distilling from the heauens. Then in goulden letters vnder the Kings armes (which was embraced with low Palmes) were these verses in French thus Englished.

O doubled Branches for Conquerors ordain'd,
If Henries name, for Crownes hath you not gain'd, Bowing downe your topps, for to be wreathed
You cannot giue him your honours triumphant,
No more then this streame, can yeeld water currant, Vnlesse from higher spring it be receiued.

The King hauing viewed the deuice, and read the verses, passing further, vnder the roofe or vault or gate, ouer his head certaine cloudes opened, and there descended vpon him the similitude of the holy Ghost, and an Angell presented vnto him a Sword, called the Sword of peace, before the opening of which cloud, a voyce was heard, as from God, saying.

Heauenly mouing spirits, stable intelligences,
Cleaue through, make way for this spirits discent,
Presenting from one heauen, of thousand influences,
To one speciall Monarke, one speciall present.

Henries mine annointed, he feares me, I him loue, Yeeld him due honour, the honour shall be mine:
All Kings are Gods, and as my selfe aboue,
Dispose both good, and bad, on earthly line.

The Angell descending saith:

Stay mighty Monarch, stay, the heauenly Monarch sends,
To thee this Sword of peace, with good and happy day:
Take it, but in thy blisse a modest heart entends, Himselfe who raiseth, fals, and Gods loue looseth aye.

He hath giuen thee the sword in fields victorious,
And that which to no other could be giuen so:
One more of peace, did rest for thy hand glorious,
Receiue it from aboue, for to command belouv.

Threefold great by these, thou maist thrice happy make,
France vnder thee to yeeld, thy Sceptre greatnesse bring, Pursue this good (therefore) the price for gracious take,
The which about thy browes, makes thousand Laurels spring.

The

The Angell ascending saith:

Reioyce ye heauens since peace which yore hath left,
Returned is on earth, to dwell vvith Henry,
Who for his neighbours good, of ioy bereft,
Merits for his that men one day be sory.

Earth doe as much, tapet thy selfe vvith flowers,
And sundry fruites, that henceforth may increase:
All things without mans Art, are handy labours,
For golden age is where there raigneth peace.

Then live thrice happy, and content this Prince,
Who chiefe of World, and peace is made this day,
Of all the World heele make but one prouince,
If there be Kings, these Kings shall him obey.

After these words deliuered by the Angell, the King proceeded ouer the Bridge of Roane, which was guarded by fiue or six hundred Swissers all in bright armour, and Spanish pikes, vntill he came to the other gate of the bridge, which entred into the Towne, the building of which gate, was after the order rustique, rising three degrees, hauing vpon the one corner of the first degree, a hound with a Cupid riding on his backe, vnder which was written, Dux Amor est fidei. And on the other corner, an Ore with another Cupid, subscribed, Vires fœnantur Amore. Vpon the corners of the second degree, stood foure Tritons, or Mareemen, with tridents in their hands, and aboue them on the third degree, was placed a personage representing Roane, with a Lambe standing, and laying one foote vpon the knee of the figure, ouer which was written, Now, it is to be vnderstood, the Lambe is the Armes of the Citie, which in an Epigram made vnto the King was thus described.

O King your Lambe before our vvretched broyle,
Was wont to beare vpon her humble backe:
The golden fleece, like that of Colchos Ile,
But certaine nevv-come Argonauts (alacke)
Haue her oftimes so barely cut and shorne,
That on her body poore, and all forlorne,
You scarce with paine, can find at all to pull,
One simple fleece, or little locke of Wooll.

The King passing through this gate, the towne had prepared for him a Canopie of purple velvet, richly embroydered with his armes and deuice, and flower-deluces strewed all ouer, which Canopy was carried ouer him by six honchmen, apparelled in one suite. From thence hee went by the streete called la Rue du Pont, where was set vp a very stately Pyramide, about a hundred foote of height, on which was set forth in painting of Copper colours the labours of Hercules, on the toppe wher of was a great sum of gold, bearing the King Crowned H. vpon the points of his beames: the spire of his Pyramide was carried from the Vale or pedestall, by foure Sphinxes guilt, and on the one side of the said Vale, was written Hercules Gallicus, and on the other side in letters of gold vpon sable, French verses thus Englished,

Hercules and Henry, are semblable,
In vertues, vvords, and acts,
But that Hercules, is in the fable,
And Henry in the Facts.

Here the King turned downe the street called Ozon, where were set vp two statues of plaister, vpon Antique bases, both vndernamed in Greek characters. The first called Stable victory, held in her one hand a Palme, and in the other, an Imperiall Crowne, & Scepter, treading vpon Armour, and other marshall engines. The other figure was quick-sighted Iustice, holding a sword and ballance, and treading vnder her feete, a number of visors, or maskes, signifying falsehoods, betweene them both was written in golden letters vpon Azure, certaine French verses to this effect.

Kings which for honor beare name of August.
(Or happy Cæsars) preferr'd by History,
Acknowledge Henry more valiant and iust,
Would beare no other but the name of Henry.

So the Kings Maiestie, riding through the streete named Le Rue de la Viscount, at the streets end opposite his comming forth into the high streete, there was raised a boyshe piller about twenty foot of height, on the top whereof, stood Fame treading vpon death, holding a Crowned H. in one hand, and a Trumpet with a banneroll of France in the other, which when the Kings Trumpets in passing by, sounded, Fame raised her Trumpet to her mouth, and seemed to sound also, turning her selfe round about, which motion was most cunningly wrought by an engine below within the Base. And vpon the outside of the Base, leaning against the pedestall, sate Pallas, and Peace: treading vpon Envy, who was set forth like a fury, with haires of Snakes, and a murthering knife in her hand. Ouer these figures sate History writting, and looking vp to Fame, vnder whom were written these Latine verses.

Delicium historiæ, & famæ sed vera canenti,
Henricum voges exemplar habere futuri:
Vt fausto populos, & bello, et pace regatis.

O future Kings example take by Henry,
Histories delight, and Fames most true report,
That you may rule, and governe prosperously,
Your people both in vvar, and peacefull sort.

Vnder these verses was painted a Lyon breathing fourth Bees, but without either motto, or allusion.

The King passing on through the Dial gate, there was an Arbor resembling Apollos temple curiously wrought of herbage, and fashioned like vveathed pillers, adioyning to which was a little vvood, where on a wall was painted in prospect diuers Metamorphoses, as Daphne pursued by Apollo, and turned to a Lavvrel: Pan embracing Siringa, as thee became Reedes: Europa and Iupiter, and such like. In which Arbor was excellent musique heard, both for voice and Instruments. All which being a while listened vnto by his Maiestie, he proceeded to the streetes ende, turning to our Lady Church (called Nostredame) where was erected a most Magnificent Arch Triumphall of plaister after the order Corinthique, on the top whereof vpon a great Globe of the world, stood the figure of the King in his Royal robes supported by two personages, the one Prudentia, who Crowned him with a Crowne of Bayes, the other Fortitude, who offered him a Scepter, vveathed about with Laurell: before him sate Occasion, behind him Clemency, and round about him lay Armours, Ensignes, Drummes, Trumpets, and other marshal instruments: at either corner sate a huge Lyon of Gold, supporting the Armes of France and Nauarre, and on the other side of the Gate, stood Envy bound in chaynes, feeding of her owne heart, and on the other side a man of Armes, sitting a sleepe on a drummes head, by whom was written, Security. Ouer the portall gate, vnder the Globe were written in Latine, these verses thus translated.

To some for feare, to some for Clemency,
Are prizes giuen: but fourth King Henry,
Excelling other Kin both, and both conioyn'd,
In him by wisedome hath also adioyn'd,
Vnto these three, a fourth (occasion)
Which if it stand with lawes probation,
Hath sworne her selfe to be companion,
Yoking worlds to France by King Borbonion.

Opposite to this Arch Triumphall, vpon two Rustique pillers (distinguished aboue 20. foote asunder) stood 2. figures of plaister, the one of S. Lewis in his Kingly robes, holding a Scepter in one hand, and a verge in another, on the top whereof, was a hand pointing to the King which stood on the Globe with this verse vnder written. Maßæ tua virtutemea maxima sirpi. The personage on the other piller, was Sambetha, one of the Sibils, who likewise pointed to the Kings proposition, and presented to the beholders a table, with this prophesie in Latine, Englished thus.

Sambetha I. of Sibils chiefe, in Hebrew by ofspring, Glad Oracles bring to the French, and vnto thee O King,
The earth did never boast herselfe, of any Child so much,
As France (O Henry) shall reioyce, that thou th ir King art such,
Peace being to the people brought, a thousand Armies strong,
Dreadlesse shall march and follovv farre, thy Battailes all along,
Where Tagus, and Durius swell, with goodly golden sand,
And where Idumea for thy selfe, holdes worthy Palmes in hand,
Thou being Captaine, souldiers shall returne with laden spoyles,
Of Basterne and the Westerne wealths, and shall bring to their soyles, Triumphant signes, and Trophies backe: O King their Country vvoane, Fame shall eternall Crownes thee giue, for that which thou hast done, Liue thou therefore now all our yeeres, and Nestors longest date.
Worlds loue, to people giving Lawes, made quiet by thy State.

The King going through this Arch Triumphall, hee presently entred the Cathedrall Church of Nostredame, with all the Ecclesiasticall Pompe that might be, from whence, after certaine Ceremonies, which entertained him for a time, hee returned more priuatly, in his Coach to his Court, being some times a Cardinals house, adioyning to Saint Owins Church, and thus the Kings entrie ended with the day, being performed with great honour, Charge, and Applawdements of all sorts of people.

Thursday the 7. of October, the right honorable Lords Ambassadours had audience of the King, who most Princely received, embraced and welcomed them both, as also all other the Lords, knights, and Gentlemen their attendants.

Death of Edelitie taken by the French King.

Saturday the ninth of October, the Edelitie or Oath of confederation betweene the King and the Queenes Maiestie of England, was very solemnly taken in the Church of Saint Owen, in the presence of the French Nobi-

Nobility, Lords, Spirituall, and Temporall, who that day tooke the right hand of the quire.

The French K. inuested with the order of the Garter

Sunday being the morrow after, the Order of the Garter was most royally performed in the said Church, where both the Princes, had their ensignes and armes erected. The Queenes Maiestie being Soueraigne of the Order, had that day the right hand of the Quire, & so had the right honorable Earle, her Maiesties Ambassador his Armes, Kile, and Stall accordingly. Before her Maiesties ensigne, sate Walter William Dethicke, Garter, principall King of Armes, in his Robe of the Order. Before the Earle stood William Segar, Somerset Herault. Next vnto the Earle sate the Lord Ambassador Lieger. Then the Lord Cromwell, the Lord Rich, and all other Knights and Gentlemen, according to their quality. On the left hand, sate the King betweene the two Bishops of Aniow, and Cureux. Before the Kings estate, sate his Chancellor, Monsieur Cheverney alone. And before him stood, Aniow, Picardy, and Burany, Heraulds of Armes. In the stalls sat the Knights of the Saint Esprite, who (as farre as I doe remember) were these, Duke Montpensier, Duke de Neuers, Duke de Namours, the Prince de Vandemont, Duke Montmerancy Constable, and his brother the Admirall, Duke Ioyeuse, Duke de Bullon, the Marshall de Rorz, and the Marshall Matignon.

All things being accomplished with much honor, the Kings Maiesty inuested and sworne, the Vespers ended, and the Benediction giuen by a Bishop in his Pontificalibus, the King taking the Earle by the hand, they returned as they came, attended vpon by the Nobilitie, who two, and two, proceeded before them. That night the King and the Earle supped together vnder one estate, in the house of Duke Montpensier, where also was a generall feast for all the English.

Thursday, the fourteenth of October, the King tooke the Earle into his Coach, and went to the Bridge of Roan, to see a seasight vpon the River, which was performed by two French Shippes, against two supposed Spanish, and one Brasilian (large boates, armed and prepared for that purpose, with muskets, pikes, and Hargubuza-Crook) where after one houres fight, the Brasilian was sunke, and the Spaniyards forced to flie, by the French. This pastime was done by the Mariners, for the Kings more delight.

On Friday, the right honorable Earle with his attendants, tooke leaue of the Kings Maiesty, and kissed his hand, departed with great loue, honor, and reputation.

Saturday, the sixteenth of October, his Lordshippe set forth from Roane, and came that night to Depe, being accompanied with the Commander thereof, Monsieur de Chaste, where he remained for conuenient passage, ten dayes after.

The 29. of October, the Queenes Maiesties ships being come, his Lordship embarked himselfe in the Admirall, and arriued at the Downes neere Dover the next day following.

Sunday the 1st of December, 1596. Master Rogers Doctor of the Ciuill Law, being newly made a Preest by the Bishop of Wels, made his first Sermon in the Cathedrall Church of Wels, where were assembled a very goodly Audytory: in his Sermon according to a Text that hee had chosen, and hauing made no prayer, hee began to discourse of Spirits and their properties, and within a while after, there entred in at the West Window of the Church a darke and vnpozpottionable thing of the bignesse of a foteball, and went along the wall on the pulpit side, and sodainly it seemed to breake, but with no lesse sound and terrour, then if an hundred double Canons had beene discharged at once, and therewithall came a most violent stozme and tempest of lightning and thunder, as if the Church had beene full of fire; in this strange tempest all the people were sore amazed, and many of them stricken downe to the ground, the Preacher himselfe was stricke downe in his pulpit, and many in the body of the Church were marked in their garments, armes & bodies, with the figures of Starres, or Crosses, but there was no maner of marks vpon any that were in the Quyer, this tempest brought with it a most terrible stench, and sodainly as it ceased, it brake downe some stone worke, melted the wyers and yeons of the clock, but burned no timber, this stozme ended, the people began to come againe to themselues, and then then the Bishoppe hauing firste the Quyer Make generally vnto them, and inuited them to a Sermon there in the afternoone, whereby he recomforted them all.

A dearth of graine.

This Summer, by reason of much raine, and great floods, came wonderfull scant, so as in London wheate was sold for ten shillings a bushell, and Rye for fiue shillings, and Otemeale at eight shillings a bushell.

A strange story touching

In the County of Kent, in the parish of Welkam, a mile and a halfe from the towne Southwarde, not farre from the Citie of a common high way, called Dolhamhill, leading from London towardes Rochester in Sussex, two elmes lying toyether, separated with a hedge of hollow aldzes, &c. On the 18. of December was found a plot thereof twelue perches long to be sunke fiue foote and a halfe deepe, the next morning fifteene foote more, the third morning eighteene foote more, the fourth morning eighteene foote more, and so from day to day, the great breach of ground containing in length, about eighteene perches, and in breadth twenty eight, began to the heads of the trees thereon to lose it selfe from the rest of the ground lying round about it, and therewithall to runne, slide, and hyde Southward day and night, for the space of 11. dayes. The ground of two water pits, the one fiue foote deepe of water, the other twelue at the least, and about foure perches ouer in breadth hauing sundry tuffes of Alders and Asbes growing in the bottomes, with a great rocke of stone vnder them, were not onely removed out of their places, and carried towardes the South, at the least foure perches a piece: but withall, mounted aloft, and become hilles, with their sedge, flags, and blacke mudde vpon the tops of them, higher then the face of the water (which they had forsaken) by nine foote, and in place from which they are removed, aboue ground (which lye higher) is discouered, necessary the water lying now vpon it. Moreouer in one place of the plaine field, there is a great hoale in the by sinking of the earth, to the depth of thirty foote at the least, being in breadth in some place two perches ouer, and in length fiue or sixe perches. Likewise there is a hoale of three perches long, carryed Southward with his tresse, fouer perches at the least: sundry other sinkings there be in diuers places, one of fifty and fiue foote, another of fortie and seauen, and another of thirty and fiue foote, by meanes of which confusion, it is come to passe, that where the high hilles were, there be the deepest dales, and the lowest dales are become the highest grounds.

The whole measure of the Breaking Ground, was at the least nine Acres, seuen dayes workes, and fonre perches, &c. Euidences for testimony of both hereof, were Robert Bostocke Esquire Iustice of peace, James Austin, Sir John Scuttey, Vicar of, William, John Downing Gentlemen, and many others.

This yeare in the moneth of May, great preparation being made to the Seas, Souldiers were pressed in the City of London, vntill the number of fiue hundred and fiftie, and all their furniture was prepared at charges of the Citizens: these were duly for a long time trayned in the fieldes, also at the charges of the Citizens, out of which number was picked foure hundred, the residue were dismissed: these and other like picked men out of diuers shires (besides sayleres) consisted of 6000. able men for land seruice, amongst the which were of Knights and Gentlemen voluntaries, to the number of 500. or better, very gallant persons, and as lightly furnished for all things necessary (besides superfluitie in gold lace, plumes of Feathers, and such like.) These Commanders were as followeth, Robert Deuereux, Earle of Ewe, as well Admirall by Sea, as Generall of the Army by land, his lieutenant Generall, Lord Thomas Howard, Knight of the Order, his vice Admirall, Sir Walter Raleigh, Knight, Captaine of the guard, and Lord of the Stannaries. For the land seruice, his Lieutenant Generall was, Charles Lord Mountioy, Knight of the Order: his marshal of the field, Sir Francis Vere, Knight Capitall, Generall of the English forces in the Low countries, master of the Ordnance, Sir George Carew Knight, Lord president of Munster, his Seriant Maior, Sir Fernando George Knight, Gouernour of the forte at Plymmouth: the treasurer of the army Sir Hazlebelt an Knight, &c. The whole naumber deuided into three squadrons, consisted of 6. seuerall companies, 3. seuerall Lord men of warre: the rest victuallers, ships of transportation: of her Maiesties ships, the number was 17. or 18. there were of the Nauy Royall of good men of warre, sent from the States of the Low Countries, to attend her Maiesties fleet in this seruice, well manned and furnished. The returne of the fleete, and all the shipping of London and other the Port Townes together with sundry vessells belonging to the Londoners Gentlemen aduenturers in this voyage. The purpose of this preparation was for the taking of the Islands of Azores, which was resolued to haue been taken & possessed by one Christmas, there to haue planted a certaine garrison: Victualling and many martiall men were then inuited and set vpon about the 30. of July, but being some 600. leagues on waies their tourney, there sodainly arose a storme and tempest from the East against them and so continued for foure dayes, in so great violence, that they were all forced backe againe into Plimmouth hauen, where they victualles new vpon, & all things could be viewed and repayred. On the 17. of August they againe weighed Anchors, and set saile, meeting with many stormes, and foule weather, wherby they were altogether disseuered: but on the 31. of September, they vnderstood by Letters sent to the Generall and assembled themselues to him, bringing with them fruites, & other fresh victuals, because that they had suffered much penury for want of victuals, which was grounded vnder this estate.

Voluntary gallants to the Seas in great bravery.

Those in this fleete, Earle of Rutland and Southampton. Lords Grey, Rich, and Cromwell.

Flores an Iland, and Fernernes.

At the Iland of Fayal they tooke a Carrick of 1200. tuns loaden with Indian commodities, and sent her into England, before the vanquishing of the Tun Generall Generall thither, who refreshing himselfe and his followers there for some foure dayes, or better, he burnt the Towne, and brought away the ordinance both of the towne and forts.

Pike an Iland.

In the meane time, the squadron of Flemmings were playing their parts in the Ile of Pike, rausacking the wines, and burning all that was within their power. The 26. of September, from Fayal the fleete made toward the Ile of Gratiosa, where they cast anchor, and presently came aboard our Generall, the chiefe men of that Iland submitting themselues and craving mercy, which they obtained upon condition to send refreshing to the fleete, which they willingly performed.

Gratiosa an Iland.

S. Michaels Iland.

From thence our fleete made for S. Michaels Iland, and as they came very neere unto it, two of the foremost shippes of that fleete shot off twise or thrise, and bare up towardes the Admirals ship, these brought newes of the Indian fleete, by them discovered, comming for the roade of Gratiosa, which the Generall had so lately left: upon this intelligence our Admirall shotte off a piece and cast about, the like was done by the vice admirall, and so thorough the fleet. Within few houres after, our fleet encountred, t tooke the Spanish ships comming from the Havana. These ships made relation of 40. sayles of Indian men (whereof some 8. were fraighted with the kings treasure) upon this intelligence of the passing by of those Indian ships, our fleete followed after them to the Terlores, where they were some 6. houres entred before, and had mowred their shippes so fast under the towne and fort (being one of the best ports of al Europ) that after a long dispute our Generall and Lord Mountioy, in the defiance, and other tall ships bare in as close along the shore as they could, exchanging some 15.20. great shot with them, and so left the Ile of Terlores, and returned againe to S Michaels Iland, let fall their anchors before the towne, where after diuers viewes, taken for a conuenient landing place, it was at length agreed, that Sir Walter Rawleigh should with all the strength of the fleet lie before the town, whilest the Generall with all the land Commanders, and some 2000. embarked into small barkes, and pinnaces, secretly in the night did convey themselues about the point, to land at a Towne called Villa Franca, some fiue miles off, where they arrived safe, and were landed by the next morning, without any resistance. Those left in the best ships before the towne of S. Michael did all that night vse their alarmes, to give the land army the better meanes to goe in secret, and to come vnlooked for on that land side of the town of S. Michaels as was promised. They in the shippes looked out all the next day hoping to see their troupes marching over the hils, & plains, but the towne of Villa Franca, being seated in a pleasant soyle, full of fruits, vines, and fresh victuals, the sellers stuffed full of Wade, wheate, the army was content there to ingarrison themselues together, feasting themselues and carrying abonde of Wheate, Wade, and other merchandise into priuate mens ships, that followed Terlores an Iland.

for that purpose, whilest the fleete before Saint Michaels gaped for the comming of their land army. A Brazell man, laden with Sugar, and Brazell-wood, let fall his anchor in the midst of them, whom they tooke as prize: and a little after him a mighty Caracke followed, thinking (as the Brazell-man did) our fleete to have bene the Spanish Armado, on the Rere Admirall Sir Walter Rawleigh, commanded all the Flags to bee taken dowue off our shippes, that no man should weye Anchor, shoote off a peece, or put off one Boate, but by direction, all which time the Carracke bare in with full Saile: but suddainely one of the Flemmish squadron contrary to all direction given before, wayed Anchors, hoysed Sayle, and made towardes the Carracke (now ready to double the point that entred the Roade) and made a flotte at her, whereupon the discouering our fleete to be enemies, changed her course and ranne herselfe a ground hard vnder the Towne and Forte, and there set herselfe on fire in many places at once, shee was a ship of 1300. or 1400. tunnes, laden with Sugar, and other rich commodities. This tragidie thus ouerpast, our fleete againe lookes out for the comming of our land Army, but all in vaine, for they neither came nor sent, and thus was a great piece of seruice very vnfortunately neglected and Lost. The same night the Generall sent to commaund, all the fleete to wey, and to come for Villa Franco, so they left Saint Michaels good Towne, and then approached the time of yeare, that brought with it violent stormes, and foule weather, to those Ilands, whereof vpon the meeting of the whole fleete before Villa Franco, a generall commaundement was giuen, that all forts should with speed repayre abord their ships, for the Wind, and Seas began to rise. Thus on the ninth of October they set sayle for England, and landed on the west coasts there of, about the end of October. There were in this voyage taken, besides Brazell men, the good prizes that came from the Havana, laden with Cochinella, and other rich marchandise, besides the Silver, Golde, Pearles, Stuit, Muske, and Ambergreece. And these three prizes (whereof one was about 400. tun) by report of those Merchants that came in them, were valued to bee worth aboue 400000. Duckets, and thus much for this voyage to the Iles of Azores, wherof Sir Arthur Gorges Knight, then Captaine of her Maiesties ship called the Warspight, hath largely written, and learnedly discoursed in his booke intituled, A plaine and true relation of the voyage made vnto the Iles of the Azores, &c.

A rich Carrack burned.

Sir Arthur Gorges Knight.

This Summer arrived at London an Ambassador from the King of Polonia, Sigismond, the third, Sonne to Duke John of Finland, that after was King of Sweden, and was a long while here in England. This Ambassador was named Paulus de Ialine, a Gentleman of that Countrey, he brought letters of credence from the King dated the 19. of May last past, and had audience the 25. of July, at the Court then at

In Ozator from the king of Powland.

Greene-

Greenwich: whose Oration in Latine beginning, Serenissima princeps, domina Clementissima, sacra Regia Maiestas, Polonia dominus meus Clementissimus, &c. The effect of his speech after Princely congratulations, what good entertainment her Maiesties subiects had in his dominions, as his owne subiects, and contrary to which, his subiects were in England deprived of all their former olde priuiledges, and liberties of trade, graunted them by her Maiesties predecessors, and con equently were deprived of all trade and traffique on her Kingdome. And notwithstanding his subiects haue made seuerall complaints, of the which he must haue a care, he could not bee moued to diminish any part of his good will toward her Maiesty and her subiects, but there was of late set forth certaine Edicts and Proclamations, by the which contrary to the law of nature, his Subiects were forbidden the Nauigation and trade into Spayne, and vnder colour thereof, diuers Shippes of his subiects had bene taken at Sea, and their goods made prize, and confiscated, with more the like iniuries, all the which were such, that it touched not onely his Merchants, of whom he must haue a care, but likewise all the vniuersall Nobility of his Kingdomes, and Dominions, for that by the trade, doth consist all their liuings, and reuenewes, so that no greater iniurie can be done to the King his Master and the States of his Kingdomes: yet for his brotherly loue to her Maiesty, he hath suppended those meanes of doing the like to her Maiesties subiects, which meanes her Maiestie doth know, he doth not want: he thought good to proceede with patience, and to aduertise the Queenes Maiesty thereof, as a good neighbour, and Princes duty doth require. And for that Letters hitherto haue not bene regarded, hee had now sent him to require her Maiestie according to equitie, to make reparation, and restitution, and that the trade Westward to Spaine might be free, as it ought to be to all men, by the Law of Nations, otherwise the King his Master, would no longer neglect his subiects losses, but to take in hand such necessary meanes as might be required. As for the Queenes Warres with Spaine that ought not to hinder his subiects Nauigation, by the common Law of nature, and there was very old and good friendship betwixt the King his Master, and the King of Spaine, and betwixt the House of Austria, and the King his Master, hauing now renewed the olde amitie, by marriage with a daughter of Austria, so that hee is bound to maintaine the friendship with the King of Spaine, as well as with her Maiestie, euer his request bearing such equitie, hee doth trust that her Maiestie, will take regard of his protestations, and commaund satisfaction, &c. commending withall some particular suites, and causes. This Oration was prelently, learnedly, and very Eloquently, answered by her Maiestie, also in Latine: the effect whereof, in English followeth.

My how I was deceiued, I looked for an Ambassage, but thou hast brought a complaint vnto mee, I vnderstood by thy Letters, that thou wert a Legate, but I finde thee a Peraunt, never in my life heard I such an Oration, truly I marueil at so great and such vnaccustomed boldnesse, in a publique assembly. Neither doe I thinke, if the King were present, that he would say so much, but if peraduenture hee hath committed any such thing to thy charge (which surely I much doubt) this is the cause: That where the King is young, and not by blood, but by Election, and newly Elected, doth not so perfectly vnderstand the cause of handling these Businesses with other Princes, which either his auncestours haue observed with vs, or perhaps others will observe, that afterward shall succeede in his place. For thy part: Thou seemest to me, to haue read many bookes, but not to haue come vnto the bookes of Princes, but altogether to bee ignorant what is conuenient amongst Kings. For thou that makest often mention of the law of nature, and nations, know, that this is the law of nature and nations, that when warre doth happen amongst Princes, it is lawfull for the one of them to intercept the warlike helpes of the others, brought from any place, and to beware lest they fall to the losse. This I say is the law of nature and nations.

Where as thou doest rehearse A new affinitie with the house of Austria, which now thou makest so famous, forget not that there haue beene of the same house, that would haue bereft the Kingdome of Polonia from thy King. But for the rest, which bee not to bee spoke of, at this place, and time, because they are many, and to bee considered of, one after another: Thou shalt expect that, which thou shalt vnderstand of some of my Councell, to whom I will assigne this matter. In the meane time farewell and bee quiet.

Shortly after, the said Ozator, or Poland Embassador, was called before certaine of her Highnesse honorable Priuy Councell, to wit, the Lord Burghley, then high Treasurer, the Lord high Admirall, Sir John Fortescue, and Sir Robert Cecill, Principall Secretary: to whom, after the said Poland Embassadour hadde deliuered his speech, which hee made before the Queene in writing, and excused his rough kind of speakings, shewing that by his Commission signed, and sealed by the King in the assembly of the States of Polonia, hee was thereunto entoyned: he receiued a large answere in the name of her Maiestie, which properly pertaining to the matter of the Hanses, and answering fully and very pertinently, the question made by them about their olde priuiledges, and is set downe to the full, in a booke intituled, A Treatise of Commerce.

Embassage from Denmark.

This yeere also, Arnald Whitfield, Chancellour of the Realme of Denmarke Embassadour, and Christian Barnikan his assistant, from the King of Denmarke arrived heere, and were lodged in Fanchurch-streete: these had audience at the Court then at Theobalds in Essex, on the seuenth of September, they made certaine requestes, which her Maiestie presently answered without paule, to euery point of their Embassage.

Embassadors.

Who first, hee required that whereas there had remained a long League of amitie betweene the two Crownes of England and Denmarke, both in the life of the late deceased King and his predecessors, that it might please her Maiestie to confirme and continue the same to the King his maister, now newly adopted and Crowned.

Her Maiestie.

Her Maiestie granted thereunto, on condition the King his maister would vowe no woyle then his progenitors had done, and in all Christian tone accepted thereof.

Embassador.

His request was, that whereas there was great and continuall warres betweene her Maiestie and the King of Spayne, whereby much Christian blood was shedde: to the King his maister, and all other Christian Kings great Griefe, and to the great domage, and daunger of Christendome, that it would please her Maiestie, if in her wisedome thee did see it conuenient to giue her consent, that the King his Maister might make a motion of Peace, and if hee found both parties thereto addicted, to proceede further for the effecting thereof.

Her Maiestie.

Her Maiestie replying, sayd, the thought the King his Maister was too young to know the cause of the breach of the League betweene her Maiestie and Spayne, and as it was not broken by her Royall Consent, nor by any of hers, so it should not bee sued nor sought for by her Maiestie, nor any in her behalfe, for sayd thee, know now, and bee it knowne to the King your Maister, and all Princes Christened, or Heathen, that the Queene of England hath no neede to craue Peace, for I assure you (sayd thee) that I neuer endured one houre of feare, since my first comming to my Kingdome and subiects.

Embassador.

Hee was to desire, if it might stand to her Maiesties good liking, open traffique with Spayne, and that the goods might not bee stayed on the Narrow Seas, as it hath beene heretofore.

Her Maiestie.

Her Maiestie said, if any his Makers or subiects goods were so stayed, it was to her vnknowne, but if he had any such iust complaint, he should (the matter being made to her Councell knowne) haue such redresse, as should well content his Maister, and subiects.

Embassador.

He was to returne the Garter, that her Maiesty had bestowed vpon the King lately deceased as the manner of all forraine Princes is to do.

Her Maiestie.

Her Maiestie accepted thereof, but told him she was sory to receiue it of him, for thereby she was put in minde of the losse of a most honourable brother and louing friend, and so that shee were assured of his Kings loue and friendship in the like sort, shee would hereafter to the King his master doe the like fauour.

Embassadors.

The Ambassadour hauing his audience the day that her Maiesty was borne, tooke thereby occasion to say, that sithen it hath pleased God, on that day (which hee was informed was her Maesties birth day) to glorifie the world with so gracious a creature, who had brought so great happinesse to the Realme, & the neighbor Kingdomes, hee doubted not but that the King his Master should in that happy day, haue an happy answere of his request, &c.

Her Maiesty.

I blame you not to expect a reasonable answere, and a sufficient, but you may thinke it a great miracle, that a child borne at foure of the clocke this morning, should bee able to answere so wise and learned a man as you are, sent from so great a Prince as you bee, about so great and waighty affayres you speake of, and in an vnknowne tongue, by three of the clocke in the afternoone.

And with him more prudent and gracious wordes, thee ended, and gaue him leaue to depart.

An. Reg. 40. Pepper 8.s the pound.

This yere against Christmas, Pepper was solde at London for eight shillings the pounde, a matter then much noted, considering that not many yeares since, a great Carricke richly laden with diuers Marchandises, was taken at Sea, brought to our coastes, the goods thereof in smaller bessells conuayed to London, and layd vp in the Leaden hall, where the Pepper by Merchants of the Citie, was valued to be worth one hundred thousand pounds, appoynted there to be solde, which was done, with restraint that no Pepper (by way of Marchandise) should bee brought into this Realme, before sale of the former. Also raysons was this yeere solde for fiue pence the pound: Gascoine wine two shillings eight pence the Gallon, and sweet Wines for foure shillings the Gallon, &c.

The 20 of December, being S. Thomas eue, the Parliament was put off till their 11. of January, on the which day they sate againe.

Tiuerton knowe burned.

On the third of Aprill, the fayre and rich Towne of Tiuerton a town in Deuonshire was burnt by casualty of fire, beginning in a poore cottage, a woman there frying pancakes with straw (for lacke of other fewell) the same fired the house, and so the Towne about one of the clocke in the afternoone: the rage of which fire, lasting one houre and an halfe, consumed 409. houses, burned downe: one hundred and fifty thousand pound consumed in money, plate, merchandise, houshold stuffe, and houses, fiftie persons, men, women, and children consumed: an almes house preserued with poore men therein, in the midst of the flames: 2000. li. weekely was bestowed there in the market on mundoines, in Deuonshire Karseis: 9000. people maintained by the cloathing of that towne, in Deuon, Cornewall, and Somersetshires. It was the Earle of Deuonshires chiefe seate, where yet standeth his Castle, or Court place, thus much of this towne, was certified to her Maiestie, and was thought of many to bee a iust punishment of God vpon that Towne for the vnmercifullnesse of the rich, and small regard of the poore, which were dayly faine to perish in the streetes of that Towne for lacke of relefe.

Lord Zouche Embassador into Denmarke.

The Queene of England for the Congratulations of the late marriage, solemnized at Capinhage, the Capitall Citie in the Realme of Denmarke, betweene Christian the 4. King of Denmarke, and the Daughter of the Marquesse of Brandenburge, one of the Princes Electors, of the Empire: addressed the Lord Zouche thether in Ambassage, being assisted by Christopher Parkins, Doctor of Law, who departed from Lee in Esser, the tenth day of June. The second point of this legation, contained the recommendation of certaine complaints exhibited vnto her Maiestie, by her Merchants trading into the Balt parts, touching a late arrest and detention of their goods in the Sounde, amounting vnto to the value of one hundred thousand Talers, vpon a pretext of false and vntrue entries of their merchandises, to the defrauding of the Kings customes, of which dealements and imputations of fraude, the Marchants neuertheless pretended in themselues a clearenesse, iustifying the making of their entries agreeable vnto their custome and vsage in all other places, for Marchandises of the like natures. Wherefore it was on her Maiesties behalfe desired, that it would please the King to enter into some indifferent and honourable considerations thereof, according to Equity, and to extend his Clemency vnto the Merchants in the Release, and Restitution of their goods, if there should not appeare any fraude in them, vpon some debating of the cause betweene her Maiesties Ambassador, and his assistant, and some other of the Kings Councel, appointed to conferre with them thereabouts, and these Danish Commissioners, still iustifying vpon the matter of the confiscations, the King in conclusion condiscended in regard of her Maiesty, to yeeld vnto a restitution of thirty thousand Talers. Of which offer, it should please her Maiesty to accept, hee would expect her resolution, vntill the feast of S. Michael the Archangell next. The Lord Zouche and Doctor Parkins, hauing received this finall answere from the King, departed from Capinhage the thirteenth of July to Helsdenere, where the next morning they set sayle for England, and returned to her Maesties presence, the first of August following.

Doct. Parkins sent into Denmarke.

In the moneth of September following, Doctor Parkins was againe dispatched in Ambassage vnto the King of Denmarke, to demaund a generall restauration of all such goods of her Merchants as had beene arested and confiscated: for considering that they still complained of the rigor of his confiscation, and adiourned the manner of their entries according to the vsage accustomed both here in her Maesties Custome-house of England, and in all other Countries, whither they resort for traffique. The Queene vsed nothing satisfied with the late offer of the thirty thousand Talers made vnto her by the King. Wherefore in regard of this her Maesties second legation, the King added vnto the sayd graunt of thirty thousand Talers, other ten thousand, to bee reduced Tallars or Dollars. backe, partly in wares yet extant, and partly in ready money, which summe vpon certaine agreed by Doctor Parkins, was afterwards receiued, and distributed among the Merchants damnified by the arrests.

The Earle of Essex sent to Ireland Iohn Stow. And Rog.

The twentie seuen of March 1599. about two a clocke in the afternoone, Robert Earle of Essex, Viceregerent of Ireland, &c. tooke horse in Seeding Lane, and from thence hieing accompanied with diuers Noblemen, and many others, himselfe very plainely attired, rode through Grace-streete, Cornehill, Cheapeside, and other high streetes, in all which places, and in the fields, the people prayed exceedingly to behold him, especially in the high wayes for more then seuen myles space, crying, and saying, God blesse your Lordship, God preserue your honour, &c. and some followed him vntill the Euening; onely to behold him; when hee and his company came South of London, the Skie was very calme and cleere, but before hee could get past Islington, there arose a great blacke cloud in the Northeast, and suddainly came lightning and thunder with a great shower of haile and raine, the which some held as an ominous prodigie.

The moneths of March, April, and May, cold and dry, but on Whitsunday great raine, and high waters, the like of long time had not beene seene: the moneths of June, and July, hot and dry for the most part, thus much for weathering.

Shippe prepared to the Seas to bin trayned by the Seamen for the Queene.

This yeere in the moneth of August, the beginning thereof, politickly preuenting danger feared to happen, by occasion of some preparation of shipping to haue beene made in Spaine (as was pretended) to the annoyance of this our estate. The honourable Charles Howard Earle of Nottingham, Lord high Admirall of England, was by her Maiestie made Lieutenant Generall of all England, as well by Sea, as by land, &c. The Citizens of London were charged with the furnishing and setting forth to Sea, of twelue shippes, since increased to fifteene: Also with fiue thousand men, and furniture for the warres, which men with all speed were made in a readinesse: three thousand of them dayly trayned in the field vnder Captaines, Citizens of the same Citie, from the first of August, &c. The other three thousand appointed to attend vpon her Maiesties Royall person, were also likewise trayned vnder Captaines, in braue furniture, for they were householders of good accompt, all which charges was partly borne by themselues; the residue performed by subsidies leuied of the Citizens. Vpon commandement from her Maiesty, the chaines were dayly vnbarred in the streets and lanes of the Citie, and Lanthornes with lights of candles hanged out at euery mans doore, there to burne all night and so from night to night, vpon paine of death, and great watches kept in the streetes, which hanging out of lights so continued some fourteene nights or better.

Horsemen and footmen trayned in the Shires & mustered in London.

In this meane space, many thousandes of horsemen and footmen, chosen persons, well appointed for the warres, trayned vp in Armour, mour with braue liueries, vnder valiant Captaines, in diuers Shires, were brought vp to London, where they were lodged in the suburbes, Townes and villages neere adioyning: from the 8. of August, til the twentieth day: and twentieth; in which time the horsemen were shewen in Saint Iames field, the footmen trayned in other grounds about the City, and then all discharged homewards, with charge to bee alwayes ready at one houres warning. And so it followed that on the fine and twentieth of August, being Saturday at night, postes were sent after them, to recall the horsemen, presently to returne to London with all speede possible: which charge they prepared to performe. But on Sunday following, the sayde postes, were likewise sent to stay them at home, or to returne them backe, whose forewardnesse in seruice of her Maiestie was such, as the like hath not beene seene or heard of, towards any Prince of this Realme, or other, for the great happinesse and comfort of her Maiestie, whom God hath blessed with so dutifull, louing and obedient Subiects.

The Earle of Essex being thus restrayned, the Queene and Councell warily foreseeing the imminent danger of those desperate Irish Rebels, whose strength and fury would instantly increase to the vtter ruine of that Kingdome, if present preuention were not had; And thereupon they made choice of Charles Blunt Lord Mountioy being also of a milde disposition, and very gracious with the Peeres and common people, which the said Lord Mountioy set forward from London for the Irish expedition the seuenth of February next following, hauing sent many companies of Souldiers before him from London, and diuers Shires, being in all points very honourably accompanied and attended: thought not in such magnificence as was the Earle of Essex, Sir George Carew Knight Lieutenant of the Ordinance in England, was sent into Ireland with the Lord Mountioy, to bee Lord President of Mounster, and they embarked in one ship at Beaumaris in Anglesie, and landed at Dublin in Ireland.

The Lord Mountioy goeth into Ireland.

On the 26. of August being Sunday, before six of the clocke in the morning, by commandement from her Maiestie, the 3000. Souldiers trayned by the Citizens, were all in Armour in the streetes, attending on their Captaines, till past 7. of the clocke, at which time being throughly wet by a great showre of raine, they were sent home againe for that day.

On the next morrow being the 27. the other thirty thousand Citizens, houlders, and substance men, viewed on the Piles end, where they trayned all that day, and other dayes vnder their Captaines, also Citizens, vntill the 4. of September, and so ceased their training for that time, and what other had beene feared (a thing vnknowne to the Communaltie) and peace within this Realme hath since followed, which God long time continue and increase among vs.

The Earle of Essex returneth out of Ireland.

The Earle of Essex had made speciall choyce, of all the nobilitie, as well for his Martiall experience, and generall loue of all sorts of people as other wise most fit for that speciall employment, was as afore sayd sent by her Maiestie into Irelande in March last, to suppresse the strong Rebell Hugh Tyrone, whose faction at that time had almost ouer-run the whole land, and the sayd Earle of Essex hauing spent all that summer in suppressing and preuenting many Practises and Attempts of the sayd Tyrone, and being incensed by some of his vnduteful friends concerning many matters in England, whose instigations were strongly seconded by the opinion of diuers about him, besides his owne particular Iealousie, that during his absence, her Maiesties wonted kindnesse, and Princely Graces were many wayes declined, his friends discountenanced, and his hope of further preferment frustrated, for redresse whereof hee was much perplexed, and after diuers consultations with his sure friends, who dissuaded him from attempting any violent course, because the Earle meant to returne into England with three thousand choyce Souldiers and competent Leaders: making no doubt to haue friendes inough at his Arryuall for Corroboration of his plots laid against all common encounters, but when he to present well perceiued it would proue a dangerous him, disturbance of the estate, hee enclined to the aduice of Sir Christopher Blunt, and his priuate, came to the Court at Nonsuch the twentie eight of September, 1599. where hee prostrated himselfe before the Queene: who gaue him good wordes, and layd, he was welcome: and willed him to goe to his lodging, and rest him after so weary a iourney: the second of October hee was committed to the custody of the Lord Keeper. It snowed on the fourth of Aprill, which whole moneth following, with also the moneth of May was cold and dry, frosts every morning (except some three dayes little raine) which coldnes of the spring, and drinesse of the ground, made men doubtfull of any good haruest to succeede, whereupon, and by meanes of some late transporting ouer the seas, procured by the Iustices of the shires, but more by vnconscionable Farmers, hoording vp their corne, badgers, and other corne-mongers, keeping the same from the Markets, or exacting what price they listed, euen vpon a sodaine, namely, Wheate was raised from 3.s.6.d. to six, seuen, and eight shillings the bushell, still increasing their price. Vntill the Queene published by Proclamation that her Maiesty had not only recommended precisely to her Councell, & other principall ministers, that all manner of graine might be kept within the Realme, but likewise directed them to punish such ingrossers, and forestallers of corne, as by greedinesse laboured to racke things vp to vnreasonable prices. &c.

Vpon Wednesday the 16. of June, in the County of Norfolke, at a Towne called Ryxle, and other townes adioyning, a great tempest of haile, most of the stones as great as Walnuts, to bee taken by the fryday following by handfulls, wasted to the bignesse of hazell nuts, many of the stones the length of a mans finger, bent and rugged, the force of the fall of them was so great, that they brake the glasse Windowes of houses, beate downe the leaues of trees, store downe the weate, and hempe to a very great quantity. &c.

Conspiracy against the King of Scots.

Tuesday the 5. of August, Charles Iames King of Scots in Scotland, escaped a strange and strong conspiracy, practised by the Earle Govvry and his brother, as at large appeareth in a booke thereof extant, first published and printed in Scotland, and since in England.

Weames for an intreatie of peace to be had.

A peace being concluded at Verain in France, in the yeere 1598. betweene Henry the fourth, King of France and Nauarre, and Philip the second, King of Spaine: the Queenes Maiestie of England was likewise united by the French King, her Confederate and Allie, to dispose her selfe vnto a like treaty of Amitie with Spaine. To the effecting whereof, he had procured the consent of the King of Spain then liuing. After whose decease, Philip the third, succeeding his father in the Crowne, the same was againe renued and solicited by Andreas of Austria, the Gouernour of the Low Countries, and the Bishop of Constance, both for the house of Burgundy, and the Kingdome of Spayne, afterwards ratified by the Archduke Albert returned out of Spaine with the Infanta his wife. Vpon which former poynts made vnto her Maiestie, she was at the length induced, to condescend vnto a treaty of peace at Bologne in France, a place chosen by mutuall agreement on either side, with the assent and good liking of the French King: whither both Princes sent their Ambassadors, furnished with ample power and authoritie in that behalfe, where the English Ambassadors arriued the 16. day of May, in this present yeere of our Lord God, 1600. being the day prefixed for this assembly, and the Spanish the 17. of the same moneth. The Commissioners on the English side were these: Sir Henry Nevill Knight, her Maiesties ordinary Ambassador resident with the French King, Iohn Harbert Esquire, her Maiesties second Secretary of Estate, Robert Beale Esquire her Maiesties Secretary in the North parts, and Thomas Edmonds Esquire, her Maiesties Secretary for the French tongue. The Commissioners for Spain, were Baltazar de Caniga and Fonseca, Ambassador resident for the King of Spaine, with the Archduke of Austria in the Low

Commissioners sent ouer to intreat of a peace to be concluded

Low Countries, and Ferdinando Carillo, doctor of the Ciuill law: vnto whom were adioyned on the Archdukes part, Iohn Richardot president of the Councell of the sayd Archduke, and Lewes Verreyken the sayd Archdukes Audiencer. The Commissioners on both sides being viewed and considered of, some question for the precedency and superiority of place fell into disputation and debate, her Maiestie challenging the same as due vnto her before the time of the Emperor Charles (as appeareth by Volateran) in the time of King Henry the seauenth, her Highnesse grand father, when this selfe same difference betweene both these Crowns comming into question, the Pope preferred England, & adiudged vnto this Crowne the most honorable place. But for as much as the same was contradicted by the Spanish commissioners, who not only refused to yeeld precedencie vnto her Maiesty, but also to admit of an equality, or of any other indifferent and middle course, whereby the honour of her Maiesty might bee preserued: the present treatie (which hitherto was performed onely by some priuate visitations and conferences of some one or two of the Commissioners on either side, without comming to any Generall meeting or colloquie) was on the second day of August in the yeere aforesayd for this time delaid, and by mutuall assent of the Commissioners on both sides, according to their seuerall authorities respectiuely granted vnto them in this behalfe, suspended, vntill the end of fiftey dayes following, in which meane while it might be vnderstood what should be the determination of both Princes, for a further proceeding in the sayd colloquie of peace, at some other time and place, whereon as yet no certaine resolution hath beene hitherto taken.

Our Commissioners for peace remain and treat at France.

Ambassadors from Barbary.

The 8. of August, 1600. there arriued at Douer, Mully Hamet Xarife, Secretary & principall Ambassador from Abdola Wayhot Anowne King of Barbary, and with him in Commission two Marchants, to wit, Areathadgel Messy, and Alhadg Hamet Mimon. These with thirteene others by Sir Thomas Gerrard, Knight Marshall, diuers Gentlemen, and the chiefe Barbary Marchants were brought to London the 15. of the same moneth, being carefully prouided and lodged neere the Royall exchange in Alderman Ratcliffes house.

Within fiue dayes after that they deliuered their letters, and had audience, the Court being then at Nonsuch.

The tenth of September, they receiued answere, the Court being then at Dielands.

The seuenteenth of Nouember, being the Queens day, the Queene being then at Whitehall, a speciall place was builded onely for them neere to the parke doore, to behold that dayes triumph.

Notwithstanding all that kindnesse shewed them together with their dyet, and all other prouision for fiue moneths space, wholly at the Queenes charges: yet such was their inueterate hate vnto our Chiistian religion & estate, as they could not endure to giue any manner of almes, charity, or relefe, either in money or broken meate vnto any English poore, but reserued their fragments, and sold the same vnto such poore as would giue most for them. They kild their owne meate within their house, as theepe, lambes, poultrie, and such like, and they turne their faces Eastward when they kill any thing: they vse beades, and pray to Saints: and whereas the chiefe pretence of their Embassy was to require continuance of her Maiesties speciall fauour towards their King, with like entreaty of her Naual ayd, for sundry speciall vses, chiefly to secure his Treasure from the parts of Guynea, &c. yet the English Marchants held it otherwise, by reason that during their halfe yeeres abode in London, they vsed all subtilty and diligence to know the prises, waights, measures, and all kindes of differences of such commodities, as either their Countrie sent hither, or England transported thither: they carried with them all sorts of English waights, measures, and samples, of commodities. And being returned, it was supposed they poysoned their interpreter, being borne in Granado, because he commended the estate and bounty of England, the like violence was thought to be done vnto their reuerend aged pilgrime, lest he also should manifest Englands honor to their disgrace, it was generally iudged by their demeanors that they were rather espials, then honorable Ambassadors, for they omitted nothing that might dammifie the English Marchants.

It was an abhominable vse to them to giue any kind of almes vnto Christians.

This aged pilgrime had bin twice in pilgrimage at Mahomets Tombe, and therfore they highly reuenced him, as they doe all others in like cases.

In the moneth of September, souldiers prest in, and about the City of London, to the number of three hundred and fifty maisterlesse men, vagrant persons: and such like out of other parts of this Realme to be sent into Ireland: diuers of them running from their Captaines and colours, being afterward taken, were hanged for example to other.

Souldiers sent to Ireland.

Ambassadors from the new Emperor of Russia.

The Lord Boris Pheodorowich hauing by many deuices won the peoples hearts. After he had as he supposed made away Demetrius, the immediate heire, vpon the death of Pheodor Vasilouvich, his generall loue and reputation was such among the common people together with all other the principall officers of Estate, which by his meanes onely obtained their preferment, who strongly help together to the discountenancing and displacing the auncient nobility, was by the vyce of his generall faction chosen Emperor of Russia, which after a faint refusall, he accepted. And then with all expedition sent his Ambassadors vnto such Princes as he knew most imminent and propicious for his present fortunes. The 18. of September 1600. his Ambassadour with twenty persons arryued at London. The 14. of October, he had audience, and deliuered his Letters, wherein the new Emperor, otherwise generally, and more truely termed the great Duke, signified his speciall desire of amitie with her Maiestie, with what fauours hee had done and would doe vnto her subiects, confirming their Charter, and admitting them free passage vnder his golden Seale, manifesting therwithall with what agenerall neral consent, or rather compulsion of the whole Nobility and Commons, besides the earnest desire of the reuerend Clergie, and their most holy Patriarch, hee tooke vpon him that dignitie, arrogating vnto himselfe, an hereditary interest vnto the Crown: amongst other things he desired the Queen to send him some men of quality, as Doctors of Physicke, learned men, and skilfull Artificers, into whom he promised kind entertainment, and condigne reward. Concerning the rest of this smooth-face usurping Tyrant, looke in the 3. yeere of King Iames: his Ambassadour was very honorably entertained, feasted, and entreated by the Queene, and as kindly vsed and dieted for 8. moneths space, at the sole charges of the companie of the Muscouie Marchants, and then returned.

Trinitie hospitall in Croidon founded.

This yeere the most reuerend Father John Whitgift, Archbishop of Canterbury, did finish that notable and memorable monument of our time, to wit, his Hospitall of the holy Trinitie in Croyden, in the County of Surry, by him there founded and builded of stone, and bricke, for releefe and sustentation of certaine poore people. As also a faire Schoole-house for the increase of litterature, together with a large dwelling house for the Schoole-master his vse, and these premises he thrugh Gods fauourable assistance in his owne life time performed and perfited, for that (as my selfe haue heard him say) hee would not vse to his executors, a cause of their damnation, remembring the good aduice that the auncient Father hath left written to all posteritie: Tutior via est vt bonum quod quisquis post mortem sperat agi per alios, agat dum vivit ipse per se: It is a way more safe for a man to doe good and charitable deeds by himselfe whilest hee liueth, then to hope that others will doe the same for him after his death.

Gregory.

An. reg. 43.

On Thursday the thirteenth of Nouember, her Maiestie being most honourably attended on, by the Prelates, Nobles, and Iudges of the Realme, was receiued neere vnto Chelsey, by the Lord Maior of London, with his brethren the Aldermen all in Scarlet, besides to the number of 500. Citizens in coats of velues, and chaines of gold, on horseback, euery of them hauing two faire torches to attend on them; And they all waited on her, to her Royall Palace at Westminster.

Tempest.

The first of February in the morning, being Sunday, a great tempest of Wind beyond S. Giles field without London, towardes Tyborne, brake the Wind-mill there, the Miller was throwne one way, another man another way, one towards the North, the other South, a part of the mill-roofe, and halfe the millstone, on the like manner throwne one way, the other halfe another way.

Galleys prepared by the Citizens of London.

The Citizens of London, were by the Queen commaunded, to cause certaine Gallies to bee made and furnished to Sea, towards Charges whereof, three fifteenes were at that time collected of the Citizens.

Muscouites hunted in Marybone Parke.

The third of February, the Ambassadours from the Emperour of Russia, and other the Priuentes, rode through the Citie of London to Marie-bone Parke, and there hunted at their pleasure, and ghostly after returned homeward.

Crosse in Cheape repaired.

The Crosse in West Cheap of London, was by commandement of the Queene, and letters from her Maesties honourable Councell, to sir William Rider, then Lord Maior, partly repaired, the old Crosse on the top being rotten, was taken downe, a new Crosse of tymber guilded, the body of the Crosse downeward, was cleansed of dust, &c.

The comming of the Earle of Essex into London.

Sunday the 8. of February, 1600. the Earle of Essex vpon the aduise of his friends, came to London about ten a clocke, assisted with the chiefe gallants of the time, viz. the Earle of Southampton, Sir Charles Danuers, Sir Christopher Blunt, Robert Caresby, and many others, and as they passed Fleetestreete, cryed, for the Queene, for the Queene, and in other places they sayd, that Cobham and Rawleigh, would haue murdered the Earle of Essex in his bed: the generall multitude being entirely affected to the Earle, sayd, that the Queene, and the Earle were made friends, and that her Maiestie had appointed him to ride in that triumphant manner through London, vnto his house in Seeding lane, and at the way he went, the people cryed, God saue your honour, God blesse your honor, &c.

The Lord Maior being at Paules Crosse, receiued warning from the Councell, to looke to the City, and by 11. of the clocke the gates were shut and strongly guarded.

The Earle kept his course towardes Fan-Church, and entred into maister Thom. Smiths house, Sheriffe of London, where the Earle dranke, in which space the Sheriffe went out at a backe doore vnto the Lord Maior, offering his seruice and requiring direction.

The Earle went into an armorers house, requiring munition, which was denied him: from thence the Earle went to 4 fro, and then came backe to Grace Church streete, by which time the Lord Burghley was come thither, hauing there in the Queenes Name proclaimed the Earle and all his company traytors, as hee had done before in Cheape side.

At hearing whereof, one of the Earles followers shotte a Pistoll at the Lord Burghley, whereupon hee well perceiuing the stout resolution of the Earles followers, together with the peoples great vnwillingnesse, either to appreheud the Earle or ayde him, returned to the Court, assuring the Queene, that notwithstanding the great loue the Londoners bare vnto the Earle, yet they will not ayde him. The Court being now fortified, and double guarded, the streetes in diuers places set full of emptie Carts and Coaches, to stoppe the Earles passage, if hee should attempt to come that way.

Pou are to vnderstand, before that the Earle came foorth of his house, the Queene vpon Iealousie that the Earle intended some practise, by reason that but the night before, being by the Councell required to come to Court, which in plaine

Plaine termes hee refused, sent vnto him the Lord Keeper, the Lord chiefe Iustice, Sir William Knowles, and the Earle of Worcester, not by ming then a Councellor of estate, to conferre with him, whilest some further course might be taken, concerning the Earle, the which said Councellors of estate, being come to Essex house, the Earle entertained them kindly, saying, he was sory he could not stay with them, bcing now a going to take order with the Lord Maior of London, but he would presently returne vnto them, commanding his chiefe seruants to attend, and keepe them safe vntill his returne, hoping to haue found them there when he came backe, and by them to haue made his peace with the Queene, but whilest he was in London, they were enlarged.

The Earle repulsed.

About two of the clocke, the Earle hauing passed to and fro through diuers streetes, and beeing forsaken of diuers his gallant followers, hee resolued to make his merest way home, and comming towardes Ludgate, hee was strongly resisted by diuers companies of well armed men, leuyed, and placed there by the Lord Maior of London, then he retired thence, Sir Christopher Blunt being taken, and sore wounded in the head, from thence the Earle went into Fryday streete, and being spent, desired drinke, which was giuen him, and at his request vnto the Citizens, the great chayne which crosseth the street, was held vp to giue him passage, after that hee tooke Boat at Queenehith, and so came to his house, where mustring the aforenamed Councellors, fortified his house with full purpose to die in his owne defences.

The Earle perceiueth himselfe.

But when he beheld the great Artillery, and the Queenes forces round about the house, being sore vexed with the cryes of Ladies: about ten of the clocke at night, he yalded himselfe vnto the Lord Admiral, earnestly desiring his tryall to be seuere, and honourable, which was performed.

Amongst others his faithfull followers, Captaine Owen Salsbury, seeing all hopes frustrate, stood openly in a Window bare headed, of purple to be slaine, and one in the streete hit him in the toe of his boot, with a Musket Bullet, Oh quoth Salsbury, that thou hadst beene so much my friend, to haue hit but a little lower: shot the next morning of that hurt.

From this time vntill all arraignements, and executions were past, the Citizens were exceedingly troubled, and charged with double watches, and wardings, as well about the Court as the City.

Captain Tho. Lee executed.

The 17. of February, Captain Thomas Lee, was drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, and quartered, being before condemned, for conspiracy against the Queene, about deliuerance of the Earle of Essex out of the Towers: he tooke his death constantly, confessing he had diuers wayes deserued it, but to be innocent of that he was condemned for, &c.

John Pybush executed.

The 18. of February, John Pybushe a Seminary Priest, after 7. yeeres imprisonment in the Kings Bench, was hanged, bowelled, and quartered, at S. Thomas Waterings, for comming into England, contrary to the statute of Anno 27. of the Queene.

The Earles of Essex and Southampton arraigned.

The 19. of February, the Earle of Essex, and the Earle of Southampton were arraigned at Westminster, they were lawfully and seuerally inuited. The cheefe points were for holding of priuate Counsels, conspiring to oppresse the Queene of life and gouernment, for attempting to surprise the person of the Queene at White-hall: the imprisoning of the Lords, which the Queene sent vnto him as his good friends vpon the day of his rising, and his perswading them to stand for him: his warlike entrance into London, and to surprise the Tower: vnto all which they pleaded not guiltie, and very willingly submitted themselues to be tryed by their Peeres. Their tryers were twenty seuen in number, viz. 8. Earles, one Viscount, and 15. Barons: there were present diuers others of right honorable name and quality, besides the reuerend Iudges of the Law; at this arraignement the Lord Buckhurst, Lord high Treasurer of England, was then Lord Steward. The prisoners were found guiltie, and the sentence of death was pronounced against them. This arraignement begun about nine a clocke in the morning, and continued vntill neere at night, where there there was a world of people pressing to see the event. The prisoners demeaned themselues very temperately, and discreetly, and gaue the Queene and the Lords most humble and hearty thankes for so speedy and honorable a tryall.

The newes of all this dayes businesse, was soudainly diuulged throughout London, where at many for ioyfull their suppers, and ran hastily into the streets to see the Earle of Essex, as he returned to the Tower, who went a swift pace, bending his face towards the earth, and would not looke vpon any of them, though some spake directly to him, concerning which, with other passages, and the Earles obiections and answeres, &c. I haue written a more large discourse, according to the generall expectation, whereunto, by multitudes I haue beene instantly prayed, but for diuers reasons it must bee omitted at this time, therefore let this suffice without taring.

Earle of Essex executed.

The 25. of February, being Ashwednesday, about 8. of the clocke in the morning, was the sentence of death executed vpon Robert Deuereux Earle of Essex, within the Tower of London, where a scaffold being set vp in the court, and a some neere vnto the place, whereon sat the Earles of Cumberland, and Hartford, the Lord Vice-count Bindon, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Darcy, & the Lord Crompton: The Lieutenant with some 18. Partizans of the guard was sent for the prisoner, who came in a Gowne of wrought Velues, a blacke Sattin iute, a Felt hat blacke, and a little Ruffe about his necke, accompanied from his chamber with three Diuines, Doctor Montford, Doctor Barlow, and Master Albon his Chaplaine: them hee had requested not to part from him, but but obserue him, and recall him, if either his eye, countenance, or speech, should bewray any thing which might not beseeme him for that time: All the way hee behaued the Preacher to pray for him, and so arriuing on the Scaffold, he vayled his hat, and with obeysance vnto the Lords, to his estate he spake, viz.

His confession.

My Lords, and you my Christian brethren, who are to be witnesses of this my last punishment, I confesse to the glory of God, that I am a most wretched sinner, and that my sins are more in number then the haires of my head; I confesse that I haue bestowed my youth in wantonnesse, lust, and vnchastnesse; that I haue beene puffed vp with pride, vanitie, and loue of this worlds pleasures, and that notwithstanding diuers good motions inspired into me from the Spirit of God: The good which I would, I haue not done, and the euill which I would not, that haue I done. For all which I humbly beseech my Sauiour Christ, to bee a mediatour to the eternall Maiestie for my pardon especially for this my last and this great, this bloody, this crying, this inuterate sinne, whereby so many haue for loue to mee beene drawne to offend God, to offend their Soueraigne, to offend the world: I beseech God to forgiue it vs, and to forgiue it me, most wretched of all. I beseech her Maiestie, and the Estate, and ministers thereof, to forgiue it vs, and I beseech God to send her Maiestie a prosperous raigne, and a long, if it be his will: My Lords grant her a safe and vnderstanding heart: And God blesse her, and the Nobles, and the Ministers of the Church and State. And I beseech you and the world, to hold a charitable opinion of mee, for my intention toward her Maiestie, whose death I protest I neuer meant, nor violence towards her person: I neuer wisht, I thanke God Almighty, nor beleeuing the words and Scriptures: neither Papist, trusting in mine owne merits, but hope for saluation from God, onely by the mercy and merites of my Sauiour Christ Iesus. This faith was I brought by in, and herein I am now ready to die: beseeching you all to ioyne your soules with mine in prayer, that my soule may be lifted vp by faith aboue all earthly things in my prayers. For now I will giue my selfe to my priuate prayer: yet for that I beseech you to ioyne with mee, I will speake that you may heare me. And here as he turned himselfe aside to put off his Gowne, Doctor Montford desired him to remember to pray to God to forgiue all his enemies, if he had any: To whom he answered, I thanke you for it: and so turned himselfe against to the Lords and the rest, he said: I desire all the world to forgiue me, euen as I doe freely, and from my heart forgiue all the world. Then putting off his Gowne and Ruffe, and presenting himselfe before the blocke, kneeling downe, hee was by Doctor Barlow encouraged against the feare of death. To whom he answered, That hauing beene diuers times in places of danger, where death was neither so present, nor yet so certaine, he had felt the weaknesse of the flesh, and therefore new in this great conflict, desired God to assist and strengthen him: and so with eyes fixed on heauen, after some passionate prayer, and breathings, he began his Prayer in effect following.

His prayer.

O God, Creator of all things, and iudge of all men, thou hast let mee know by warrant out of thy word, that Satan is then most busie when our ends is nearest, and that Satan being resisted will flee. I humbly beseech thee to assist me in this my last Combat: and seeing thou accepteſt euen of our desires, as of our acts: accept I beseech thee, of my desires to resist him as of true resistance, and perfect, by thy grace, what thou seeſt in my flesh to bee fraile and weake, giue me patience to beare as becometh me, this iust punishment inflicted vpon me by so honourable a tryall: Grant me the inward comfort of thy Spirit: let thy Spirit seale vnto my soule an assurance of thy manifolde Mercies: Lift my soule aboue all earthly cogitations: and when my life and body shall part, Send thy blessed Angels, which may receiue my soule, and conuey it to thy ioyes in Heauen. He was wonderous patient and penitent.

When concluding his prayer for all estates of the Realme, hee shut vp all with the Lords prayer, reiterating this petition: Lord Iesus forgiue vs our trespasses, Lord Iesus receiue my soule: Then desiring to be informed what was fit for him to doe for disposing himselfe fitly for the blocke, the executioner on his knees presented himselfe, asking him forgiuenesse: to whom the Earle sayd, I forgiue thee, thou art welcome into me, thou art the Minister of Iustice. At which time Doctor Montford requested him to rehearse the Creed, which he did, repeating euery Article after the Diuines. So opening and putting of his doublet, he was in a Scarlet Wastcoate, and then ready to lie downe, he sayd he would only stretch foorth his armes, and spread them abroad, for then he was ready: so bowing toward the blocke, the Doctors requested him to say the two first verses of the 51. Psalme, which he did: and then inclining his body, hee sayd: In humility and obedience to thy Commandement, in obedience to thy Ordinance, to thy good pleasure O God, I prostrate my selfe to my deserued punishment: Lord be merciful to thy prostrate seruant so lying flat along on the boordes, and laying downe his head, and fitting it vpon the blocke, stretched out his armes, with these words, which hee was requested to say, Lord into thy hands I commend my spirit. His head was seuered from his body by the Axe, at three strokes, but the first deadly and absolutely deprauing all since, and motion. The hangman was beaten as he returned thence, so that the Sheriffs of London were called to assist and rescue him, from such as would haue murthered him.

The 27. of February, Marke Fokworth, and Thomas Filcock, Seminary Priests, were drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, and quartered, for comming into the Realme contrary to the Statute. Also the same day and in the same place, was hanged a Gentlewoman, called Pikeris Anne Line, a widdow, for relieuing a Priest contrary to the same Statute.

A Gentlewoman hanged.

One hanged for libelling.

The last of February, a young man named Woodhouse, was hanged in Smithfield, for speaking and libelling against the Queenes Proclamation, and apprehending of the Earle of Essex.

Ambassadors from Scotland.

The 5. of March, the Earle of Marre, the Lord of Knowtors, Ambassadors, and others in Commission out of Scotland, came to London, and were lodged by the Exchange, in the house of Anthony Radcliffe late Alderman.

Merike and Cuffe executed.

The 13. of March, Sir Gilley Merike Knight, and Henry Cuffe Gentleman, were drawne to Tyborne, the one from the Tower, the other from Newgate, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered, as being actors with the late Earle of Essex. They both died very resolutely.

The speeches of Sir Charles Danuers and Sir Christopher Blunt at the time of their execution.

Sir Charles Danuers the 18. of March, 1600 being brought from the Tower vnto the new built scaffold vpon Tower hill, ascended the place wonderous cheerefully, and after a while, when hee had saluted many of his friendes, namely, amongst others, Sir Henry Carew, vnto whom he vsed some speech, but vnderstanding that the Lord Gray was there on horseback neere the scaffold, and hauing saluted him, sayd, I haue already spoken something vnto Sir Henry Carew, concerning your Lordship, which I prayed him to tell you: but seeing your Lordship present, I will tell it you my selfe, speaking to this effect: my Lord Gray, I am perswaded that your Lordship since the quarrell betweene you and my Lord of Southampton, thought me to haue borne you great malice, I must confesse you had some cause to thinke so, and yet I protest the ill will I bare you, proceeded not out of any cause giuen me by your Lordship, for any thing that concerned my selfe, for you neuer iniured mee, it was onely my loue to my Lord of Southampton, to whom I acknowledge my selfe so much beholding, as to no man I could beare more, and this it was which drew me into that cause against you: indeed I knew that my Lord of Southampton accounted of you, as of one by whom hee held himselfe to bee iniured, and that was cause enough for mee not to loue you as you otherwise deserued. And my Lord I must confesse, that I had alwayes more reason to loue my Lord of Southampton, then I had to loue your Lordship, and both your loues I could not retaine, as the case stood betweene you: But howsoeuer, I doe now very heartily and humbly beseech your Lordship to forgiue me: Then the Lord Gray said, I do forgiue you with all my heart, and intreat you that it may not trouble you at this time, but to proceede in what you haue else to say. Then Sir Charles sayd, I am come hither to pay a double debt, one to nature, which is my death, the other to law, which is the forme of my death, and though in the eye of the Law, I am iustly condemned, yet in my owne conscience, which is onely knowne to Almighty God, of whose power any iustice I am not ignorant, and in whose presence I now speake, I am cleare of any intent of violence to be offered to her Maiesties person, or harme to my Country, which I haue euer held deere. Then he pawsed a while as not knowing what to say next, which hee did diuers times, and after that began againe saying, that since his imprisonment, it hadde pleased God to touch his heart, and to let him know the grieuousnesse of his sinnes, especially this great offence against God, her Maiestie and his Country, and to giue him a repentant and sorrowfull heart, most humbly craning pardon of Almighty God for all his sinnes, and pardon of the Queene for this offence, and most humbly and heartily thanked the Maiestie of God for the affiance which he had giuen him of his saluation in Iesus Christ, by the merites of whose death and passion all his sins were pardoned, in which faith he prayed and dyed constantly. These and many other such Christian speeches he vsed, which gaue full satisfaction to the auditory of his penitence and Christian piety. And hauing prayed for the preseruation of his Prince and Country, from danger of all forreyne and domestique enemies. When the Sheriffe commanded him to bee short, hauing vsed the like words diuers times before, saying, time was farre spent, well quoth hee, I haue but this to say: That I forgiue all the world, and pray you all to forgiue me. There are many of my friendes, to whom I am much bound for very great kindnesses, if I had liued, I would by Gods grace haue made requitall, and now I desire them to accept my good will and thankes, and amongst the rest I hold my selfe very much beholding to my Lord Burley, and desire that my thankefull minde may bee made knowne vnto him, with my humble commendations, and to will that those of my kindred and posterity would acknowledge it and requit it as farre as they may: and therewith taking his leaue of his friends, namely of the Lord Gray, to whom hee most bent his speech, hauing put off his Gowne and Doublet in milk cheerefull manner, rather like a Bridegroome, then a prisoner appointed for death, prayed very deuoutly, kneeling before the blocke, expressing all signes of true deuotion, his prayer ended, vpon the sudden, as if hee had flowne, thrust his necke vpon the blocke, and whilest he there held it seemed to smile, his head was cut off at one stroke, leauing a little which an officer cut off with his knife. It was obserued as he spake, that although the flesh of his cheekes trembled, yet were al his speeches, lookes, and behauiour such, as gaue the world full satisfaction, that hee dyed religious and resolute, his head and body being drawne aside and couered ouer with strawe, and all signes of any execution beeing cleane removed.

Then Sir Christopher Blunt who abode an houre pale, was brought from the Gate-house in Westminster, and was priuately kept in a house neere the Tower-hill vntill Sir Charles was executed, but knew not so much, and being ascended the scaffold, he was desirous to speake, and vnderstanding that the Lord Gray, and sir Walter Rawleigh, were neare vnto the Scaffold he made a speech vnto them, the summe whereof was in these words saying.

When the Earle of Essex was in Ireland, and had the consent of his secret friends and Councell, to haue returned into England with 3000. of the best souldiers and chiefe Leaders, & by them with other his assured friends which he doubted not to find at his arrivall, to haue made his way to the Queene, to haue redressed all his wrongs, &c. From the which I only disswaded him, shewing him reason and good proofe, that it was too apparent to proue a more bloody course then could bee expressed, wishing him to goe peaceably, and speedily, only with two or three of his friends and knele before the Queene, the which hee did as you all knowe, and what became of it you all saw. And now lastly, when my Lord tolde mee my former Counsell had preuented him of his brauenes, and that hee was resolued to take his course as he did, I then answered, I would not crosse his purpose any more, and so came with him into London, being very glad that God preuented our determinations, for that I now see it would haue proued farre more dangerous and bloody then at first could haue beene discerned, &c. after that he asked forgiuenesse of God and the Queene, and of the Lord Gray, Sir Walter Rawleigh, and of all others, desiring the world to witnesse hee dyed a Catholique: then prayed kneeling, which done fitted his head to the blocke, and received the stroke of death.

The Queene Progresseth into Hamphire.

The sayd 21. of September, the Queene in her Progresse entred into Hamphire, and vpon Ch. Ichester heath was receiued by the Shrieffe of that shire, Francis Palmes, accompanied by many Gentlemen of accompt in the same shire, so that her Maiestie sayd she was neuer so honorably receiued into any shire, for as Hamphire is a Country pleasant of soile, & full of delights for Princes of this land, who often make their Progresses thither, so it is well inhabited by auncient Gentlemen, cuillly educated, and who liue in great amity together. Her Maiestie was that night attended on to Basing, a house of the Lord Parquesses, where thee tooke such great content, alwell with the seat of the house, as honourable carriage of the worthy Lady Lucie, Marquesse of Winchester, that thee stayed there thirteene dayes, to the great charge of the sayd Lord Marquesse. The fourth day after the Queene comming to Basing, the sayd Shrieffe was commanded to attend the Duke of Biron at his comming into that Country: where vpon the next day being the tenth of September, he went towardes Black water, being the vttermost confines of that shire, towards London, and there met the sayd Duke, accompanied with a bone 20. of the Nobility of France, and attended on with about 400. Frenchmen, who were met by George Earle of Cumberland, and by him conducted from London into Hamshire. The sayd Duke was that night brought to the Vine, a faire and large house of the Lord Sands which house was furnished with hangings and plate, from the Tower, and Hampton-Court, and with seuen score beds, and furniture which the willing and obedient people of the Country of Southampton vpon two dayes warning had brought in thither to lend the Queene. The Duke abode there 4. or 5 dayes, all at the Queenes charges, and spent her more at the Vine, then her owne Court for that time spent at Basing. During her abode there, her Maiestie went to him to the Vine, and he to her to Basen, and one day he attended her at Basen-parke on hunting, where the Duke stayed her comming, and did there as her in such Royalty, and so attended by the Nobility, so coftly furnished, and mounted, as the like had seldome bin seene: but when she came to the place where the Duke staied, the sayd Shrieffe (as the maner is being bare headed, and riding next before her, stayed his horse, thinking the Queene would then haue saluted the Duke, wherat the Queen being much offended, commanded the shrieffe to goe on: the Duke following her very humbly bowing low towards his horse mane, with his cap off, about 20. yards, her Maiesty on the sudden tooke of her maske, looked backe vpon him, and most graciously and courteously saluted him, as holding it not beseeming so mighty a Prince as shee was and who so well knew all Kingly Maiestie, to make her stay directly against a lubiect, before he had shewen his obedience in following after her. She tarried at Basen 13 dayes as is aforesayd, being very well contented with all things there done: affirming she had done that in Hamshire that none of her ancestors euer did, neither that any Prince of Christendome could do: that shee had in her Progresse, in her subiects houses entertained a royall Embassador, and had royally entertained him. At her departure from Basen being the eighteenth of September, she made ten Knights (hauing none) in all her raigne made at one time so many before) whose names were, Sir Edward Cicell, second sonne to the Lord Burley: Sir Edward Hyngerford, next heyre to the Lord Hyngerford: Sir Edward Bainton of Willtshire, Sir W. Ingefild, sir Care Rawleigh, Sir Francis Palmes, then Shrieffe of the shire: Sir Beniamin Tichborne: sir Hamden Paulet: Sir Rich. Norton of Hampshire: Sir Francis Stoner of Oxfordshire: and Sir Edmond Lutcovv of Willtshire. That day shee went from Basen toward Farnham, a Castle belonging to the See of Winchester, and in her way to Farnham, she knighted Sir Richard White in his owne house, hauing feasted her and her traine very Royally, neere vnto which towne the Shrieffe of Hamphire tooke his leaue and the Shrieffe of Surrey met her: but the Shrieffe of Hamphire, and the Gentlemen of that Country went to Farnham by command, and there attended the next day, where they were feasted and kindly entertained, by the learned Prelate Doctor Bilton Bishop of Winchester, vpon whose onely commendation, two ancient and worthy Gentlemen of Hamshire, sir Rich. Mill, and Sir William Vdall, received there the dignity of Knighthood. And thus much for that progresse to be noted.

Victories in Ireland.

Of the late long warres in Ireland vnder the Earle of Essex, and then the Lord Mountioy, Generalls, haue I hitherto received small intelligence, worth the noting and therefore in this place, I thinke good to set downe the copie of a letter from a souldier of good place in Ireland to his friend in London, touching the notable victory of her Maiesties forces there, against the Spaniards, and Irish rebels, and of the yeelding vp of Kynsale, and other places there held by the Spanyards, dedicated to Sir W.D. Knight.

Sir, in my last of the 19. of December, I wrote to you at large of the arriuall of the new supplie of Spaniards at Castle-hauen, Baltymore and Berehauen, and of their intents and beginnings to fortifie, in all those three important places. Likewise that Sr Richard Leuison towing out of Kynsale hauen against wind and weather, fought with them within Castle hauen most valiantly, and of their shippes being fire, smoke and made vnseruiceable flue: the men being most landed before he could come to them, by reason of the weather, and beating vpon him very daungerously from the land with their ordinance. That they were sayd to bee two thousand in number, with great store of ordinance and munition, and that as they reported, some thousands moe were comming after. That a great part of the Irishry of Munster becommen Rebels of new, were reuolted to them, and receiued into the King of Spaines pay. That Odonell with good forces of horse and foote out of the North, by the benefite of the then extreame and sudden frost, gat passage almost vnlooked for by him else, and slipping by the Lord President of Munster (who was sent to impeach him) with such forces as could be spared from the Army, was ioyned with them. That Tyrone with Orourcke, Redman Bourke, Mac Guyre, Mac Mahone, Randall Mac Surley, Oconor, Slygoes brother, Tyrell the Barron of Lixenho, and the rest of the old fugitiue Rebells of Munster, with the greatest and choicest force that was euer amassed in Ireland, were drawne neere our Campe. And that these all together with sir ensignes of those newly arriued Spaniards, in all to the number of 6000. foote, and 500. horse, by Powle, were on foote ready to march towardes Kynsale and our Campe, with intent and most assured confident hope, with helpe of them in the Towne, which should haue sallyed out on the Campe, vpon the attempt of Tyrone and Odonell, and were aboue 2000. Spaniards, almost all olde Souldiers, aswell to releeue and rescue the Towne, as to remoue our siege, and vtterly to breake, dishonour, and defeate vs. And truely Sir, when I did then consider, on the one side this great strength, the newly ioyned men and horses to bee all fresh, bigorous, and strong, hauing all the Country open to them, abounding with victualls, forrages, armies, munition, and all furnitures: those in the Towne, the most of them experienced Souldiers, well armed, and in no such want as was supposed: On the other side, our men in numbers scant equall to them, all almost tyred and wearied out with the misery of a long Winters siege, our horses decayed, leane and very weake, our best meanes of victualls and forrage likely to bee cut from vs, with many other impediments whereof I speake not; When I say, I well waged and pondred with my selfe these points, and layed together withall, this one of great importance, that when we should bee forced (as it was likely) to answere three forces at once, one from the Towne, another without, a great part of our men were like enough to thinke, or at least not to sticke firmely to vs, (which by good coniectures I could make probable to you,) Blame me not if vpon these considerations I wrote to you then somewhat distrustfully of our estate, as touching indeed our liues and honours, this seruice, and by consequence this whole Country likely to bee put to an vnequall iumpe. And so I may well say they were, although by the goodnesse of God especially, and by the most vigilant circumspection and valiant prowesse of our worthy Generall, thinges out of these difficulties, haue now fozed to so happy successe, as by that which followeth you shall sufficiently perceiue. To continue therefore my accustomed relation to you, and to begin from that sayd day of the 19. of December. It may please you to know, that on the Sunday the 20. we still plying our attempts to the Towne, with face and shew as though wee nothing cared for Tyrone and his company, at night certaine intelligence was brought vs, that hee would bee the next night within a mile and a halfe of vs, with all the aboue recited forces. And accordingly vpon Munday the twenty one towardes night, hee shewed himselfe with most part of his horse & foote on a hill betweene our Campe and Corke, a myle off vs. At which time seeing two Regiments of our foote, and some horse drawne out of our Campe, and making a resolute march towardes him, hee fell backe to the other side of the hill, where he encamped that night, strengthened with a fastnesse of Wood, and Water. Whereby though his retire might bee imputed to some touch of credite, yet had he this aduauntage, that hee might keepe from our Army, all passages and meanes of forrage; The other side ouer the Riuer of Ovvnibuoye being wholly at his disposition, by reason of the generall reuolt of those parts.

On Tuesday the 22. some of Tyrones horse and foote made show againe in the place where they had done the day before, and that night were some of their horse and 500. foot discouered, searching if they might finde fit way to the Towne.

On wednesday the 23. aswell by intelligences otherwise as by letters of Don Iohn d'Aquila, Generall of the Spaniardes, and Captaines of the Towne newly intercepted, wee found that hee had importuned Tyrone and his company very much, to giue an attempt vpon our Campe; intimating vnto them his owne necessity, and likelihood to bee shortly forced within the towne, their faithfull promises to succour him, the facility and vndoubted successe of the enterprize, he assuring them, that our numbers could not be but much lessened, and those that were remaining, greatly decayed and weakened with the long Winter siege, so that it was not possible wee should be able to maintaine so much ground as wee had taken when our strength was full, if they on the one side, and he on the other, put vs well to it: which he for his part promised them assuredly to doe very soundly from the Towne, whensoeuer they should thinke fit to doe the like from their Campe. And it seemeth that vpon this aduise they tooke their determinate resolution for this course, and to put it in execution with all speed, either that night or the next at the furthest. Those of the Towne in the meane time gaue vs alarums, made Sallies, and did by all meanes what they could to keepe our men in continuall trauell, that they might be the lesse able for resistance when this attempt should come to bee performed. The Lord Deputy till now applyed himselfe in show wholly towards the Towne, but indeede not meaning any forceable effectuall attempt vpon it, till hee saw what would become of Tyrone and his forces: And therefore had an especiall eye, by continuall espiall, vpon his mouings, and least suddaine hurt should bee taken from him, or the Towne, if both he without, and they within should inuade at once, hee made Fozes and Barracadoes, heightned the ditches, depened the Trenches, stopped and strengthened all the Auenues to the Towne, had the whole army in a readinesse vpon euery suddaine warning, and kept strong and watchfull guards alwayes in all places. And now late in the night of this Weeke day, the three and twentieth day, being assuredly enformed of their intent of attempt vpon his Campe that night, or the morrow after, his Lordship gaue order to strengthen the ordinary guardes, and to put the rest of his Army in readinesse, but not as yet into Armes: commanding that the Regiment volant, which was a squadron of eight Companies of foote, selected out of all the old bands conducted by Sir Henry Poore, and appointed to bee alwayes in a readinesse to answere all Alarumes, and therefore exempted from all other duties, should drawe out beyonde the West part of the Campe, and there stand in Armes, not farre from the maine guard of Horse.

A little before the breake of day, Sir Richard Greame, who had the guard of horse that night, sent the Lord Deputy word, that the scoutes had discouered the rebels matches in great numbers, whereupon his Lordship caused the Army presently to arme, and 300. choyce men to bee drawne out of the quarter, where the Earle of Thomond and three other Regiments lay, to make stand betweene that quarter and the Fozt vpon the West-hill, himselfe with Sir George Carew, Lord President of Munster, Sir Richard Wingfield, Marshall of Ireland, aduanced forward towards the scout, and hauing giuen order to Sir Henry Dauers Lieutenant Generall of the horse, for the ordering of those troupes, sent the Marshall, to take view of the enemy, who sent word hee was aduanced horse and foote, neere the toppe of the hill, where the Earle of Thomond first quartered, within lesse then 2. Musket shot of the towne. Whereupon the Lord Deputie calling to him, Sir Oliver Lambert Gouerno; of Connaught, who beeing there without charge, was commanded to attend his Lordship that day, made choice of a peece of ground betweene that and the Towne, of good aduantage, both to embattell, and fight, as hauing on the backe a trench drawne from the Earle of Thomonds quarter, and so secured from the Towne: And on the front, a boggish glyn pallable with horse onely at one foord: The ground whereon the enemie must haue drawne in grosse to fozce the passage flanckered from the Earles quarter by the Cannon, and situate in the midst of all our fozces, and returned word to the Marshall, that in that place hee was resolued to giue the enemy battell, if he came fozward: commaunding further the Regiment of Sir H. Folyat and three olde companies of the Regiment of Sir Oliver Saint-Iohn, to bee brought thither, the rest of the Armie being already in Armes, together with 500. Sea-men, brought by Sir Richard Leueson to attend, when, and what, he should command.

But Tirone, whose meaning ouer night, was to haue beene with vs before day, and as we since learned, to haue put all the Spaniards into the Towne, with eight hundred of the best Irish vnder Tirril, seeing it now faire day light, and discouering the Marshall and Sir Henry Dauers to bee aduanced with all the horse, & Sir Henry Poore with his Regiment, stopt at the foote of the hill, and anon, thinking it to be no nay for him, retired the troupes hee had aduanced againe, to the bodie of his Army beyond the Fozd. Presently the Marshall sent the Lord Deputy word, that the enemie retired in some disorder, whereupon his Lordship commanding the foremanned troupes to follow him with all speed, aduanced himselfe into the head of all, to see with his owne eye, the manner of the enemies, & in what fozt there vpon he might determine to proceede. But before he could either well view, or direct, a violent showre, during some quarter of an houre, gaue the enemie opportunity, not yet perfectly discouered, to draw off ouer a plaine, in three great bodies of foote, all their horse in the Rere, and the wings with all their other loose men fallen vp into the head. Which the Lord Deputy, that day now clearing, perceiuing and discouering, by this their disorderly march, that they were in feare, being certified also, that there was not before them any place of so good aduantage to make head on, as those they had passed and quitted, resolued to follow, and to see what profit might bee made of an enemie thus troubledly retiring. Whereupon dispatching presently Sir George Carew, Lord President of Munster, with 3. cozonets of horse, back to the Campe, to attend there against the towne, and whatsoeuer other attempt, became he was to bee the fittest Commaunder in his Lordships absence, and because there had otherwise no horses beene left in the Campe, himselfe having with him, in all, betweene three & foure hundred horse, and under 1200. hundred foote, made after the enemie. And advancing some myle further on, pressed him so hard, that he was forced to stand firme in three bodies upon a ford of a bogge (which bogge to assaile them, we must of necessity passe) and in al apparance with a Resolution there to abide vs and fight. They maintained a good skirmish on our side the bog, with their loose wings, newly drawne out of their bodies, and hurt some of our men and horses, till with our wings they were at length beaten backe.

The Marshall being somewhat advaunced, espied a Foord, a myllket shott off on the left hand, neglected by their foote, and onely guarded by their horse: whereof advertising the Lord Deputy, with desire of leave to force them that way: the Lord Deputy approuving it, and commanding to draw up the foote with all expedition, the first wings of foote once arrived, seconded with Sir Henry Poers Regiment, the Marshall, with the Earle of Clanrickard, who neuer ceased urging to fight, taking with them Sir Richard Greame, and other companies of horse: with them, and those foote, forcing the enemies horse that kept the passage, passed over, and with that advantage, finding themselues side by side with the enemies battell, & further on then their Rere, charged their battell in flanke, but finding them to stand firme, wheeled about. At which the enemies taking courage, drew on their horse, with a cry to a charge, who came on brauely within little or little paces of our horse, and there after their Country fashion stopped, shaking their staues, and raylingly vaunting, but durst charge no further. Which the Lord Deputy seeing, sent presently ouer the Foorde to them his owne Cornet of Horse, vnder Sir William Godolphin, and the Lord Presidents Cornet vnder Captaine Minshow (which two Cornets hee had appointed before, to keepe still a grosse in the Rere, to answere all accidents) together with two of our three bodies of foote vnder Sir John Barkely, Sergeant Maior of the Campe. Whereupon the Marshall and Earle of Clanrickard, seeing a second at hand, vniting themselues with Sir Henry Dauers, hauing with him Captaine Taffe, Captaine Flemming, and other Companies of Horse, charged againe the enemies Horse, who not abiding the shocke fledde. At the sight whereof, the battell dismaying, our men thought it better to charge againe vpon them, then to follow the horse, and so courageously doing, vtterly brake them. The Rere-ward of the enemie, in which was Tirrell, and all the Spaniardes, stood firme vpon the bogge on the right hand, vnto whom, within Caliuer shotte, the Lord Deputy had drawne vp our Rere, which was Sir Oliver Saint-Johns 3. Companies, commaunded by Captaine Roe in absence of Sir Oliver (dispatched few dayes before by the Lord Deputy, and Counsayle, for speciall affaires to her Maiestie) charging him first, not to stirre, till he received direction from him. But seeing Tirrell, and the Spaniardes drawing betweene our horse, being on the execution, and the bodies of our foote, his Lordship hauing hitherto, by direction, let all other mens swords on worke, himselfe now in the head of our said Rere, where he had before resolued to fight, charged the enemie in flancke, and put them to a disorderly retreat after their fellowes to the top of the next hill, where they made a stand a little while. But the Irish quitting the Spaniardes, the Spaniardes in short time were broken by the Lord Deputies Horse, commanded by Sir William Godolphin, and most of them slaine. The vantgard of the enemie, with all the loose wings, which were many, seeing what happened, threw away their armes (and all our men being otherwise busie) escaped. The chiefe Commaunder of the Spaniardes, Don Alonso d'Ocampo, was taken Prisoner, with three Captaines, five Alferres, and fortie souldiers. Tyrone and Odonell, with the rest of the Irish Lords, ranne apace, and saued themselues. Those of the battell were almost all slayne, and there were (of the Irish Rebelles onely) found dead in the place, about twelue hundred bodies, and about eight hundred were hurt, whereof many dyed that night: and the chase continuing almost two myles, was left off, our men being tyred with killing. The Enemie lost two thousand Armes brought to reckoning, besides great numbers imbeseled, all their powder and drummes, and nine ensignes, whereof 6. Spanish. Those of the Irish that were taken prisoners, being brought to the Campe, though they offered ransome, were all hanged. On our side onely one man was slaine, the Cornet of the Sir Ric. Greame. Sir Henry Dauers was hurt with a Sword slightly: Sir William Godolphin a little raced on the thigh with a Halbert, Captaine Crofts, the Scout-maister with a shotte in the backe, and not aboue three more common souldiers hurt. Many of our horses were killed, and moe hurt. And thus were they vtterly ouerthrowne, who but the very night before, were so brauue and confident of their owne good successe, as that they reckoned vs already theirs, and as wee since haue vnderstood, were in contention whose prisoner the Lord Deputy should bee, whose the Lord President, and so of the rest. The Earle of Clanrickard carryed himselfe this day very valiantly, and after the retreate sounded, was knighted by the Lord Deputie, in the field amongst the dead bodies. So did all the rest of the Captaines, Officers, and souldiers, named and vnnamed, and especially the Lord Deputy himselfe, who brake in person, vpon the Rowre of the Army of the Spaniardes, and omitted no dutie of a wise diligent Conductor, and valiant souldier. Vp on the fight ended, he presently called together the Army, and with prayers, gaue God thanks for the victory. A victory indeede giuen by the God of Hostes, and marueilous in our eyes, if all circumstances be duly considered, and of such consequence for the preseruation and assurance to her Maiestie, of this deepely endaungered Kingdome, as I leaue to wiser consideration, contenting my selfe with this, that I see the God of power and might, disposed to protect the iust cause of his seruant our gracious Queen Elizabeth, against the pride, malice, and powerfull disdaine of the greatest Potentates, her enemies, To him be the glory.

After this glorious victory thus valiantly atchieued, the Lord Deputy the same day hasted to his Campe, least any thing (in his absence) might happily haue beene attempted there. But, not finding the enemie to dare any Sally, which indeed had beene but vaine for him, considering the small fruit he reaped by them heretofore, euery one that he made hitherto redounding still to his owne detriment and losse, and euery place of our Camp, at this time, being so well and sufficiently strengthened and prouided for against him, as is sayd before.

The next day his Lordship commaunded Captaine Bodiegh, Trencher-maker Generall of the Campe, who as well in the fight, as in the workes, had deserued speciall commendation, to see the formerly begunne Fort and platformes, to be vndertaken againe, and neerer approaches to be cast out towardes the towne. But after fiue or sixe dayes labour Don John di Aquila, Captaine of the Towne and Forces within, offered a parle, sending the Dymmie-Maior of the Towne, with a sealed Letter to the Lord Deputie, by which he required, that some Gentleman of speciall trust and sufficiency, might be sent into the Towne from his Lordship to conferre with him, whom he would acquaint with such conditions, as hee then stood vpon. His request being assented vnto by his Lordship, Sir Wil. Godolphin was imployed in the negotiation, which was carryed in this sort, word for word, as it is taken out of the originalls here, viz.

Don John told Sir William, that hauing found the Lord Deputy (whom he termed the Viceroy) although a sharpe and powerfull, yet an honorable enemie, and the Irish not onely weake and Barbarous, but (as he feared) perfidious friends, he was so farre in his affections reconciled to the one, & distasted with the other, as did inuite him to make an ouerture of such a composition as might bee safe and profitable for the State of England, with least preiudice to the Crown of Spaine, by deliuering into the Viceroy his power, the Towne of Kynsale, with all other places in Ireland, held by the Spanish, so as they might depart on honorable termes fitting such men of warre, as are not (by necessity) inforced to receiue conditions, but willingly inuoced, for iust respects, to disingage themselues, and to relinquish a people, by whom their King and maker had beene so notoriously abused, (if not betrayed.) That if the Viceroy liked to entertaine further parley touching this point, hee would first bee pleased to vnderstand them rightly, and to make his propositions such as might bee suitable to men thoroughly resolued, rather to bury themselues aliue, and to endure a thousand deaths, then to giue way to one Article of accord, that should taste of basenesse or dishonour, being so confident of their present strength, and the Royall Second of Spaine, that they should make no doubt of yeelding good account of themselues, and their Interest in this Kingdome, but that a iust disdaine, and Splene conceiued against the nation, disswaded them from being further engaged for it, then of force they must. Sir William Godolphin being commanded by the Lord Deputy onely, to receiue Don Johns propositions and demaundes. Hauing made his Lords and Councell this Relation, was by them returned with the answere following. That howbeit the Lord Deputy hauing lately vanquished their succours, did so well vnderstand his owne strength, and their weakenesse, as made him nothing doubt of forcing them within a short time, whom he did know to bee pressed with vnresistable difficulties, how much soeuer they laboured to cover and conceale the same, yet knowing that her sacred Maiestie out of her gracious and mercifull disposition would esteeme the glory of her victory to bee blemished with a voluntary effusion, and an obstinate expence of Christian bloud, was content to entertaine this offer of Agreement, so as it might bee Concluded, vnder such Honourable Articles for her Highnesse as the aduantage that hee had against them, gaue reason to demaund: being the same which are set downe in the Articles following, signed by the Lord Depatie and Don John and others: saying that there was in them besides the leauing of his Creature, munition, Artillery, and the Queenes naturall Subiects to her disposition, all which points he did peremptorily refuse, with constant asseueration that both he, and all his would rather indure the last of misery, then bee found guilty of so foule a treason against the honour of his Prince, and the reputation of his profession, though he should finde himselfe vnable to subsist, much more now, when he might not only hope to sustayne the burden of the warre for a time, but with patience and constancy, in the end to ouercome it. That he tolde it so ill, to be misvnderstood in hauing Articles of that nature propounded vnto him, as were they but once againe remembred in the Capitulation, the Viceroy should from thence foorth vse the aduantage of his sword, and not the benefit of his former offers: adding, that the Viceroy might rather thinke to haue made a good and profitable purchase for the Crowne of England, if with the expence of 200000. Duckets, hee had procured Don John to quit his interest and seating but in Baltimore alone, to say nothing of Kynsale, Castle-hauen, and Beere-hauen: for (sayd he) suppose that all wee with the rest of our places here bodie perished, yet would that Pen-Insula (being strong in it owne nature, bettered by our Art and industry, pro-nided as it is of victualls, munition and good store of Artillery) preserue vnto the King of Spaine, a safe and commodious port for the arriuall of his fleete, and bee able to maintaine it selfe against a land Army of ten thousand, vntill Spaine (being so deepely engaged) did in honor relieue them, which would draw on a more powerfull inuasion then the first, being vndertaken vpon false grounds, at the instance of a base and barbarous people, who in discouering their weaknesse, and want of power, haue armed the King my Master to rely vpon his owne strength, being tyed in honour to relieue his people, that are engaged, and to Cancell the memory of our former disaster.

But thus was spoken (sayd hee) in case the Viceroy were able to force this towne, as I assure my selfe, he cannot, hauing vppon mine honour within these walles at this instant, a bone two thousand fighting men, that are strong and able, besides those which hauing beene sicke and hurt, recouer dayly the greatest part of these, composed of old Souldiers, which fall not by the sword, and those that were new, being now both trayned to their Armes, and growne acquainted with the climate, are more able to endure then at the first: our meanes as good as they haue beene any times these two moneths, such as the Spaniards can well away withall, and thereof to suffice vs for three moneths more. We lodge in good warme houses, haue store of munition, and which is best of all (I hand well assured that our succorers will be hastily here. So be plaine, wee preserue our men, and reserue our strength the best we may, hoping to front you in a breach, which if our hearts faile vs not, wee haue hands and breasts, enough to stopp against treble your forces, though I will giue the Viceroy this right, that his men are passing good, but spent and tyred out with the misery of a Winter siege, which he hath obstinately maintayned beyond my expectation, but with such caution, and vppon so good guarde, as hauing nicely watched all aduantages, I could neuer take a Sallie yet vpon him, but with losse to my selfe: wherein I must acknowledge my hopes deceiued, that grounding on some errour in his approaches, promised my selfe the defeate of at the least a thousand men at one blow. But when we meete on the breach, I am confident in good reason, to lay fiue hundred of your best men on the earth, and reft hopeful that the losse of those will make a great hole in an army, that hath already suffered so much extreamity.

But to conclude our businesse, the King my Master sent me to assist the Condes, Oneale, and Odonnell, presuming on their promise, that I should haue toyned with them within few dayes of the arriuall of his forces. I expected long in vaine, sustained the Viceroyes Army, saw them draw to the greatest head they could possibly make, lodge within two miles of Kinsayle, reinforced with certaine companies of Spaniardes, euery houre promising to relieue vs, and being toyned together to force your Campes, saw them at the last broken with a handfull of men, blowne asunder into diuers parts of the world. Odonnell into Spaine, Oneale to the furthest of the North, so as now, I finde no such Condes in rerum natura (for those were the very wordes he vsed) as I came to toyne withall, and therefore haue moued this accord, the rather to dis-engage the King my Master, from assisting a people so vnable in themselues, that the whole burden of the war must lye vpon him, and so perfidious as perhaps might bee induced in acquitall of his fauour, at least to betray him. Vpon relation made by Sir William Godolphin, to the Lord Deputy and Councell, of these offers of Don John, which at seuerall conferences had beene brought to such heads, as are spoken of before, it was thought good, for diuers important reasons, to proceede roundly to the agreement. For whereas in the propositions by him made there was not any thing that admitted exceptions on our part, but onely that he required to carry with him his ordinance, munition, and treasure, that being no way preiudicial to the maine scope or drift of our Treaty, which chiefly respected the common good and safety of the kingdome, deserued not almost to bee thought vpon. Besides that, the Treasure being at the first but a hundred thousand Duckets, with foure moneths payment of so many men, and other necessary deductions, could not but be very neere wasted: and that little remainder, more fit for a prey to the poore Souldiour, after his tedious trauell, then for a clause in the composition. Furthermore how needfull it was to embrace this accord, may clerely bee seene by whosoeuer considereth the state of our Army, almost vtterly tired: how full of danger and difficulty it was to attempt a Breach, defended by so many hands: how long time it might haue cost vs, if wee had lodged in the Breach, before wee could haue carried the towne, it being full of strong Castles: how her Maiesties ships and others lying in the harbor, should haue beene forced speedily to forsake vs for want of victuals: how by a long contrariety of winds, our selues were not prouided for aboue fiue dayes, at the time of this parley, though within few dayes after good store arrued: it being indeede worthy of obseruation, that by her Maiesties great care, and the diligence of her Ministers, so good prouidence was vsed, as though this discent of Spaniardes drew into that Quarter, all the forces, power, and strength of the Kingdome, which could bee spared, all which were only to liue by prouision out of England, notwithstanding all the Difficulties of Transportation, in so vnseasonable a time, no notorious wantes were found in the Army, but that which is inseparable, from a Winter Siege, in that Climate: that wee had neither Munition, nor Artillery left but for one battery, in one place at once, fiue of our pieces being before crazed: and finally, that if we had missed of our purpose, the whole Countrey had beene hazarded. Furthermore, that which seemeth of greatest consequence to induce his Lordshippe to this agreement, was: That the Spaniardes, in Baltymore, Castle-hauen, and Bere-hauen by vertue of this contract, were likewise to surrender those places, and depart the Country, which would haue prooued a matter of more difficultie, and haue drawne on a long warre, in a corrupted Kingdome, to roote them out, being strongly fortified and well stored with victuals, munition and Artillery, for that of necessity the Army for some space, must haue rested, and in the end haue beene constrayned after a new supply of all necessaries, to her Maiesties intollerable charge, to transport themselues thither by Sea, the way by land, being altogether impassable. In which time their succours out of Spaine in all likelyhood, would haue bene come into them: the King being so far engaged in his honour to second his enterprise, and we barred of that prosecution of the Rebels which now by this agreement wee may wholly entend.

The Treaty therefore, was thus concluded as by the Articles ensuing, signed on both parts appeareth.

Mountioy.

In the Towne of Kynsale, in the Kingdome of Ireland, the second day of the moneth of January, 1601. betweene the Noble Lords, the Lord Mountioy, Lord Deputie, and Generall in the Kingdome of Ireland, for her Maiestie the Queene of England, and Don Iohn d'L Aquila Captaine, and Campemaster, Generall and Gouernour of the Army of his Maiestie the King of Spaine, the said Lord Deputie being encamped, and besieging the sayd Towne, and the said Don Iohn within it, for sull respects, and to auoyde shedding of blood, these conditions following were made, betwixt the sayd Lords Generalls, and their Campes, with the Articles that follow.

For the accomplishing whereof, the Lord Deputy offereth to giue safe passport to the said Don Iohn and his army, as well Spaniards as other nations whatsoeuer, that are vnder his commaund, and that he may depart, with all the things he hath, Armes, Munitions, Money, Ensignes displaied, Artillery, and other whatsoeuer prouisions of warr, and any kind of sluffe, aswell that which is in Castle-hauen, as Kynsale, and other places.

I Promise and sweare to accomplish and keepe these Articles of agreement, and promise the same likewise on the behalfe of his Maiestie the Catholique King my Master.

Don Iohn d'l Aquila.

And so is this troubled cloud of most likely perillous daunger for this time dissolued, to her Maiesties most singular renowme: for so much for the glory of the euent, as for her owne Magnanimity and Princely resolution, to leaue nothing vndone which might preserue that Crowne, how deere so euer it cost her, to the great honour of our generall Leaders, and Soudiers by Land and Sea, actors therein, who if it be well considered, that after the enemies arriuall, the 28. of September, it was the 26. of October before they could get all things ready to sit downe neere the Towne, the 19. of October, before their Ordinance could play, and that by the first of Nouember, they had gotten Ricorren Castle. And then the seuenth of Nouember, were driuen likewise to diminish their strength, by sending the Lord President from them with two regiments of foote and 325. horses against Odonell, That he returned not till the 25. of Nouember, his companies were 26. And then that the shippes of Spaine were landed. That the most of our shipping that did vs speciall seruice were gone towardes them: that Odonell was already come: Tyrone shortly after: and the 20. of December all in sight: 24. beaten. That 31. of December, the Parley begun, the second of January the Articles were sworne: the 9. the Towne yeelded, &c.

1602. The 18. of January at night, bonefires were made at London, with ringing and other wise reioycing for the newes out of Ireland, the victory of our English men obtained there as is before declared.

Execution. The 18. of Aprill Peter Bullocke Stationer, and one named Ducket, for printing of Bookes offensiue were hanged at Tyborne.

Seminaries executed. The 20. of Aprill, Stichborne, William Kenton, and Iames Page, Seminary Priests, were drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered, for comming into this Realme, contrary to the Statute of Anno 27. &c.

Soudiers sent into the Low Countries. In the moneth of May, great pressing out of Soudiours was made about London, to be sent into the Low Countries.

A man lost his eares. The twelfth of May, a man was set on the Pillory, and lost one of his eares at Westminster, and the other at Chauncery lanes end, by the new Temple, for giuing false witnesse and false Oathe, in an Indictment against another.

Here followeth a briefe relation of some of the chiefe English soudiers and Sauigators of the Queene Raigne with other things of note.

It is very euident by sacred Scriptures how from time to time the seuerall properties of people, time and State haue beene manifested whose diuine writing thereto that the originall and true purpose of Chronologie was to expresse the continuing goodnesse of Almighty God, from age to age, as documents vnto all posterities, wherein is set downe the rare and excellent gifts wherewith Kings and Kingdoms were endued, honoured, and enriched, and what sorts of people flourished in their dayes, and for strong warrant of what I say, although I might alleadge many places therein, besides diuers other authenticke writers, yet for brieuity I will onely cite the chiefe Iudge of Israell, and the second, and third, Kings after him. Samuell Writeth that in his dayes being about fiue hundred yeeres after their coming out of Egypt, there was not a Smith in all the land of Israell, and thereby a reason for the same; King Dauid diligentlyeth the seuerall qualities of his chiefe men of warre by the name of worthies in sundry degrees and of others that were left handed, and wonderous cunning to throw stones at a haires breadth, and Solomon reporteth the strange aduentures and long voyages of his Subiects, saying that his shippes went foorth and returned not in three yeeres, a matter to be greatly admired considering they wanted the knowledge and frée vse of the Sea compas, from which holy writers derive I my president for that which followeth concerning the daily encrease of arts and Sciences, with a briefe commemoration of the most famous and illustrious English soldiers, serving most vnder forraine Princes in their seuerall occasions, and against the common enemy the Turke, who in their proper valors and high merits haue many wayes dignified their names, and nation, as also the like taste of the most renowned English Nauigation & Nauigators, whose like were neuer since the worlds creation, and by whose tedious voyages, long trauells, and strange discoueries as you may read at large in master Hacklyts worthy worke of the English voyages, they haue not not only acquired great riches to themselues, but brought much more wealth and honour to their Prince and Country, and touching some other matters which happily, thou doest as in reason thou maist expect to follow in this discourse, know, that vnwoorthy I am wanting here, thou shalt finde them plainly set downe in the third yeere of King Iames.

Death and buriall of Sir Iohn Norris. Sir Iohn Norris, second sonne to the Lord Norris, in his youth brought vp in the vniuersity, and in the Court, and being of an excellent wit, and manly courage, he affected Military seruice. Hee at first serued in Ireland, where, amongst other things of worthy note he rescued his eldest brother by fine force from the rebels. After that he serued the States, and in that space, though desert, was made Colonel vpon Lamas day, hee manfully defeated the army of Don Iohn nére Gunt, the memory whereof is registred by diuers Nations, after that was made Generall of the English, and by authority of the Prince of Dzenge, and all the States, had all command in Frizeland, where he was sharply repulsed by Verdugo, in the time of Don Iohn, after that, he did many excellent services and hauing taken yong Monsieur La Nouy prisoner, was by others denied his right, thereupon he appealed for iudgement to Monsieur Lapere, Pensoult Prince all of the French, then at the States sée, who being partiall against him, the next time sir Iohn met him in Antwerpe, in the open Exrate, gaue him the backhand, a little before that, by counsell of Captaine Temple, hee surprised Pecheline, at Utricht, in the time of Duke Francis of Valois, his Soudiers mutined, and hemd him in round, where hee onely with his dagger drawne, accompanied with Sir Francis Vere, and two or three other Gentlemen appeased the mutinie, the States well perceiuing his valour, and resolution, with his opposition to the French, after Mounsire sought to surprise Antwerpe, gaue him fresh power, and command, and for many yeeres after, was knowne by the name of Lord Generall, in the yere 1588. hee was Lieutenant Generall of the greate Campe at Tilbury, the yeere insuing, he was Lord Generall of a mighty Army into Portugall, for the re-establishing of Don Antonio late King of Portugall, hee ayded Henry the fourth, against the Leaguers in France, hee did Admirable service at Zwetsconce, and draue the Spaniardes out of Britaine, he serued in Spaine, Portugall, and Ireland, where he dyed.

Many and singular exployts hee performed, which are not here mentioned: it was commonly said, hee foretold the time of his death, and dyed of Melancholy: hee was renowned through the world, he was excellent, either to plant a siege, or raise a siege, and could pitch a battell dexterously: hee had fiue brethren, all of them valiant and expert Commanders, viz. William Norris slaine in Ireland, Sir Edward Norris dyed in England, Sir Henry Norris slaine in Ireland, Sir Thomas Norris slaine in Iceland, Maximillian Norris dyed in Britaine.

Since whose death in honourable remembrance of their Noble actes, true valour, and high worth, their kindred haue erected an honourable monument in the Abbey Church at Westminster. Notwithstanding, that there were so many brethren, and their elder brothers some married, yet within thirty yeeres after this, there was no heire male of that house.

Captaine Carlile. Christopher Carlile of London Esquire, after his being in the Vniuersitie, where hee attained vnto perfection of good letters, and vnderstood many Languages. He followed the fortune of the warres in Flanders, and by desert was made a great Commaunder in the States Campe. After that, hee serued the French King at Rochell. He was Admirall of the English Merchants into Russia, for the Danes threatned interruption: after that he serued in Ireland, from whence by meanes of his Father in Law, Sir Francis Walsingham, principall Secretary of Estate, hee was made Lieutenant Generall of the land forces in S. Domingo voyage. Sir Francis Drake being Generall of the Nauall forces: at which time in one Sommer they subdued foure strong Indian Cities, that is to say, Saint Domingo, Saint Yago, Carchagina, and Saint Augustino.

The chiefe service in this conquest consisted most in the valor of the land Souldiers, although the same was no way obserued of the Spaniards, nor Indians, nor of the English, sauing of such as were there present. After that the Quéene sent him into Ireland, and made him chiefe commander in Knoc-fargus.

He aged in London (as it was supposed) for griefe of his friends death, he was quicke witted, and adable, valiant and fortunate in war, well read in the Mathematikes, and of good experience in Nauigation, whereupon some haue Registred him for a Nautgator, but the truth is his most inclination, and profession, was chiefely for land seruice, he vtterly abhored Pyracy.

The life and death of the Earle of Essex. Robert Deuereux, Earle of Esser, being but ten yéres of age, at the death of his father, was for a time trayned vp in the Vniuersity, and in the Court. And at the age of nineteene, went into Flaunders, and there serued against the Duke of Parma, being very forward in all actions seruing for knowledge, and experience in warre and Martiall discipline.

Then he returned into England at the age of one and twenty yéres, was made master of the Horse, and grew very gracious with the Quéene, and in great hope and estimation with the Péeres and common people.

In the yeere, 1588. he was made Lord Generall of the horse at Tilbury.

In the yeare following, when the Lord Norris, worthy Generall of all Land forces, with a most excellent Army of resolute Soudiours went to reestablish Don Antonio, King of Portugall, the Lord Earle, secretly, and vnknowne to the Quéene, made his owne prouision, and was in Spaine, and Portugall, as soone as the first selfe, and in euery attempt as forward as the formost, not hauing any charge or commaund.

His brother Walter Deuereux was slain before Roan.

After that, the Queene made him Generall of her forces in Fraunce, for the ayde of King Henry the fourth, against the Leaguers, at foure and twentie yeeres of age; hee was sworne a Priuy Councellour of Estate. In the yeare 1596, the said Earle was made Lord Generall of all the Queens forces, ioyntly with the Lord Charles Howard Baron of Effingham, high Admirall of England, now Earle of Nottingham, now in the voyage to Cadiz, where the said Lord Admirall of England led the first squadron in the Arke Raleigh, Ro. Earle of Esser led the second squadron in the Repulse, Lord Thomas Howard Baron of Walden, now Earle of Suffolke, led the third squadron in the Mere-honor, Sir Walter Rawleigh, led the fourth squadron in the Warres-spight, vnto euery which squadrons there were thirty ships.

For Land service.

Each of these had their vice Admirals and vice Admirals.

The Earle of Esser, and the Admirall of England commanded loyntly. The Lord Thomas Howard vice-Admirall of the whole fleete, Sir Walter Rawleigh vice-Admiral generall of the whole fleet. All of them in their proper merits appeared themselues most worthy souldiours Noble Gentlemen, and discreet commanders.

But to the purpose of the aforesayd Earle, who in the conquest and taking of the sayd rich City of Cadiz, shewed so much mercy to the enemie, and bounty to all his souldiers, friends, and followers, as he gained thereby confirmation of the peoples loue, his name, fame, and honor was spread into all nations.

The like valour and kindnesse he shewed as the winning of the Iles of Terceraes. And at this time, such and so great was the hearty loue and deepe affections of the people towards him, by reason of his bounty, liberalitie, affabilitie, and mild behauiour, that as well Scholiers, Souldiers, Citizens, Saylers, &c. Protestants, Papists, Sectaries, and Atheists, yea women, and children which neuer saw him, that it was held in them a happinesse to follow the worst of his fortunes.

He was sworne of the priuie Counsell, and after that maister of the Ordinance, Earle marshall, vicegerent in Ireland, Knight of the Garter, and Chancellour of the Vniuersity of Cambridge.

His brother Walter Deuereux alias Colonell Deuereux was slain at Roane.

And as in his life he euer shewed himselfe right Noble, valorous, & resolute, euen so at his death, hee came to the world full satisfaction of his most Christian patience, & piety; dying in the world, as if he had neuer knowne the same, in true charitable zeale, praying for his enemies and as it was wel obserued by diuers there present, his eyes were fixed vp towards heauen, vntill the second fatall stroke was past.

The maine cause of his misfortune was
- Affectation of Popularity.
- Desire of reuenge.
- Endeauouring to get more offices of command into his priuate possession, then the Lawes could permit in any one subiect.

There were also two other mighty subiects liuing in his time in forraine nations of like generall loue, and reputation, that is to say Henry Duke of Guyse in France, who was slaine by the appointment of Henry the third.

And Borris Pheodorowich Godoónoua, who in the yere 1598. became Emperor of Russia, and perished in the yere 1604. as you may read in the third yeare of King Iames.

Sir Thomas Morgan, alias Colonell Morgan a right valiant and discreete Commander: Sir Roger Williams, a Collonel, and of great command in France, Flanders, Spaine, Portugall, and Ireland, he wrote a Booke of all the English warres in his time, wherein he mentioned all the chiefe Commaunders in the Queenes raigne, wherein also was contained the difference betweene the auncient and the moderne wars. Sir Thomas Baskerville Serieant Paior in France, vnder the Lord Willowby, Peregrin Bartu, Baron of Eresson at Dieppe, where the sayd Lord Willowby with fiue thousand men relieued the French King, when the Duke de Mayne, with a great power of Leaguers, had almost expulst the King out of Fraunce, and made him take Dieppe for his last refuge, and from thence he must haue come for England, if the English had not speedily supplied him, this Lord Willoughby was a most excellent souldier; and famous for many sundry services, in diuers nations: the sayd Serieant Baskervile, after that, was Lieutenant Generall vnder Francis Drake in Spaine and Portugall. Sir Philip Sidney of whose Noble birth, education, life, death, and singular good parts, Sir Iames Parrat hath written a booke, Sir John Borrough brother to the valiant Lord Borrough, a Commander in Spaine, France, Flanders, Portugall and Ireland, Collonel Thomas Sidney, a man of no lesse renowme, Sir Nicholas Clifford Sir Conies Clifford, Sir Nicholas Bagnal, Sir Ralph Bagnall, Sir Henry Bagnal, Sir Samuell Bagnall, Sir Row. Yorke, Sir Iohn Wingfield, Sir Ed. Wingfield, Sir Ri. Bingham, Cap. Bingham and Cap. Bing Sir Ri. Grenuile, Cap. Baskerville, Ca. Honings, Ca. Chester, Ca. Nowel, Ca. Vaughan, Sir Ge. Bewser, Cap. Bewser, Cap. Conovvay, Cap. Ratclif. Cap. Hal, Cap. Savage, Cap. Wilson, Cap. Bosvvell, Cap. Court.

The Lord Willowby was a verie worthie Souldier whose seuerall employments memoryes here haue remembred by any meanes I could haue obtained certaine knowledge of them.

All of them very valiant Souldiers and men of Commaund.

Some late writers vpon hope of reward or to curry fauour, with time and date, haue very vainegloriously recommended vnto emples memory, many land leapers, bragging cowardes, and Campe crapers, to be right noble valiant & aduenturous, the said parties being then liuing to the reproch of the writer, griefe of the reader and dishonor of the high merit, of deceased and well deseruing, renowned seruitors, and worthy souldiers, whose true fame, is neuer gained but by the price of his dearest blood, the number of which haue English chiefetaines, lyed in this Queenes raigne, atchieuing honor by their proper valour, in many forraine nations, haue receiued more right, and respecting honor and reward in seuerall strange nations, then by any

English

English promotion, as so much, as mentioned in the Chronicles of England: namely vnder the Emperor, in true seruice against the common enemy the Turke, in France seruing with the King, and with the Leaguers against the King in Spain, and diuers other Prouinces in Italy, in Poland with the King against both Turke & Tartar, as also with Duke Charles against the King, and in my seruing in both Indies, late by the vnknowne number of excellent souldiers, brane Leaders, and discreete Commanders, seruing in the Low Countries, in either side, of all which if for their takes, or our Countries credits you would know any thing, you must reade beholding to the Chroniclers of those seuerall Nations, there came to my hand, a catalogue of fiue hundred notable Captains and Commaunders, all of them deceased, seruing in the aforenamed forreine parts, besides such men of renowme as for forty yeeres space perished in Ireland; all which to auoid tediousnes and fear of offending, I haue this time, omitted to set downe.

And concerning such Gallant English coutriours as are now liuing, I will forbeare to name them, lest the enuious should taxe me with verball Simony, euer acknowledging that the number and valour of such as are now liuing, with those that haue beene slaine within the space of thirty yeres, to exceed the number of any precedent Kings Raigns.

I haue also recommended, vnto the generous obseruation the like touch of Nauigators of this time, as I haue done of land seruitors hee being indeed no more answerable to their number and true worth, then if a bankrupt should pay a mite for a Million.

The life and death of Sir Iohn Hawkins

Iohn Hawkins, of Plimmouth Gentleman, in his youth studied the Mathematicks, went diuers voyages into Spaine, Portugall, and the Ilands, which at that time was very strange and difficult, after that he went to Guinea, and Hilpaniola, which then likewise was most strange and wonderfull, by reason he was the first Englishman, that discouered and taught the way into those parts. After that, by Commission from the Queene, and with her ships he made diuers voyages, aduentures, and discoueries, of many riuers, Ilands, and harbors in the Indies, after which in the yere 1567. with some of the Queens ships, & some of his owne, he did many excellent services in Guinea, and the west Indies. He surprized Rio de la Hacha, and wan great treasure at S. Iohn de Vlloa, in the yere 1588. he did great service vpon the inuincible Spanish Armado, for which he was knighted. In the yere 1595. he went ioynt Admirall with Sir F. Drake, hauing 28. haue shippes in their charge, the whereof were her Maiesties, bound for the West Indies, being the rather drawne thereunto, vpon hope to haue redeemed his son Ri. Hawkins: who in the yere before, was taken prisoner in the South Sea, after long fight with the Kings Gallions, in which voyage hee dyed as it was supposed of mellancoly, & being coffined he was cast into the Sea, neere Porto Rico: hee was very wise, valiant & true hearted: he was 48. yeeres Generall to the Queene, and 22. yeres Treasurer of the Nauy Royall. He & his brother W. Hawkins, had at one time of their owne, thirty sayle of good ships, with which they performed many memorable services for this Kingdome. He was the first that inuented the cunning stratagem of kaile nettings for ships in fighting in the first yere of the Q. in the wars of France he also deuised the chaine pumps for ships, and perfected many defects in the Nauy Royall.

The life and death of Sir Francis Drake.

Sir Francis Drake, sonne of Edmond Drake, of Tauistocke in Deuonshire Sayler, which sayd Francis was the eldest of twelue brethren, brought vp vnder his kinsman Sir Iohn Hawkins vntill eighteene yeeres of age, he was made Purser of a ship to Biscay: at twenty yeres of age, he went to Guynea: at 22. yeares of age, he was Captaine of the Iudith, at Saint Iohn de Vllna, in the Bay of Mexico, within that space after, hee went twice into the Indies, presently vpon that, he went againe, tooke Nombre de Dios, with the Kings Treasure, he went twenty sayes iourney ouer land, toward the South Sea, where he surprized diuers Fozts, immediately after his returne thence, he furnished at his owne proper charge, three friggots with men, and munition, and serued voluntary in Ireland vnder Walter Earle of Esser: where he did excellent seruice, both by Sea, and land, at the winning of diuers strong Fozts.

After the death of the sayd Earle of Esser, he returned into England, and was entertained by Sir Christoper Hatton, then Vice-Chamberlaine to the Queene, and a Priuie Councellor of Estate, by whose meanes, hee became well knowne vnto her Maiestie.

Then with fiue shippes, and two barkes hee went to the straights of Megallan: but passed through, only with two ships: viz the Elizabeth which presently returned backe againe through the straights, and the Pelican, which afterward being in the South Sea, hee called the Hinde, wherein hee himselfe was imbarked: hee then passed through the South Seas, by the Moluccos, and East Indies: where amongst other things of strange note, you shall vnderstand that from Iaua Maior, he neuer touched, nor watred in any place vntill he came to Serpa, Leona in Guynea vpon the coast of Affrica, not after that, vntill he arriued at Plimmouth about the end of the yere, 1580. being very richly fraught with golde, siluer, silke, Pearles, and pretious stones.

The newes of this his great wealth, so farre fetcht was maruellous strange, and of all men held impossible, and incredible, but both proouing true, it fortuned, that many mislked it, and reproched him: besides all this, there were others that deuised and diuulged, all possible disgraces against Drake, and his followers, terming him the Walker theefe of the vnknowne world, yet neuertheless, the people generally with exceeding admiration applauded his wonderfull long aduentures, and rich pyze, chiefely for some reasons following.

led a while, and heard euery opinion, which at that time were many: the principall points wherof, were: that if this action of Drake should be iustified: it would call in question, the late Pyracy of Captaine Chrishmaſſe: the ſtaying of the Spanish Kings Treaſure, by Martin Frobusher: hinder Commerce: breake the league: cause reprysh: bredd warre with the house of Burgondy: and cause iubergo of the English Ships, and goods in Spaine. Where, vnto answer was made, that it was neither pyze, nor Pyracy, nor Ciuill policy, to call so much Treasure out of pure possession: neither could any Pryze, or priuate subiect rightly challenge it: nor by it any offence committed, or intended to any Christian Prince or State.

And that it was very needfull, to retaine it, as well, for further tryall of the Spanish malice, shewed to the English Merchants, in Spaine: as for the deserving, of secret enemies at home, against both which: it would proue a present remedy: as also, that if warres ensued, which the Spaniards long threatned: then the said Treasure of it selfe, would fully defray the charge of seauen yeeres warres, present, and saue the Common Subiect from Mayes, Loanes, Privy Seales, Subsidies, and fifteenes, and giue them good aduantage, against a hating aduersary, the which said opinion strongly preuailed.

Yet Captaine Drake, all this while being therewithall and by his friends much encouraged, reaped doubtfull of the event, vntill the day that the Quæenes Maiestie came abyde his Weather-beaten Barke: where being as highly graced as his heart could wish, with Knightly honour, Princely commendations, and encouragement: forthwith bitted his friends in Court, Towne, and Country: his name, and fame, became admirable in all places, the people swarming dayly in the streets, to behold him, bowing hatted to all that vouchsafe him.

Bookes, pictures, and ballads, were published in his praise, his Opinion, and Iudgement, concerning Marine affaires: Rode currant.

In the yeare one Thousand fiue hundred eighty and fiue, he was Generall by Sea, and Land, and that yeere hee Conquered fiue strong Indian Cities, that is to say Saint Domingo, Carthagina, Saint Yago, and Saint Augustino.

He surprized the delicate Ile of Bayon, raced diuers Fortes, and returned with great spoyles.

In the yere, one thousand fiue hundred eighty seuen, with sixe of the Quæenes ships, and diuers Merchants ships, he went into the bay of Cadiz, and into the mouth of the riuer of Lisborne, where hee surprized, and raced many Fortes, Sunke, tooke and burnt an hundred sayle of Spanish shippes, diuers of them being prepared for inuasion of England, the yeere ensuing, he brought thence great store of Ordinance, and brought from the Ilandes the great Carracke, called the Saint Philip, which was the first Carracke, that euer came into England.

The first Carracke that euer came into England.

In the yeere one thousand fiue hundred eighty and eight, he was vice-admiral of the whole Fleete by Commition, against the inuincible Spanish Armado, his former fortune continuing with him, he tooke one of their great Gallions, and in her Don Pedro de Valdes, A renowned Spanish Commander, after that being accompanied with the Earle of Northumberland, and diuers other Lords, whose names I haue forgot, hee shewed great valour vpon the said great Spanish Armado.

In the yeere one thousand fiue hundred eighty nine, hee was Admirall of the great Nauie, wherein was contained the most resolute Souldiours, and skilfullest Mariners that euer went out of England, being specially prouided, for the re-establishing of Don Antonio late King of Portugall: and for requitall of the Spanish bold attempt vpon England, the yeere before: in which expedition albeit they sayled of the maine purpole, either for inuasion of the King, or replanting of Don Antonio, yet they entred into diuers parts of his Dominions, and spoyled many of his ships, and Gallies.

In the yeere one thousand fiue hundred ninetie and fiue, he was ioynt Admirall with Sir John Hawkins, of a great fleete for the Indies where hee dyed neere Porta Bella, and being Coffined, was cast into the Sea, some suppose he was poysoned, others Imagine he died of Melancholly, seeing his fortunes crost by his friends, and persecuted by his enemies, he brought a River to Plimmouth, of three foote deepe, and fiue foote wide, which River in a right line, from the Towne to the head thereof, is eight miles, but in turning and winding, to come from the head to the Towne, is two and twenty miles.

He was more skilfull in all poyntes of Nauigation, then any that euer was before his time, in his time, or since his death, he was also of a perfect memory, great Obseruation, Eloquent by Nature, Skilfull in Artillery, Expert and apt to let blood, and giue Physicke vnto his people according to the Climats, hee was Low of stature, of strong limbs, broade Breasted, round headed, browne hayre, full Bearded, his eyes round, Large and cleare, well fauoured, fayre, and of a cheerefull countenance.

His name was a terrour to the French, Spaniard, Portugal, and Indians, many Princes of Italy, Germany, and others, as well enemies as friends in his life time desired his Picture. He was the second that euer went through the straights of Magellan, and the first that euer went round about the world: he was married vnto two wiues both yong, yet he himselfe and ten of his brethren dyed without Issue, hee made his youngest brother Thomas his heire who was with him in most and chiefest of his Imployments, in whose he was as famous in Europe, and America, as Tamberlaine in Asia, and Affrica.

In

In his imperfections hee was { Ambitious for Honor. Vnconstant in amity. Greatly affected to Popularity.

Martin Frobusher, borne neere Doncaster, in Yorkshire, in his youth gaue himselfe to Nauigation; he was the first Englishman that discouered the Zoath way to China, and Cathay, and at his first discouery of the way to Cathay, at which time for tryall of what hee could find there, brought thence a blacke soft stone like Sea coale, supposed to be gold, or siluer Mare, and in that perswasion made two seuerall voyages againe to Cathaye, bringing with them great quantitie of the said supposed Mare, the which after due tryall, much greeued, proued not worth any thing, neither fitte for any vse, a great quantitie of which stuffe was layed in the nursery at Darford, no man regarding it, he was vice-admirall to Sir Francis Drake, at the winning of Saint Domingo, Saint Iago, Carthagina, and Saint Augustino.

Hee did great seruice in the yeere one thousand fiue hundred eighty and eight, vpon the inuincible Spanish Armado, for which he was Knighted, after that hee was General of seuen ships, to keepe Weslehaven in Britaine, where the Spaniardes neere thereunto had strongly fortified themselues, in whose extirpation he did speciall seruice by Sea and Land, and was there shotte into the side with a Pusshet, the Wounde not mortall, hee liued vntill hee came to Plimmouth, though the negligence of his Surgeon that onely tooke out the Bullet, not sufficiently searches the Wound, to take out the Bombaste stucke in with the shotte the soze festered, whereof he dyed, and was buried in Plimmouth, he was very valiant, yet harshly and violent.

Commendation of neither Thomas Candish.

Thomas Candish of Tremly in Suffolke, Esquire, being finely Seated, and of good possessions, neere the pleasant Towne of Ipswich, after some experience at Sea, had owned the best part of his estate, in furnishing shippes, for the South Sea, where he gayned great purchase, enough to haue redeemed a whole Earledome, but within short space after, the most part thereof being spent, Attempted to obtaine the like.

And being at the mouth of the Straights, altred his course, and returning for England dyed, he was the second Englishman in that went about the World, hee was of a delicate wit, and personage.

And albeit, for breuities sake, I haue singled out, and onely set downe these fewer as chiefe, in publique fame for excellence, in the Science, practise, and knowledge of Nauigation: yet were there infinite numbers of others worthily famous, which before their times the like were neuer heard of: neither may this present age nor after ages, imagine that euer any before them, were in any measure of marine experience, able to compare with them: Reasons to proue the same are many, and principally for that the knowledge, and vse of the Sea Compass of Needle, was neither familiar nor vnderstood but few yeeres before their time, and so of necessitie were constrained to direct their course by Land-markes, or dead reckonings as they terme it: for which cause, and to shewe the boundlesse blessings of God in this latter age, I haue hereunto annexed, the Originall of that most excellent engine the Sea Compasse.

Nauigation.

You are also to know that at this time aboue mentioned, there were many youthes of Eighteene, Nineteene, and Twenty yeeres of age, very sufficient to take charge of Shippes, into most partes of Europe, and many places of both Indies, there were also diuers Shippe-waights, that could make Shippes of any fashion and burthen, and with their owne knowledge, and experience, carry them to the furthest continent.

He was fifty & fiue yeeres old when he dyed.

And concerning the rest of the English Nauigators and voyages, I will referre you vnto the reuerend Father, Master Richard Hacklut, Batchelor of Diuinitie, in his booke of English voyages.

In the yeere one thousand three hundred eighty fiue, and in the eight yeere of Richard the second, the French King in reuenge of Edward the thirds inuasion, slaughter of people, and incredible damage done vnto the French, Charles of Fraunce with full consent, and ayde of all his subiectes, Dukes of Lorayne, Britayne, Flaunders, and all the Netherlandes, in hauing also the speciall assistance, of money, souldiers, Shippes, and Saylers from the King of Spayne, the Dukes of Saxony, Bauaria, and the Duke of Sauoy, by whose meanes he furnished two mighty Nauies, the one in Britaine, the other at Sluce, the which fleete at Sluce, consisted of 550. and nine sayle, many of them hauing their Sayles, and Cabines guilded, carued, and timbopered very curiously, and deftly, lying at Anchor, bound for present inuasion of England, the French King with his friends, in all readinesse to make an assured Conquest, hauing determined what they would doe with King Richard, his people, and Country, &c. vpon the instant when they should put to Sea, they wanted Sailers and Pilates to bring them to England, this being in August, and they not daring to way Anchor, lingred vppon hope vntill the end of September, at which time there arose a great tempest, that scattered the whole fleete, many of them driuen vpon the coastes of England, and some of the best of them taken in the Thames, where in was great preuision of diuers Pshipes, and the Strange, and wonderfull great Machina, in which the King himselfe, with al his Peeres and houshould should haue kept his Court, and from that time after the French durst neuer attempt the like, this haue I here set downe not onely to shew the goodnesse of God in preserving this Land, by preuenting the powerfull practise of the proud: but therewithall to let you vnderstand, that but eleuenteene yeeres past there could not bee found in fiue seuerall nations, sufficient Mariners to guide the Army twenty Leagues into the Sea.

The greatest number of ships of war, that euer was in the west parts of the world.

Who deuised and in what time, the compasse of the plot, and for Nauigation such as now is vsed by the Mariners.

The Mariners of sea Compas who was the first discouerer thereof, and of the variation of the points, &c.

The honour of that inuention, as touching the property of the Magneticall needle in pointing towardes the Poles, is attributed by Bonifacius, in his Italia illustrata, (in the description of Campadia felix) and by Paulus Iouius in lib. 25. of his history in the end, to the Citizens of Amalfi, a Sea Towne, about eight or nine myles distant from Salerne, in the Kingdome of Naples. The Authors name is no where particularly recorded, then to be one Flauio of Amalfi, for to him that honour is giuen by Francis Lopez of Gomara in his West Indian history, lib. 1. cap. 9. and by Peter Ciezius, in lib. 2. cap. 9. of his Indian story: and by Pandulp: Collenutius, in his history of Naples, who 300. yeares since, namely in the yeere of our Sauiour, 1305. discouered that propertie in the Magnes, and applyed it to Nauigation. Doctor Gilbert in his booke de Magnete. lib. 1. cap. 1. imagineth the bringer of this knowledge into Europe, to haue beene Marcus Paulus Venetus, who returned some few yeeres afore that time out of Tartary and China, and is supposed to haue brought that point of knowledge with him out of China, (where it is certaine that they haue the vse of that instrument, and as is verily thought, more anciently then we.) But yet I see not in that imagination, any great reason, why Amalfi should be deprined of that long kept reputation, touching that inuention of the compas, because neither doth Paulus Venetus himselfe in all his relation of those parts, write a word of any such obseruation he learned among them, nor is it likely that he should bee so vnthankefull to his Country, (by which his father and he had beene honoured) as to conceale such an excellent secret from the Venetians, if he had any such, and to communicate it to Anafi, being of a forraine dominion, and almost foure hundred myles off, on the other side of Italy, and depriue himselfe with all his kinsfolk commendation of enriching Chyttendome with such a rarity.

But touching the diuision of the Plot or playne of the Compasse into the 32. points, although that be somewhat later, yet the author is not knowne, nor is it a matter of so great importance. But yet is thought by Goropius, in his lib. 3. de Origin. Hispanicis, to haue beene the inuention of some Germane, and that betwixt the riuers of the Mase and Scheld, because the names of all the windes, vsed also by Sayleiners, as the French, and Spanish, are all Dutch names (and we of England vary but little from them:) and the dialect argueth them to haue proceeded from no other part of Germany then that.

And yet I doubt of the force of this reason because although the nations aforenamed vse the Germane names in their compasse, yet the Italians haue peculiar names for them in their owne language.

In what manner and by what meanes, saylers vsed to sayle, before they attained the knowledge of the Compasse.

As touching their manner, it was by Nauigation, that is by the helpe of Dares, for so were all their swift Vessels of sayle stirred, as Bayfius instructeth in his booke, de re Nauali, and you may partly note it, in the Historie of the Prophet Ionas, where the Mariners are sayd to haue striued to row the shippe to land.

In which sort of Nauigation, notwithstanding, they were growne to that dexterity, that they were able to make way farre aboue a hundred miles a day, as wee see by the limitations of a dayes sayle, set downe by Ptolemee in lib. 1. Georg Cap. 9. to bee a thousand furlongs, and by Aristides in his Oration intituled Egyptius, (with the fauour of the wind) a thousand two hundred, that is an hundred twenty fiue, or an hundred and fifty miles a day.

But yet notwithstanding, the huge great vessels of burthen, had the vse of the sayles and not of Dares, as Iosephus in Liuie lib. 7. Decad. 3. I sayd, the lesse and larger vessels: for the lesse of that sort also, to haue beene mouued with Dares, I find in Homer in the ninth booke of Odyss, where mention is made of shippes of burthen stirred with twenty Dares.

Now as touching their meanes of direction in sayling, by what skill they were able, without the loadstone to hold any course, it consisted in these two points.

First in the obseruation of the coast markes, in the sight whereof all Nauigation in the Ocean was made, (for in the Mediterranean, by reason of the narrownes being but two, or three dayes passage ouer, it was no aduenturous matter to crosse it, except by violence of Tempest, they were carryed into the maine (and for that cause anciently, the Sayleers sate in the prowe, and were thence called prozete, as now they doe in the poope.

So as hauing well acquainted with the bayes and bendings of the coast, and specially with the Capes the Positions, and distances, where of former experience had registred, it was no hard matter for them to make a sure, although a slow sayle.

The second point of their Art was, in the obseruation of the Stars, for the night: of which it is remembred by Ouid in Fastis, and Cicero, in his Academicke questions, that the Phenicians obserued Cynosura, and the Grecians Helice, the second next constellatine to the North pole, that is the one the lesse, and the other the greater beare.

In the day time, the Sunne was their director, by whose Meridian altitude they were able to know, both the latitude of the place, where they were, and what course they held: for they neither wanted tables of the Sunnes declination (although not very exactly Calculated) nor instruments wherewith to take the altitude of Starres, long before Ptolomies time.

But if they were by force of weather carried from kenning of the coast, and the skie day and night ouerspread with clouds: then were they in a manner vtterly confounded, & left to guesse at their course, only by the qualitie of the winds which was known (although the coniecture was often deceitfull) ordinarily to be of differing temperatures, in heate, and coldnesse, in moysture and drinesse, and of diuers other dispositions, in the boysterousnesse, or mildnesse, in the continualnesse, or intermission of the blastes, &c. for in all these there is obserued ordinarily a sensible difference, in the diuerse sorts of windes.

And this in such a case (till they recouered the sight of the shoare or starres) was their only and silly reliefe.

And in this case is seene the necessitie, and principal excellency of the Magnes for direction of course, for although otherwise it serue for compendiousnesse of Nauigation, yet in this case it is almost merely necessary, being without it, left destitute of all certaine direction to the silly coniectures before spoken of. And this their dependency, of their direction from the Sun and Starr, you may obserue euidently in the seuen and twentieth Chapter, 20. of the Acts of the Apostles, in Paules voyage toward Rome, where the desperatenesse of their condition in sayling being in a tempest) is noted, for that neither Sun nor Starr in many dayes appeared.

Who obtained first the knowledge of the alteration of the Compasse, for the Pole Antarctique.

If you meane by alteration of the Compasse, any change of his propertie in pointing to the North and South, (which some men haue thought it was subiect to, passing the equinoctiall line) it receiueth no alteration at all, but pointeth still with the same end toward the North, as well vnder the Antarctique hemisphere of heauen as vnder the Arctique, and in the same forme. But if you meane by the alteration of it, that which we call the variation of the Compas, that is the declination of it from the Meridian, (the North point declining from the true North, toward the Northeast, or North West) the first obseruer of that (for ought that euer I could reade) is but of small antiquitie, namely Sebastian Cabot in the time of King Henry the eight, and afterward entertained for grand Pilot by King Edward the first, for before his time, euer since the first finding of the Magneticall needle, it was generallie supposed to lie precisely, in place of the Meridian, and crosse the equator at right Angels, respecting with the points onlie North and South.

But afterwards it was found by Nauigators, that although vnder some Meridians it hath no variation at all, as at the Iland Corue, in the Azores, & at wardhouse in Finmarke, &c. yet in most places it variety some where more, some where lesse, and in some places three points of the Compasse.

The life and death of Master Iohn Stow.

Master Iohn Stow of London, Marchantaylor, a painefull writer of the English Chronicle for the space of forty and seuen yeres, who purposed if hee had liued but one yeere longer to haue put in print Reyne Woolfes Chronicle, which Chronicle he began & finished at the request of Doctor Wrigtit, late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, but being preuented by death, left the same in his study orderly written ready for the presse, but it came to nothing, he wrote also the Survey of London.

He was tall of stature, leane of body, and face his eyes small and Chyttaine, of a pleasant and cheerefull countenance, his sight and memory very good, very sober, mild, and courteous to any that required his instructions, and retained the true vse of all his senses, vnto the day of his death, being of an excellent memory, he alwayes protested neuer to haue written any thing, either for malice, feare, or fauor, nor to seeke his owne particular gaine, or vaine glory, and that his only paines and care was to write truth, he could neuer ride, but trauelled on foote vnto diuers Cathedrall Churches, and other chiefe places of the land to search records, he was very carelesse of scoffers, backbiters, & detractors, hee liued peacefully, & died of the stone Collicke, being fourescore yeres of age, and was buried the eighth of Aprill 1605. in his parish Church of Saint Andrewes-vndershaft, whose Mural monument neere vnto his graue was there set vp at the charges of Elizabeth his wife.

And as precedent writers, in fauour of vertuous merrit, in their seuerall times, haue recollected such as were most famous in the high mistery of Poesie: by whose singular paines, and inuentry, our native language, hath from time to time, beene much refined: and at this time directly by them, brought to great perfection: and the abuse of time, and populer absurdities many wayes deciphered, and amended: the chiefe of our ancient Poets, recommended vnto vs, by worthy writers, are Fryer Bacon, Thomas Wickliffe, Sir Ieoffry Chaucer Knight, Iohn Gower Esquier, Iohn Lidgate monke of Bury, doctor Skelton, Sir Thomas More Lord Chancellour, master Iasper Heyward, Gentleman, &c.

Our moderne, and present excellent Poets which worthily flourish in their owne workes, and all of them in my owne knowledge liued together in this Queenes raigne, according to their priorities as neere as I could, I haue orderly set downe (viz). The life and death of sir Humfrey Gilbert.

Sir Humfrey Gilbert, borne in Deuon. at his Fathers house called Greeneway, vpon Dart riuer, he gat his first reputation at Newhauen, where hee serued with singular commendation.

He was afterward President of Munster in Ireland, and with 400. foot, and 100. horse appeased that great Rebellion of the Macartes, and draue out all the Rutlers, but the Earle of Ormond: he draue out of Ireland, that famous Irish Captaine, Iames Fitz Morris, he was one of the twelue Gentlemen that charged Oneale, when the Generall sir Randall was slaine; and was of all the English in our age the most feared among that nation.

His brother Sir Walter Rawleigh was with him in all these actions.

He was the first that carryed a Regiment of English into Zeland, when the States had no footing therein but flushing, and in a shorttime he beat the Spaniards out of that Iland, and did many famous seruices in those parts.

He vndertooke an enterprize vpon the Indies, but his fleete was broken with tempests, he sought to plant a Colony betweene Florida and new found land, in which iourney he perished. He was a great fauourer of Arts and learning, he despised Piracy.

Proclamation against late buildings and Inmates.

The 22. of June, Proclamation was made for the pulling downe of the late builded houses and bodies of Inmates in the Cities of London, and Westminster, and for the space of three miles distant of both those Cities, but little was done, and small effect followed more then of other the like Proclamations before time made, and also an Act of Parliament to that purpose: these Cities are still increased in buildings of Cottages, and pestered with Inmates to the great infection, and other annoyances of them both.

Men set on the pillory.

The last of June, Atkinson a Customer of Hull, was set on the Pillory in Cheape, and with him three other, to wit, Wilkinson, Alson and Govvloy, brought thether on horsebacke, with their faces towards the horse tailes, and papers on their heads. They were there whipped on the Pillory, and lost their eares by iudgment giuen in the Star-Chamber, for slanderous words by them spoken & written against the Lord Treasurer, and other of the Counsell.

Tempest of thunder and haile.

The same last of June, in the afternoone, fell great lightning, and thunder, with haile stones in many places of nine inches compasse, which at Stanwitch in Kent lay a foote deepe on the ground, brake the glasse windowes of their Churches, and tyles of their houses, some barnes were fired by the lightning.

Souldiers to Ireland. Anno reg. 45.

About the first of August, the Citizens of London, were caused to set out and furnish 200. Souldiers towards Ireland.

Citizens of London charged with ships.

In the moneth of January, the Citizens of London were charged with ships to sea, they to lye before Dunkerke, two ships and a pinnace furnished, manned and maintained with the charges of 6000. pounds the yeare.

The 17. of February, W. Anderson, a Seminary Priest, was drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, bowelled and quartered, for being found in England contrary to the Statute of Anno. 27.

Straight watches.

In the moneth of March, the Queen lodging at Richmond, & lying dangerously sicke straight watches were kept in the City of London, with barding at the gates, Lanthornes with lights hanged out to burne all the night.

Queene Elizabeth deceased.

Thursday the 24. of March, about two of the clocke in the morning, deceased Queene Elizabeth at her Mannor of Richmond in Surry, shee being then aged, threescore and ten yeres and had raigned 44. yeres, 5. moneths, and odde dayes, whose corps was princly conueyed to Whitehall, and there remained till the night and twentieth of Aprill, and was then buryed at Westminster.

It is a note worthy to bee remembred, that Thursday hath beene a fatall day to King Henry the eight, and all his posterity, for himselfe dyed on Thursday the eight and twentieth of January, King Edward on Thursday the first of July, Queene Mary on Thursday the seuenteenth of November, and Queene Elizabeth on Thursday the foure and twentieth of March.

King Iames proclaimed K. of England Scotland, France, and Ireland.

The same day aforesaid, the Princes, Peeres & Privy Councellours of estate, with as great peace, prudence, and providence, as the heart of man could imagine, assembled themselues together, far beyond the general imagination of all men, being a matter most remarkable, both speedie and, as well for the instant manifesting the Queenes death, as in publishing to the whole Realme for their lasting comfort, the true and lawfull successor: And being all of one mind like louing brethren, they came all together from the Palace of Whitehall vnto the Citie of London, where their comming was seriously expected of all, and about 11. of the clocke, the same Thursday in the forenoone, which according to the computation of the Church of England, is the last day of the yeare 1602. The Lord Maior and Aldermen of London met them, & their great traine at Ludgate: And thereupon certaine knowledge of the cause of their comming, and whom they resolued to Proclaime King, caused the gates to be opened and guarded, and brought them them to the high Crosse in Cheape side, and there Proclaimed Iames the first of that name: King of Scotland to be the right King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, being lineally descended from Margaret the eldest daughter to King Henry the seuenth, by Elizabeth his wife, who was the eldest daughter of King Edward the fourth, the sayd Margaret was married to King Iames the fourth of that name, King of Scotland, in the yeere of our Redemption 1503. who had issue Iames the first, who was father to Mary Queene of Scotland, and the same Mary was mother to Iames the first, now sole Monarch of the whole Iland of great Britaine, and King of France, and Ireland: this Proclamation was most distinctly, and audably read by Sir Robert Cecill principall Secretary vnto Queene Elizabeth, also the Lords and Privy Councellors of Estate vsed as great care and diligence in all things else that concerned these high affaires and sudden businesse, and sent speedily condigne Messengers vnto his Maiestie into Scotland, who manifested their whole proceedings with tender of their zealous loue and duty, and the peoples vniuersall ioy and great desire to see their King, which his Maiesty most graciously accepted, approued all their proceedings, and returned them all Princely thankes and authorized all the Lords and others late Privie Councellors to the Queen, to persist as they haue begun, vntill hee came personally vnto them. There were 37. Earles and Barons that dyned that day with master Iames Pemberton one of the Sheriffs of London, and at his house the Nobility, with others of the Privy Councell of Estate late in Councell all that afternoone, and from that time, they held their Councels at the Court of Whitehall, and in the Kings name governed all things vntill his Highnesse came in person.

This change was very plausible, and well pleasing vnto all the Nobilitie and Gentry, and generally to all the Commons of this Realme, without faction or interruption, amongst whom the name of a King, was then so strange, as but few could remember that they had seene a King before, except they were aged persons, because the gouernment of the Kingdome had continued almost fifty yeres vnder the Raigne of two Queenes, which is the greater part of an old mans age. The King being aduertised of all things as aforesayd, called his Councell vnto him, and hauing setled his Kingdome of Scotland in good and peaceable order, he began his iourney towardes England and came to London, the 7. of May.

A Commemoration of Queene Elizabeth.

SHee was tall of stature, strong in euery limbe and ioynt, her fingers small and long, her voyce lowd and shrill, shee was of an admirable ready wit and memory, very skilfull in all kind of Needle-worke, had an excellent eare in Musicke, played well vpon divers Instruments, shee spake the Greeke, Latine, Italian, and French tongues well, and vnderstood the Spanish, she was resolute, and of an vndaunted Spirit, of all which speciall vertues apparantly approued, and publiquely knowne to the whole world, during all the time of her owne raigne, and besides her wisdome and great discretion shewed in preventing and escaping many imminent daungers, wherewith shee was strongly environed during her sisters Raigne, holding this (Maxime) firmely in her minde, being a subiect, she would obey obediently, and being a Soveraigne, she would be obeyed accordingly: doe but read these few lines following, and I doubt not but thou shalt receiue full satisfaction.

And first, whereas I should set down the particular Ambassadors that in the first yeere of her Raigne, came from the Emperour, the Kings of France, Spaine, Denmarke, Scotland, Poland, Portugall, and divers Princes in Italy, and Germanie, vnto her Maiestie, to congratulate her happinesse; all which having delivered their severall Ambassages, and received their answeres, and being returned to their seuerall Lords, and made report of her Princely behaviour, her fame euer became admirable vnto all Estates; the particularity thereof as I sayd before, I will omit only to avoid tediousnesse, and onely recommend vnto thy judgement, certaine briefe essentiall observations.

In August, 1564. shee made along Oration in Latine vnto the whole assembly of the Vniversitie of Cambridge.

The 5. of September 1566. she on the sodaine made an Oration in Latine vnto the whole Vniversitie of Oxford, in the presence of the Spanish Ambassadours.

The sixt of August 1578. at Norwich where her Maiesty at her first entrance heard a solemne Oration in Latine, made by the Maior, whereunto her Highnesse gaue present answere in the presence of all the assembly, at her being the same time at Norwich: master Stephen Lymbert the publique Schoole-master, made a long and learned Oration, the principall points thereof pleasing, pleased her Maiestie very well, and made condigne answere thereunto immediatly.

In the yeere 1581. at which time her Highnesse entertained in all state, loue, and kindnesse, Francis of Valois Duke of Alan- ſon, brother to the French King, and heire apparent to the Diadem, who vpon the worlds blazon, of her matchleſſe vertues, came then as an earneſt ſuter vnto her M. for marriage; albeit the difference of their age, viz. ſhee 49. and he but 25. yet when himſelfe with his beſt iudgement & ſtrict-eſt obſervation, after divers meetings, conferences, and paſſages of all things, as well in matters of Princely pleaſure, as dauncing, muſicke, diſcourſing, perfecti-on of many Languages, good reading in auncient Hiſtoryes, and excellence in obſervation, as well as in the true man-naging of the high affayres of her Imperi-all Crowne and dignity, was drowned in admiration of her vnequalled giftes and graces, and ſayd to thoſe that were with him, both eye & eare witneſſes of the pre-miſſes, that the world yet knew her not, and that Fame wanted vtterance to tell her worth: And being returned into France, & relating vnto his Kingly brother, what rare wonderous and infinite perfections, hee had heard and ſeene in one Woman, anſwered him thus: It is not the hundreth time, that I haue heard hundreths ſpeake in her deſeruing prayſe, and ſingular gifts, both of God and nature, & will therefore give my cenſure with your ſelfe, and other Chriſtian Princes, that ſhe worthily me-riteth the name of a ſecond Saba.

In the yeere 1583. Albertus Duke of Va-laſco, & Palatine of Stradia, otherwiſe cal-led the Duke of Poland, a Prince of great wiſedom, learning, gravity, and of long ex-perience in warre, having beene a great Commander in 17. ſet battells, againſt the Turke, and was at this time aboue three-ſcore yeeres of age, came of his owne free motion and earneſt deſire onely to ſee her Maieſty, ſaying: he had heard, and read ſo much of her rare vertues, and high perfe-ction, that if his good ſtarres had not fa-uoured him to behold her, he ſhould haue held it the worſt of his fortune; who a-bode here from Aprill vntill September: and the Queene giving him divers Prince-ly entertainments, wherein ſhe excelled, and that hee had had many conferences and diſcourſes with her, as well touching the publique hoſtilitie, againſt the gene-rall enemie the Turke, and of the particu-lar eſtates, ſcituation, ſtrength, and gouern-ment of all the Chriſtian Princes, with o-ther pleaſant and variable entertainment of time, ſuch as himſelfe beſt pleaſed to preferre to try her wit, experience, and iudgement: all which conferences & diſ-courſes was begunne, continued, and en-ded either in Latine, French, or Italian. And within few dayes before, hee was embarked for Poland, and being at his lodging in Wincheſter houſe, I my ſelfe heard him ſay theſe wordes: I haue now heard and ſeene more worth in one Wo-man, then fame could haue told mee, or I vntill this time could haue beleeued, and when I ſhal arrive in Poland, & that death prevent not my determination, I proteſt I will faithfully record vnto all poſteri-ties, the bleſſednesſe of this time and ſtate that hath ſo rare, ſo wiſe, and benigne a Soveraigne.

The 29. of Iune, 1585. the 13. Deputies of the States of Holland, Zeland, Friezland Gelders, &c. having audience made an oration, or narration vnto her Maieſtie in French, of their preſent eſtate, & diſtreſſe, and likelihood of vtter ruine, if her gracio-us hand helped them not, vnto whom in the ſame Language ſhe inſtantly gaue great conference and comfort.

In the yeare 1588. when the famous ſouldier, Alexander Farneze, Duke of Par-ma, with 346. flat bottomed Boates, and 30000. old ſouldiers were appointed to land in Kent, or Eſſex. And the Duke of Medina with 128. great ſhippes, Galliaſſes, and Gallions, with twelue thouſand land ſouldiers, all which being in great readi-neſſe to invade the middle or heart of the land, beſides tenne or twelue thouſand le-uyed by the Duke of Guyſe in France, to invade the Weſt countries: the newes and purpoſe of all their forces and practiſe, & their hope of private friends here to enter-taine them, was publickely knowne vnto all nations, the moſt part whereof in their better conceiued opinion, held it impoſſi-ble for England to eſcape ſubverſion, yet neuertheleſſe, & notwithſtanding the pre-miſſes, with ſomewhat more then may here be ſpoken, her Maieſtie was euen as cheerefull in her private chamber, and as hearty & comfortable vnto all the Lords of her Councell, as euer ſhee was at any time before. And commig to view her Campe at Tilbury, being brauely mounted ſhee gaue ſuch encouragements with her words, lookes, and geſtures, that neither the feare of death, nor misfortune could bee diſcerned, neither in Commaunder, Captaine, nor common ſouldier.

The yeere 1597. the Polonian Embaſ-ſadour comming with ſpeciall meſſage from his Lord vnto her Maieſty, being of a blunt and harſh behaviour, deliuered his minde accordingly, contrary to all expec-tation: whereat the Queene being much amazed, was driven into admiration, and vnawares and vnprouided on the ſodaine what to ſay, with a ſharp looke, and earneſt mind, ſpake theſe words following.

Angliæ Reginæ reſponſum, Regis Polo-niæ, Legato, menſe Iulij. An. 1595.

Oh! quam decepta fui, expectaui legationem, tu vero querelam mihi adduxiſti. Per lite-ras accepi te eſſe Legatum, inueni vero Herald-um; nunquam in vita mea audiui talem ora-tionem: miror ſane, miror talem, et tam inſolen-tem in publico audaciam: neque poſſum cre-dere ſi Rex tuus adeſſet quod ipſe talia verba protuliſſet; Si vero tale aliquid tibi fortaſſe in mandatis Commiſit (quod quidem valde dubi-to) eo tribuendum: quod cum Rex tuus ſit iu-uenis, et non tam Iure ſanguinis, quam iure e-lectionis, et nouitur electus, non tam perfecte in-telligat rationem tractandi iſtiuſmodi negotia cum alijs principibus, quam vel maiores il-lius nobiſcum obſeruarunt, vel fortaſſe obſerua-bunt alij qui locum eius poſt hac tenebunt.

Quod ad te attinet, videre mihi libros mul-tos perlegiſſe, libros tamen principum ne at-tigiſſe, ſed prorſus ignorare quid inter Reges conuenit. Nam quod iuris naturæ et Genti-um tantopere mentionem facis; hoc ſcito, iuris naturæ Gentiumq;, vt cum bellum inter Re-ges intercedit, liceat alteri alterius bellica ſub-ſidia, vndicunque allata intercipere, et ne in damnum ſuum conuertantur præcauere: hoc (inquam) eſt Ius naturæ & Gentium.

Quod nouam affinitatem cum domo Auſtria-ca comemores, quam tanti jam fieri velis; non te fugiat ex eadem domo non defuiſſe; qui Regi tuo Poloniæ regnum præripuiſſe voluerunt.

De cæteris vero, quæ non ſunt huius loci & temporis cum plura ſint, et ſingulatim conſide-randa; illud expecta quod ex quibuſdam meis Conſiliarijs huic rei deſignandis intelliges, In-terea vero valeas, et quieſcas.

And during the moſt part of her raigne and chiefely towards the latter end, there came divers Grecians that were oppreſt with Turkiſh tyranny, as well Biſhoppes, Barons, & men of ſort, as others vnto her Maieſtie for reliefe, vnto whom ſhe vſed to give perſonall anſwere in their owne tongue, and very often and directly by her meanes they re-obtained their former e-ſtates, and free dome of themſelues, their wiues and families.

Laſtly, in the yeere 1600. when at one time ſhee entertained two Ambaſſadours and one Duke, that voluntarily came to ſee her maieſtie, that is to ſay, the Muſco-uy Ambaſſador, the Barbarian Ambaſſa-dor, and the Duke of Brachiano a Roman, whom the Queene entertained in all ſtate, loue and kindneſſe, in whoſe preſence her Royall perſon dauncedy being then 69. yeres of age. The which with all other circumſtances and obſeruations by them ſeuerally made, and full anſwere touching their Ambaſſages, they all returned in as great ſatisfaction and admiration as any other formerly mentioned. For breuity ſake, here I do omit the particular memo-ry of many wiſe and learned ſpeeches her Maieſtie made in the Parliament houſe, & in her owne Court, vpon manifold occa-ſions, three whereof are ſpeciall, that is to ſay: firſt, her modeſt anſweres to thoſe that in the youth of her Raigne, would haue conſtrained her to marry: ſecondly, her Iudicious anſwers to ſuch as ſought inno-uation and change of orders eſtabliſhed: thirdly, her politicke anſwers to ſuch as ſought reſtauration or tolleration, with o-ther matters of too high a compaſſe for common capacitie.

Her ſubiects loue dayly increaſed vpon her without ceaſing or intermiſſion, du-ring all her whole raigne, and ſo continu-ed during her life and after, as al men may iudge by theſe few lines following.

The 28. day of Aprill, being her fune-rall day, at which time the citie of Weſt-minſter was ſurcharged with multitudes of all ſorts of people in their ſtreetes, hou-ſes, windows, leads, and gutters, that came to ſee the obſequie, and when they beheld her ſtatue or picture lying vpon the cof-fin ſet foorth in Royall Robes, hauing a Crowne vpon the head thereof, and a ball and ſcepter in either hand: there was ſuch a generall ſighing, groning, and wee-ping, as the like hath not beene ſeene or knowne in the memory of man, neither doeth any hiſtory mention any people, time, or ſtate, to make like lamentation for the death of their ſoueraigne.

Shee was the firſt that ſuppreſſed all manner of baſe Moneyes, and reduced al the Engliſh Coyne into gold and ſiluer.

THE

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF King IAMES.

1. Reg. 1. 1603

THe 24. of March, about two of the clocke in the morning, dyed Queene Elizabeth, of worthy memory, surrendring this mortall Kingdome for an immortall. And forthwith the Princes, Peeres of the Land, and Privy Councellors of estate, in their wisedoms foresight, for the preseruation and continuance of our long enioyed peace and tranquilitie, being a matter which all nations held impossible to performe, by reason of so many Lawes, made not onely against Competitors and pretenders, but against all future right of succession; The Lords afore-said, (knowing above all things delayes to be most daungerous) within fiue houres after her highnesse death, made Proclamation at the Court gates in the open assembly, signifying and assuring the people her Maiestie was dead, and that the right of succession was wholly in Iames the King of Scots, now iustly intituled vnto the Crowne of England: And the same made knowne vnto all his louing subiects by this Proclamation, by the name of Iames the first, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. And about 11. of the clocke the same forenoone, at the West end of the high Crosse in Cheape-side, where were assembled the most part of the Cn. Princes, Peers, diuers principall Prelates, and extraordinary and vnexpected number of gallant Knights, and braue Gentlemen of note well mounted, besides the huge number of common persons, all which with great reuerence gaue attention vnto the Proclamation, being most distinctly and audibly read by Mr. Secretary Cecil, at the end thereof with one consent cryed aloud, God saue King Iames, being not a little glad to see their long feared danger, so clearely preuented: After that, the Lords went vnto Sr. Sheriffe Pemertons house, where their wisedomes consulting what was further to be done in so waighty businesse, sent three Heraulds and a Trumpeter to Proclaime the same within the Tower, at the hearing whereof, as well prisoners as others reioyced, namely the Earle of Southampton, in whom all signes of great gladnesse appeared: great care and diligence was vsed to giue notice of this happy and peaceable proceeding vnto Iustices of Counties, rulers of Townes and Cities, forthwith to doe the like, yet notwithstanding the swift expedition of this publication, there were diuers Gentlemen had former secret intelligence, and in diuers places Proclaimed the Kings right, without warrant, but not without welcome.

His purpose and God fulfilleth.

No want of foresight.

And I should haue told you before, that at the first, Sr. Rob. Cary vnknowne to the Lords, rid post vnto his Maiestie with wondrous expedition, and by the way sent certaine knowledge of all things to Barwicke vnto his brother Sr. Iohn Cary, who presently proclaimed the Kings right. His Maiestie vpon receipt of the letters deliuered him by Charles Percy, and Maister Thomas Sommerset, from the Princes, Peeres, and estate of England, wherein was expressed the death of the Queene, their griefes for so great a losse, The sole right and tender of the imperiall Crowne and dignitie vnto his Highnesse by them, in the behalfe of the whole Nation, already acknowledged and in all places Proclaimed, and of all sorts most ioyfully receiued, most humbly beseeching him to accept the same as a pledge of their true allegiance, religious loue and duty, which his Maiestie as graciously accepted, highly commending and approuing their singular wisedomes and prouident preuention of that which all the world feared, namely dissention and factions, promising to acknowledge and requite their seuerall loues and kindnesse, as time and occasion should permit, and to that effect his Maiestie returned present answere vnto the Princes, Peeres, and Prime Councellors of estate, assuring them continuance of all such rights and honors as they then enioyed, requiring and authorizing all the Lords and others being Priuy Councelors of estate vnto his late sister Elizabeth of famous memory, in Gods name and his right to continue, and enioy their former power, strength, & authority, giuing them and all the rest of the Nobility, due acknowledgment and kingly thanks for their singular and admired wisedomes, so excellently well gouerning and disposing of the highest, & most mighty affaires concerning his imperiall Crowne, and Kingdome, promising euer to keepe in memory their extraordinary manifestations of their true allegeance, loue and duty, signifying his further pleasure was to adde vnto their most honourable number the Earles of Northumberland, and Cumberland, the Lord Thomas Howard, and the Lord Mountioy, notwithstanding his then being in Ireland.

The Lordes sent messengers to the King.

The King returneth kind answere to the Lords.

New Councellors appointed.

And forthwith to enlarge the Earle of Southampton, whom personally, and speedily, hee required to meete him in his iourney for England

England, and from this time forward euen vnto the comming of his Maiestie in person, the Estate was wholly and onely ruled and swayed by the Lords, and others of the Priuie Councell.

Warwicke willingly yeldeth to the King.

Sunday the 28. of March, his Maiestie sent the Lord Abbot of Holli-rood house to take possession of Warwick, to the Kings vse, who being readily possest of the Keyes and Keepe, which after the Oath of allegeance by him giuen vnto the Maior and gouernour, he cheerefully in the Kings name, re-deliuered backe the Keyes and Keepe, manifesting his Maiesties good pleasure was, they should enioy all their ancient Priuiledge, Charters, & Liberties, and not only they: but also all other his louing & well affected subiects, hetwing and continuing the like obedience. The Abbot being returned and hauing made true report, not only with what triumph, loue, and kindnesse, he had bin entertained, and entreated: but also with what heartie and generall applause, the name of King Iames was receiued, his Maiestie was fully satisfied, touching his peaceable entrance into England, and true obedience of all his English Subiects.

By this time many Noble men and Gentlemen, of both Nations, came to signifie their loues and duties to his Maiesty, amongst whom Walter Iohn Payton, sonne to Sir Iohn Payton, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, vpon whom the King bestowed the first honour of Knighthood, the King being dayly, more and more aduertised and aceertained of the exceeding ioyfull and generall applause of all the English nation, without exception of any one particular place & person, and aboue other the wonderfull readinesse, and heartie gladnesse of the great City of London, where the Magistrates, and all other inferiot Citizens shewed all possible tignes of perfection, and contentment: and his Maiestie which was euer found most Benigne and gracious, presently directs his special letters vnto the Lord Maior, Aldermen, and Citizens, as followeth.

To our Trustie and Welbeloued Robert Lee, Lord Maior of our Citie of London, and to our Welbeloued the Aldermen, and Commoners of the same.

The Kings letters to the Lord Maior and Citizens of London.

Trustie and Welbeloued, wee greete you heartily well, being informed of your great forwardnesse, in that Iust, and honorable action of Proclaiming vs your Soueraigne Lord, and King, immediatly after the decease of our late deerest Sister the Queene, wherein you haue giuen a singular good proofe of your auncient fidelitie (a reputation hereditary to that our Citie of London) being the Chamber of our Emperiall Crowne, and euer free from all shadowes of tumults, and vnlawfull courses, we could not omit) with all speede possible wee might, to giue you hereby a taste of our thankefull mind for the same: and withall assurance that you cannot crane any thing of vs fit for the maintenance of you all in generall, and euery one of you in particular, but it shalbe most willingly performed by vs, whose speciall care shal euer be to prouide for the continuance and increase of your present happinesse; desiring you in the meane time to goe constantly forward in all doing in and what soeuer things you shall find necessary and expedient for the good gouernment of our said Citie, in execution of Iustice, as you haue beene in vse to doe; in our said deceased Sisters time, till our pleasure be knowne to you to the contrary. Thus not doubting but you will doe, as you may be fully assured of our gracious fauours towards you, in the first degree, wee bid you heartily farewell. Hally-Rude house, the 28. day of March, 1603.

His Maiestie hauing likewise expressed his speciall and particular loue and good liking, of all his English subiects, and manifested his most princely and gracious acceptance of all their designes, as well concerning their particular, and general performance of their loues, and duties, as their singular and prudent managing the high affaires of estate, tooke deliberate aduice with his Councell, and Nobility of Scotland, for the present, and future well gouerning of that people and Kingdome, which vpon due consideration and profound iudgement, concluded: his Dignetie then prepares himselfe with conuenience to set forward on his iourney for England, the which with other memorables things that happened in that space, followeth in their seuerall times and places.

The King Proclaimed at Yorke.

NOtwithstanding the speedy and publique knowledge giuen of the Queenes death, together with the Proclamation of the immediate and vndoubted lawfull Succession to the English Crowne and Kingdome, by the Nobility & late Priuie Councellors as is before declared, yet the certaine newes thereof came not to the Citie of Yorke (which is but 150. miles from London) vntill Sunday the twelfth seuen of March, neither did the Lord Maior and Aldermen of Yorke giue full credit vnto the newes then, though they had receiued the same from the Lord Burleigh, being then Lord President of the established Councell in the North, and Lieutenant of Yorkshire, and thereupon the same Sunday morning, whereas Robert Water, Lord Maior of the Citie of Yorke, with the Aldermen his brethren had prepared themselues to haue made Proclamation, in their chiefe market place of the death of the late Queene, and of the present right of the King to the Succession, yet such was their generall doubt, of the truetly of the Queenes death, that they stayd their proceedings there, and instantly sent selected persons to the Lord Burleigh, viz their Recorder, and Thomas Harbert, and Robert Askwith Aldermen, to know what certaintie his Lordship had of her Maiesties death, vnto whom hee answered, that hee had no other intelligence but onely by a secret friend whom hee beleeued: and whilest they were thus in the house of the Lord President, there arriued a Gentleman of his with a packet of letters from the Nobility and late Priuie Councellours, wherein was related the death of the Queene, and how the Lord Maior of London with the Nobilitie had proclaymed King Councellors had Proclaimed Iames of Scotland, the first of that name, then King of Scots, to be now their true and lawfull King, that is to say, Iames by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland defender of the faith, &c. And then instantly the Lord Maior of Yorke, with his brethren hauing by this time receiued the former Proclamation in Print, Proclaimed the same with all dutie, loue and integritty, and ioyfull acclamations.

The Kings iourney into England

The first of Aprill, the King with diuers Noblemen, and Gentlemen of England, and Scotland, went from Edenborough, to Dunglasse, and from thence, the next day to Barwicke, where hee was receiued with great ioy, and triumph, and by the Maior presented with a purse of gold, and as the King entred in at the gate, Walter William Seley, the younger, being Gentleman Porter, met him and deliuered him all the Keyes of the Towne gates, then the King drew his sword and made him Knight.

An assembly of tyrannous persons.

The next day after came newes that certaine of the West Parches, to the number of two or three hundred persons, habit all assembled themselues, and committed horrie great robberyes, and spoiles, as farre as Peroth, whereat the King was greatly troubled, and for speedy redresse thereof by aduice of such of his Councell as were present, sent the aforesayd Sir William Seley, with two hundred footemen, and fifty horse out of Barwicke Garrison, and at his request Maister Henrie Widdrington, and Maister William Fenwyck, were ioyned in Commission with him, to Command all Officers and others, as well Scots as English bodderers to assist them: they marched along the bodders with a thousand horse, and those footmen before mentioned, and when they came to the habitation of those disordered men, they found them fled from their houses, many whereof they blew by, and raced to the ground, and in pursuite, some of the offendors were apprehended, and committed to the Castle of Carlile, where they were executed according to Law, and so the Countrie was quiet for that time.

Sir Henry Ley Deputy Warden of the North-west bodders.

For the more assurance of peace and quietnesse in those Bodders, the King at his coming to London, with the aduice of the whole body of his united Councell, ordained seuerall Commissioners, and a Deputy Warden, and after that allwell for preuention of all manner bill temperature on either part, as for the speedy executing of Ciuill Iustice vpon all sorts of offenders, both Scottes and English, it was ordayned vpon Penaltie, that no bodrerer of England or Scotland, should weare any manner of weapon offensiue, or defensiue, except a knife onely, of a certaine length wherewith to cutte their meate, neither should they keepe any hosses, Geldings, or Mares, aboue the value of forty shillings: those parts thus restrayned, on the English side, are Tyndale, and Rice Dale, in Northumberlande, Eske, and Lyne, in Cumberland: and on Scotland side, is Eall and Gilsh Tweedale, bodering vpon Northumberland, Lyddisdale, Annerdale, and Eusdale, bodering vpon Westmerland. This Decree was Proclaimed three yeeres after, by meanes whereof, the Northerne Bodders, became as safe and peaceable, as any part of the three Kingdoms, so as in the fourth yeare of the Kings Raigne, as well Gentlemen as others inhabiting the places aforesayd, finding the auncient wall ground to be very good, and fruitfull, began to contende in Law about their Bounds, challenging them, that for their hereditarie right, which formerly they disauowed onely to auoyde charges of common defence.

A good alteration.

You are to vnderstande that there was yet more care taken for conseruation of mutuall peace in the parts aforesayd, viz. concerning the transplanting of certaine noted Great families, whose pride in greatnesse of name, and alliance menaced apparant danger of disturbance.

Great prouidence in the King.

The King stayed in Warwicke three dayes, in which space hee sumnoned the Towne, with the strength thereof, and took knowledge of all English servitors, serving in those parts, namely Master Ralph Gray, whom he Knighted there; and olde Captaine William Selby, whom afterward hee Knighted at Grænewich, Henry Wodderington, William Fenricke, and others: and as the King stood upon the Wall, beholding the Captains and Souldiers in warlike order, hee himselfe made a shotte out of a Cannon to sayze, and with such judgement, as the chiefe Canoniers held themselues well satisfied of the Kings good experience in great Artillerie.

At his departure hee confirmed all their Charters, and gaue them Princely thankes for their kindnesse, and having bestowed his bountie upon the Garrisons, according to their degrees, hee set forwardes, being met by the Sheriffe of Northumberland, very honorably accompanied, who attended the King unto the next County, and was in like manner so received, and attended into euery Shire, by the seuerall Sheriffs, throughout his whole Progresse, and the eight of Aprill hee came to Wodderington, where hee Knighted Henry Wodderington, and William Fenricke, aforenamed, with diuerse others.

The eight of Aprill the Trumpets warned for the remoone, and all that morning, his Maiestie with Royall liberalitie bestowed amongst the Garison Souldiers, and euery officer for warre according to his place, rich and bountifull rewards. After dinner, his Highnesse mounted on horsebacke, and tooke leaue of Warwicke, and proceeded into England, where hee was received by Nicholas Forrester, high Sheriffe of Northumberland, accompanyed with a number of Gentlemen of the Shire: who riding before his Maiestie, leade the way to Mitthington, where, by the matter of the place Sir Robert Cary, and his Lady, he was received with all dutie and affection, the house being plentifully furnished for his entertainement.

The ninth of Aprill, he sett forward towards Newcastle, (being sixteene myles from Mitthington) where his Highnesse was met by the Maior, Aldermen, Councell, and best commoners of the same, in ioyfull manner: the Maior presenting him with the Sword and Keyes, with humble submission: giuing to his Maiestie also in token of loue and loyaltie, a purse full of golde. His Highnesse returned to the Mayor the Sword and Keyes, ratifying all their Customes and Priuiledges that they were possessed of: and so was conducted to a Knights house where hee was richly entertained, and remained there three dayes.

Sunday the tenth of Aprill, his Maiestie went to the Church, before whom preached the Bishoppe of Durham: Sunday he beheld in viewing the Towne, the manner and beautie, the Bridge and Key, being one of the fayrest in all the North parts. Besides he released all paysoners, except for Treason, murther, and papistrie, giuing summes of money for the release of many that lay for debt. So ioyfull were the Counsellmen of Newcastle of his Maiestie lying there, that they thankefully bare all the charge of his houshold, during the time of his abode with them.

The thirteenth of Aprill, his Maiestie set forwards toward Durham, and when hee came neere, the Magistrates of the Citie met him, and behauing themselues as others before them it was by his Highnesse as thankfully accepted. And passing through the gates, whence hee entred the market place, there was an Oration made vnto him, which being ended, hee passed towards the Bishops house, where he was royally receiued, the Bishop attending him with 100. Gentlemen in Tawnie liuery coates.

The 14. of Aprill, his Maiestie tooke leaue of the Bishoppe of Durham, whom he greatly graced, and commended for his learning, humanitie, and grauitie, promising to restore diuers things taken from the Bishoppricke: his Maiestie removed towardes Walwoyth, fiveteene myles from Durham, where by the Gentlewoman of the house, named mistresse Genilon, hee was bountifully entertained.

The 15. of Aprill, his Maiestie set forward toward Yorke, his traine still increasing by the numbers of Gentlemen from the South parts, that came to offer him fealtie: whose loue although he greatly tendred, yet did their multitudes so oppresse the Country, and make provision so deare, that he was fayne to publish an inhibition against the inordinate and dayly accesse and resort of the peoples comming, that many were stopped of their way.

The high Sheriffes of Yorke very well accompanied, attended his Maiestie to Master Inglebyes, beside Topcliffe, being about fiveteene myles from Wallwoyth, who with all ioy and humilitie received his Maiestie, where he rested that night.

The Lord Maior and Aldermen of Yorke, vpon certaine knowledge of the Kings iourney into England, with all diligence consulted what was fittest to bee done for the receiuing and entertaining of so mighty and gratious a Soueraigne, as well within the Citie, as at the vtmost bounds and limits thereof, as also what further service or dutious respect they ought to shew his Maiestie, vpon so good and memorable occasion as now was offered vnto them: and thereupon they sent Robert Askwith Alderman, vnto Newarke, and there in the behalfe of the Lord Maior and Citizens of Yorke to make tender of their zealous loue and dutie, for the which his Maiestie

And vpon Saturday, the sixteenth of Aprill, Iohn Robinson and George Bucke Sheriffes of Yorke with their white Rodds, being accompanied with an hundred Citizens, and threescore others, Esquires, Gentlemen, and others, the most substantiall persons, being all well mounted: they received the King at the East end of Skip-bridge, which was the vtmost bounds of the liberties of the Citie of Yorke, and there kneeling, the Sheriffes deliuered their white Rodds vnto the King, with acknowledgement of their loue and allegeance vnto his Maiestie: for the which, the King with cheerefull countenance thanked them, and gaue them their Rodds againe, the which they carryed vpright in their hands, riding all the way next before the Sergeants at Armes.

And before the King came to the City, his Maiestie had sent Sir Thomas Challenor to the Lord Maior and Aldermen to know who formerly had borne the Sword before the Kings of England, at their comming to Yorke, and to whom of right that Office for that time appertayned: because it had beene aunciently performed by the Earles of Cumberland, as Hereditary to that house, but was now challenged by the Lord President of the North, for the time being, as proper to his place: but after due search and examination, it was agreed that the honour to beare the Sword before the King in Yorke, belonged vnto George Earle of Cumberland, who all the while the King was in Yorke bare the Sword, for so the King willed, and to that purpose sent Sir Thomas Challenor againe to the Lord Maior: and the Lord Maior bare the great Mace of the Citie, going alwayes on the left hand of the Earle.

The 24. are those who haue beene Sheriffes but not Aldermen.

And when the King came to the City, which was well prepared to giue his highnesse, and his Royall traine entertainment, then the Lord Maior with the twelue Aldermen in their Scarlet robes, and the foure and twentie in Crimson Gownes, accompanied with many others of the grauest men, met the King at Micklegate, his Maiestie going betweene the Duke of Linneor, and the Lord Hume, and when the King came neere the Scaffold, where the Lord Maior with the Recorder, the twelue Aldermen, and the foure and twentie, all kneeling, the Lord Maior sayd: Most high and mighty Prince, I and my brethren doe most heartily Welcome your Maiestie to your Highnesse Citie, and in token of our duties, I deliuer vnto your Maiestie, all my authoritie of this your Highnesse Citie, and then rose vp and kissed the Sword, and deliuered it into the Kings hand, and the King gaue it to the Duke of Linneor, who according to the Kings appointment deliuered it vnto the Earle of Cumberland to beare it before his Maiestie.

The Lord Maior also deliuered vp the Keyes of the Citie, the which the Lord Hume receiued, and carryed them to the Mannor: And when the Recorder had ended his graue Oration, in the behalfe of the Citie: then the Lord Maior as the King commanded, tooke Horse, and bare the Cittie Mace, riding on the left hand of the Earle of Cumberland, who bare the Sword of the Citie, and so attended his Maiestie vnto S. Peters Church, and was there Royally receiued, by the Deane and Prebends, and the whole Quyer of Singing men of that Cathedrall Church, in their richest Coapes: at the entrance into the Church, the Deane made a learned Oration in Latine, which ended, the King ascended the Quyer: the Canopie being supported by fiue Lords, and was placed in a Throne prepared for his Maiestie, and during diuine seruice there came three Sergeants at Armes with their Maces, pressing to stand by the Throne, to attend the person of the King: but the Earle of Cumberland put them downe saying, that place for that time belonged to him, and the Lord Maior, and not to them.

Diuine seruice being ended, the King returned in the same Royall manner he came: the Canopie being carryed ouer him vnto the mannor of Saynt Maryes, where the Lord Burleigh, and Counsell gaue their attendance, and receiued his Maiestie; where Doctor Benet hauing ended his eloquent Oration, the King went into his chamber, the Sword and Mace being there borne by the Earle and Lord Maior, who left the Sword and Mace there that night: and when the Lord Maior was to depart, the Lord Hume deliuered him againe the Keyes of the Citie.

The next day being Sunday, the seauenteenth of Aprill, one thousand fiue hundred and three, the Lord Maior with the Recorder, the Aldermen and Sheriffes, and the twenty foure with all their chiefe Officers, and the Preacher of the City, and Towne Clearke, in very comely order went vnto the Mannor: of whom so soone as the King had knowledge of their comming, willed that so many of them as the roome would permit, should come into the Priuy Chamber, where the Lord Maior and the rest presented his Maiestie, with a faire Cuppe, with a couer, of siluer and gilt, weighing seauentie and three ounces, and in the same two hundreth Angels of golde: and the Lord Maior sayd: Most high and mighty Prince, I and my brethren, and all the whole Communalitie of this your Highnesse Citie, present vnto your most excellent Maiestie this cuppe of gold, in token of the dutifull affection and loue wee beare your Highnesse in our hearts, most humbly beseeching your Highnesse fauourable acceptance thereof, and your most gracious fauour to this your Highnesse City of Yorke, the which his Maiestie very graciously accepted, and sayd vnto them, God will bleese you the better for your good will towards your King. The Lord Maior humblie besought the King to dine with him vpon the next Mundey: the King answered,

The King stayed in Warwicke three dayes, in which space he surveyed the Towne, with the strength thereof, and tooke knowledge of all English territory, serving in those parts, namely Master Ralph Gray, whom he Knighted there; and olde Captaine William Selby, whom afterward hee Knighted at Greenewich, Henry Wodderington, William Fenricke, and others: and as the King stood upon the Wall, beholding the Captains and souldiers in warlike order, hee himselfe made a shotte out of a Cannon so fayre, and with such Iudgement, as the chiefe Cannoners held themselues well satisfied of the Kings good experience in great Artillerie.

At his departure hee confirmed all their Charters, and gaue them Princely thankes for their kindnesse, and hauing bestowed his bountie upon the Garrisons, according to their degrees, hee set forwardes, being met by the Sheriffe of Northumberland, very honorably accompanied, who attended the King unto the next County, and was in like manner so received, and attended into euery Shire, by the seuerall Sheriffs, throughout his whole Progresse, and the eight of Aprill hee came to Wooderington, where hee Knighted Henry Wooderington, and William Fenricke, aforenamed, with diuerse others.

The eight of Aprill the Trumpets warned for the remoone, and all that morning, his Maiestie with Royall liberalitie bestowed amongst the Garison souldiers, and euery officer for warre according to his place, rich and bountifull rewards. After dinner, his Highnesse mounted on horseback, and tooke leaue of Warwicke, and proceeded into England, where hee was received by Nicholas Forrester, high Sheriffe of Northumberland, accompanyed with a number of Gentlemen of the Shire: who riding before his Maiestie, leade the way to Withyngton, where, by the maker of the place Sir Robert Cary, and his Lady, he was received with all dutie and affection, the house being plentifully furnished for his entertainement.

The ninth of Aprill, he sett forward towards Newcastle, (being fifteene myles from Withyngton) where his Highnesse was met by the Maior, Aldermen, Counsell, and best commoners of the same, in loyfull manner: the Maior presenting him with the Sword and Keyes, with humble submission: giuing to his Maiestie also in token of loue and loyaltie, a purse full of golde. His Highnesse returned to the Mayor the Sword and Keyes, ratifying all their Customes and Priuiledges that they were possessed of: and so was conuoied to a Knights house where hee was richly entertained, and remained there three dayes.

Sunday the tenth of Aprill, his Maiestie went to the Church, before whom preached the Bishoppe of Durham: Monday he beholdeth in viewing the Towne, the manner and beautie, the Bridge and Key, being one of the fayrest in all the North parts. The 14. of Aprill, his Maiestie tooke leaue of the Bishoppe of Durham, whom he greatly graced, and commended for his learning, humanitie, and grauitie, promising to restore diuers things taken from the Bishoppricke: his Maiestie remooued towardes Walwoyth, fifteene myles from Durham, where by the Gentlewoman of the house, named mistresse Genilon, he was bountifully entertained.

The 15. of Aprill, his Maiestie set forward toward Yorke, his traine still increasing by the numbers of Gentlemen from the South parts, that came to offer him fealtie: which how although he greatly tendred, yet did their multitudes so oppresse the Country, and make prouision so deare, that he was fayne to publish an inhibition against the inordinate and daily accesse and resort of the peoples comming, that many were stopped of their way.

The high Sheriffes of Yorke very well accompanied, attended his Maiestie to Baster Inglebyes, beside Topcliffe, being about fiftetene myles from Walwoyth, who with all ioy and humilitie receiued his Maiestie, where he rested that night.

At Sir Thomas Sadlers, his Maieſtie was Royally entertained for himſelfe and his Kingly traine; Where his Maieſtie ſtayed Sunday, before whom the Biſhop of London preached.

The ſecond of May, being Monday, his Maieſtie removed to Stockeſbourne, a houſe of Sir Henry Cocks, Cofferer to the late Queene Elizabeth, and now alſo cofferer to his Maieſtie, where met him, the Lord keeper of the great Seale, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Knowlt with moſt of the Nobilitie of the land, and Councell of State, who were fauourably received. At which time the ſayd Lord Keeper made a briefe and learned ſpeach to his Maieſtie: To which his Vig meſte anſwered with great grace and Princely wiſedome, but to ſpeake of his Highneſſe entertainment at Stockeſbourne, it was ſuch and ſo abundant, as there was no man of what condition ſoeuer, but had what appetite deſired; his Maieſtie alſo receiued thereby great contentment: And continuing there but one night, he departed the next day, thanking the good Knight for his great expences.

The third of May, his Maieſty came to Theobaldes, Theobaldes, a houſe belonging vnto Sir Robert Cecill, where the Lords of the late Queenes, moſt Honourable Priuie Councell, attended the Kings comming, and making downe did their homage, in whoſe behalfe, and for the reſt of the Queenes cheife Officers there then preſent, the Lord Keeper made a graue Oration ſignifying their aſſured loue and allegeance, &c. where vnto his Highneſſe gaue immediate anſwere to their full content, &c.

Alſo in this houſe of Theobaldes the 4. of May, his Maieſty made diuers Noble men of Scotland, of his honorable Councell, viz. the Duke of Lennox, the Earle of Murre, the Lord Hume, Sir George Howme Treaſurer of Scotland, Sir Iames Elpingſtone, Secretary to the King. The Lord of Kynneſſe now Maſter of the Roles. Alſo of the Engliſh Nobility, he made of his Councell, the Lord Henry Howard, brother to Thomas Howard late Duke of Norfolke. His Maieſty ſtayed at Theobalds foure dayes, with entertainment ſuch and ſo coſtly as hardly can be expreſſed, conſidering the multitude that thither reſorted, beſides the Traine, none going thence vnſatisfied. The King made Knights there (as it was ſayd) twenty eight.

Saturday the ſeauenth of May, he went from Theobalds, towards London, and to auoid the extremitie of dust, he rode through the Medowes, and within two miles on this side Waltham, one of the Sheriffes of London, and Middlesex, attended his Highnesse, viz. The Duke of Lancaster bare the Sword: multitudes of people swarming in Fields, Houses, Trees, and high wayes, to behold the King: vnto whom, the name of King was very strange, being full fifty yeares since there was a King in England: the King as much admired at the infinite numbers of people that continually mette him in his iourney, albeit the former numbers were no way comparable vnto those hee mette neere London: about fiue of the clocke hee came to the Charter-house, where for foure dayes space, the Lord Thomas Howard gaue his Maiestie, and all his Traine most royall entertainment, the King at his departure made fourescore Knights.

Arraignment at Winchester.

Arraigned at Winchester the 15. of November, George Brooke brother to the Lord Cobham, Sir Griffin Markeham, and Sir Edward Parham Knights, Watson and Clarke, Priests, Bartholomew Brookesby Esquire, Copley Gentleman, indicted.

1 To conspire to kill the King.
2 To raise Rebellion.
3 To alter Religion.
4 To subuert the estate.
5 To procure inuasion by strangers.

To effect these Treasons on the fourteenth of June, one thousand fiue hundred and three the first yeere of King Iames the first: they intended their act against the King and his sonne and to carry them to the Tower, and there to enter, and with the Kings Treasure in the Tower to maintaine their intent, but if the Tower could not bee taken, then to take the Castle of Dower, and to carry the King thither, and then and there to obtaine of the King these things, viz.

1 Pardon for their owne presumptions.
2 Tolleration of Religion.
3 To remoue some from the Councell.

Watson the Priest deuised Oathes in writing by which the parties were bound to conceale their Treasons. Clearke and Watson Priestes, did say the fourteenth of June, the King, was no King, vntill after his Cozonation Master George Brooke, and Sir Griffin Markeham, opened their intents to the Lord Gray, to which the sayd Lord did consent. That the 15. of June, they did consent to take Greenwich, and to take the Lords in their Chambers there, and then to carry the King & his Counsell to Dower, or to the Tower, and there would hold the King halfe a yeare. And they would diuide places of authority amongst themselues, viz. Watson Lord Chancellor, George Brooke Lord Treasurer, Sir Griffin Markeham, Secretary, Lord Gray Master of the horse, and Earle Marshall of England: and they would send for the Mayor and Aldermen of London, and keepe them in the Tower.

The eighteenth of June they opened to the Lord Gray the Treasons, whereto the Lord Gray gaue consent, and then the Lord Gray himselfe desired to be Earle Marshall. They did also meete the sayd eighteenth day, and there did meue others to ioyne in their Treasons. And also the twentie of June the Lord Gray, George Brooke, and Sir Griffin Markeham, agreed that the Lord Gray should attaine the leading of two thousand men for the defence of the Low Countries, and that with those men he should effect this enterprize: most of them conseiling the Indictment in part, not in the whole, and pleaded not guiltie: but Master Brooke, before did make this argument: That which is not the rule of my action, can not be Iudge of my action, but the common law cannot bee Iudge of my action. Hee affirmed he had Commission from the King, which hee intended about the common Law, to doe that hee did, viz. to trie faithfull Subiects: but beeing willed to shew the letter of Commission, hee answered hee had such a one, which hee did not shewe, wherefore his Argument was of no force.

Watson the Priest affirmed hee was the man that drew in all these Gentlemen to their Treasons as now they are held to be, as he said, but he held them not so, the King being not Crowned: alleaging Saule was anointed in Ramath, and after ward Ecclus Rex in Mispa and Cleark the Priest alledged Rehoboam, but it was answered, our King was King presently after the Queens death, as any other to heire to his Father before liuery sued: and that the Kings Cozenation was but a Ceremony, to declare him to the people to be King for euer.

King neuer dies, and in Eng. is no Interregnum

Sir Griffin Markeham confessed his discontentment, his liuing being taken from him, but desired to cleare himselfe, of all intention of blood, and desired the Lords to moone the King for mercy, confessing his fault very penitently.

Sir Walter Rawleigh arraigned.

The 17. of November was Sir Walter Rawleigh arraigned, being indicted the 21 of Sept. at Staines, for combining with Henry Lord Cobham the 9. of June at S. Martins in the fields to compasse to destroy the King: raise scottion: commit slaughter: moue rebellion: alter religion: subuert the State: to procure inuasion: leuie war: & to set vp the Lady Arabella Seward, &c. as in the indictment with other arguments, which continued from morning til about 6. of the clocke at night, that the Jury in halfe an houre found him guilty of high Treason.

The Lord Cobham arraigned at Winchester the 29. of November: the Lord Chancellor of England being Lord Steward, and late vnder the cloth of Estate, and none in the vpper end of the hal but himselfe, the Lords sitting on benches along the sides of the hall, halfe on the one side and halfe on the other, & at their feet on either side fate 4. Iudges, and the Kings eldest Gentleman vsher, sitting at the feet of the Lord Steward: the Clarke of the Crowne, with a very low curtesie, deliuered to the Lord high Steward the Kings Maiesties Commission, which he with great reuerence receiued and deliuered the same back againe to the Clarke of the Crowne. Then a Serieant at Armes made Proclamation for silence, and the Clarke read the Commission, then the Sheriffe was called to returne his writ, and to bring in the body of the Lord Cobham, then Master Hamdon Serieant at Arms, returned the Summons of the Lords and Peeres, who were called euery one of them by name.

Henry Lord Cobham arraigned.

When the Lord Cobham was arraigned vpon an Indictment taken the 24. of September last, for that he together with Sir Walter Rawleigh, and George Brooke, the 9. of June last, at S. Martins in the fields, did compasse to depriue the King, and him and his to bring to death, to cause slaughter, and stirre rebellion, and the gouernment, and Religion now established to change, and to subuert the Estate, and to perswade strangers, enemies of this land to inuade the same, & to effect these Treasons, the sayd 9. of June did meet with Sir Walter Rawleigh, & did consult about inuasion, and rebellion, and to stirre vp and deprine the King, and him and his to bring to destruction, and to aduance Arabella Steward, and that hee should intreate with Count Arenberge, for six hundred thousand Crownes, and there if it was agreed that he the Lord Cobham, should goe to the Arch duke to perswade him to assist Arabella, and Sir Walter Rawleigh agreed the Lord Cobham should goe to Spaine, to perswade the King to assist Arabella, &c. As in the indictment to which he pleaded not guiltie, and put himselfe to be tryed by God and his Peeres, who found him guilty, and he had iudgement, The 26 of November Thomas Lord Gray, was arraigned at Winchester vpon an indictment taken the 24. of September at Staines, for ioyning with George Brook Sir Griffin Markeham, and Sir Ed. Parham Knight, Watson and Clerke Priests, Bartholomew Brooksby Esquire, and Copley Gentleman, the 14. of June last, to compasse, the king to kill and deprine, the gouernment & religion, to change, and to perswade strangers to inuade, &c. and to effect the sayd practises, the said 14. of June did meete at Westminster, and there did treate to bring into their power, the King and his Son, and them to carry to the Tower, and there to find money to maintaine their action, & there would obtain three things, viz. pardon for their presumption, tolleration of Religion, and to remoone some from the Councell, and if the Tower would not be taken, then to carry them to Dower Castle, and Watson the sayd 14. of June, did deuise oathes in writing to conceale & their intent, and they did affirme the King was no King till after his Coronation, and did declare that to the Lord Gray and he assented, and conferred to effect these treasons, & how to take Greenwitch, and to take the Lords there and detaine them, and then would carry them and the King to the Tower or to Dower Castle, and there imprison them halfe a yeere.

And the said day it was agreed at Westminster, that Watson should be Lord Chancellor, Brooke Lord Treasurer and Sir Griffin Markeham Secretary, & that they would send for the Mayor and Aldermen of London, and keepe them in the Tower, till they had gotten hostages not to hinder their enterprises, and to effect more, the 18. of June they declared all this to the Lord Gray whereto he consented, and there they would ioyne with them, and there desired to bee Earle Marshall, and did conclude to effect the premises on S. Iohn Baptist day, & that they would moue others to ioyne with them. And the Lord Gray, Brooke and Markeham did consult that the Lord Gray should obtaine the leading and conducting of 2000. Souldiers for defence of the Low Countries, and then to turne them to effect this intent, and the Lord Gray promised to procure 100. Gentlemen to ioyne with them and to fauor of the inuidement.

The Lord Gray made a long speech full of fine words but not to the matter. Then the Lord Steward spake to the Lord Gray, & willed him to answere boldly and without feare. Then to the Peeres, doubting them though they stood vnwoone, yet to try indifferently betweene the King and the prisoner, then to the Kings Councell at Law, willing them, not to confound the prisoner with vnnecessary matter. Serieant Heale opened the Indictment, and master attorney answered the Lord Graies speeches, and aduised him not to vse shifts, for they hap not serued the other day the Master of shifts.

In the course of proceeding against the Lord Gray, it appeared by the examination of Georg Brooke, Sir Griffin Markeham and other, that hee was acquainted with the Kings surprise to haue bin at Wanworth or at Greenwitch, but the Lord Gray stood vpon it, that the conspiracy was not opened to him til after it was dead, and meant no further to be proceeded withal, which was prouch contrary, for the Lord Gray, afterward consented to bring an hundred Gentlemen for that purpose, which he sayd was but to deliuer a petition to the King for reformation of some abuses in the Common wealth, nevertheleste he lingred to attempt, for feare the Catholike faction should out-goe his, and he sayd he would haue his Religion the superior which seemed to be the reason why they did not attempt their wicked purpose: then the Lord Gray would haue extenuated the fact, saying it was but a verball matter and never take effect, and therefore could not bee Treason, but when the Judges told him his fact was Treason, he began to make an invective speech against the Law, which would not serue his turne, then the Lords went together and returning found him guilty.

Watson and Clarke executed.

The 29. of November, Watson and Clarke, Priests, were executed at Winchester, Watson first acknowledged his offence, secondly asked mercy of the King and State, desiring God to prosper both in peace and amitie. Thirdly he was sory, he had drawne so many into that action, wishing he had so many bodies as might satisfie the Kings Maiesty for all that had conspired and were in durance, and like to suffer for that action: fourthly, he forgaue and desired to bee forgiuen of all, namely, that the Iesuites would forgiue him, if he had written ouer eger-ly against them, saying also it was occasioned by them, whom he forgaue if they had cunningly and covertly drawne him into the action for which he suffered, he desired all to witnesse that he dyed a true Catholike, and all true Romish Catholikes to pray for him, Clarke in little differed from Watson, only he seemed not engaged in the action so much, he was drawne in by Watson, he sayd he had written a dialogue betweene a Gentleman and a Scholler, concerning the obedience and loyalty of Subiects towardes their King.

And did therefore mention the booke, lest happily if it were after printed, it might not be thought to haue bin written by him, his death was with more penitencie and constancy then Watsons was: hee confessed hee relied only on the merries of God; not his owne merites, desiring all Christian Catholiques, and all which were in the vnitie of the Church to pray for him.

When both acknowledged that they suffered the Iudgement of death, not for their Religion or their function of Priesthood, but for that their treasonable act, which the Iudges by the Lawes whose wisedomes they rather commended then would blame, had conuicted for Treason, though their intents and hearts to God were cleare in that point, onely Clearke sayd he knew not the certaintie, yet he thought his Priesthood at least by accidence had hastened his execution.

George Brooke beheaded.

George Brooke beheaded at Winchester the fifth of December, being brought forth vnto the scaffold by the Sheriffe, and the Bishop of Chichester, to perswade him to die well, after many godly exhortations and prayers by them vsed vnto him, he vttered these few speeches, after a still kind of fashion, with a very low voice, and cheerefull countenance being by very few heard: That he would neither excuse nor accuse any more, for any matter of Treason, or practises against the King or State, but that hee did assure vnto hope, that in time it would be knowne vnto the world, manifestly discouered, and that he dies free and innocent from any action worthy of death, and would not by any meanes seeme to acknowledge himselfe guilty, he desired the Gentlemen and those by him, to be witnesse to his last will and Testament, wherein since his last act, had bereft him of all goods and lands, where withall he might benefite his beloued and deare wife and children, for had nothing left to bequeath them but onely his earnest prayers to the Almighty to blesse and prosper them, which he did there earnestly offer vp vnto him, in the sight and hearing of them all.

Hee sayd to die it did not grieue him, neither was it in any sort fearefull vnto him, onely his greatest care was, that he should leaue his wife and children, by his act wholly destitute and vnprouided.

He was in the whole time of his being on the Scaffold never seene to alter his countenance or to make any show of griefe, vntill he came to talke of his wife and children, at which time the water stood in his eyes, and his countenance somewhat changed, for matters of religion, he shewed himselfe a well deuoted Christian, and in each respect obedient, and cheerefull in his prayers, humbly desiring mercy and forgiuenesse of his sinnes, when he came to prepare himselfe to lay his head on the blocke, he told them they must giue him instructions what to do, for he was never beheaded before.

Hauing laid downe his head, his hand being not fitte, he rose againe, the headsman pssting to helpe him, he put him from him, and called his owne man to doe the last service for him, he layd downe his head and had it taken off at a blow, hee was apparelled in a blacke damaske gowne, a suite of blacke satten with a wrought night-cap, his Gowne being taken off it was deliuered to the Sheriffes man, which the headsman demanded, and being denied it, hee made answere that vnlesse hee had it, the Sheriffe should execute the office himselfe.

Of the Lords Cobham and Gray, and Sir Griffin Markeham.

Here you must vnderstand, that as soone as the arraignments were passed at Winchester, the Priny Counsell (to the number of fourteene or fifteene, of which company all of them had either bene tryers of the Noblemen as their Peres, or sitten as high Commissioners vpon the Gentlemen) were called before his Maiestie (in his Priuie chamber) at Wilton, where he commanded them to deliuer (without respect to any person) the true narration onely of the order in the tryall of these persons, that had bin condemned by the Law, and of the nature and degree of their offences, as had appeared in euery one of them by their seuerall answeres. All which beeing clearely and iustly reported by them, (each speaking in hearing of the rest) his Maiesty hauing concluded in his owne owne heart, in what manner to proceed) (and that without asking of any earthly person) it pleased him to resolue (betweene God and himselfe) that their execution should be stayed euen at the instant. And therefore, after the two Priests were executed on Tuesday the 29. of November, and George Brooke on Munday following, his Maiestie on the same day, being the first of December, signed three warrants, for the execution of the late Lord Cobham, Lord Gray, and sir Griffin Markham Knight, with particular direction to the Sheriffe, to performe it on Friday after, before ten a clocke in the morning, all these directions being now become notorious, both by the writhe of Execution (which passed vnder the great Seale) & by the making ready the scaffolds at Winchester, his Maiestie very secretly withdrew himselfe into his Cabenet, on Wednesday before the day of execution, and there priuately framed a warrant written with his owne hand to the Sheriffe, by vertue whereof, hee countermanded all the former directions, alleaging the reasons therein mentioned. First his Maiesty resolued it should bee a Scottish man that should carry the warrant, being thereby like to be freest from particular dependency vpon any Noble man, Councellour, or other their friends or allies. Next he resolued to send a man of no extraordinary ranke, because the Standers by should not observe any alteration, nor the delinquents themselues should take any apprehension of such a mans being there at that time.

This being his Maiesties speciall desire, that euery one of them (being seuerally brought vpon the scaffold) might quietly breath forth their last words, and true confession of his secretest conscience. And so his Maiesty made choice of Master Iohn Gibb, a Scottish man, a man that had never dealt with any Councello, or other, for suite of businesse, but one that had borne sent backe into Scotland, from whence he was but now freshly arrived at Wilton some few dayes before.

This party being by the King appointed for an auncient truckie and secret seruant, and a man little knowne, receiuing the warrant secretly on Thursday, from the Kings owne hand, and telling his fellowes that he must lye that night at Salsbury vpon some priuate businesse of his owne, hee rode directly to Winchester, and there keeping himselfe priuate all night, rose early in the morning, on Fryday, and went obscurely to the Castle greene, where the people flocking in all the morning, as the time drew neere, hee put himselfe with the tryong close by the Scaffolds, and there leaned till the Sheriffe brought vp Sir Griffin Markeham to the place, who was the man appointed first to die.

There Sir Griffin Markeham, hauing ended his prayers, and made himselfe ready to kneele downe (Master Iohn Gibb (while the Are was preparing) to giue secret notice of his charge, called Sir Benjamin Tichbourne, the Sheriffe, and then deliuered him (priuatly) his Maiesties warrant, with further directions how he should vse it.

Hereupon, the Sheriffe perceiuing his Maiesties intention, so discreetly ordered the matter, as hee onely called Sir Grifin Markeham vnto him on the Scaffold, and told him that he must withdraw himselfe into the hall, to bee confronted with before those two Lords that then were to follow him, about some points that did concerne the Kings seruice: and so carrying Markeham into the hall, he left him there and went vp to the Castle for the Lord Gray, who being likewise brought vp to the Scaffold, and suffered to powre out his prayers vnto God at great length, and to make his confession, as he would answere vpon his soule, when hee was ready to kneele downe to receiue the stroke of death, Master Sheriffe caused him to stay, and told him that he must goe downe into the hall for a while, and willed him there to tarry till he returned.

Last of all, he went for the Lord Cobham, who hauing also ended his deuotion to God, and making himselfe ready to receiue the deadly blow, the Sheriffe caused both the Lord Gray, and Sir Grifin Markeham, to bee brought backe to the Scaffold, and there before them all three that were condemned, and in the hearing of all the company, notified his Maiesties warrant, by which hee was authorized to stay the execution.

The Lord Cobham (holding vp his hands to heauen) applauded this incomparable mercy of so gracious a Soueraigne, aggrauating his owne fault, by comparing it with the Princes clemencie, wishing confusion to all men alive that euer should thinke a thought against such a Prince, as neither gaue cause of offence, nor take reuenge of ingratitude.

The Lord Gray, finding in what measure this late King had recompenced good for euill, and for bore to make him an example of discouragement, and terrour to all men that hereafter might attempt to breake the bands of loyaltie, vpon the passions of any ambition began to sob & weepe for a long while, with most deepe contrition, protesting now that such was his zeale and desire to redeeme his fault by any meanes of satisfaction: as he could easily sacrifice his life, to prevent the losse of one finger of that royall hand, that had dealt so mercifully with him, when he had least looked for it.

Sir Griffin Markeham (standing like a man astonished) did nothing but admire and pray. The people that were present, witnessed by infinite applause and shouting the ioy and comfort, which they tooke, in these wonderfull effects of grace and mercy in a Prince, whom God had inspired with so many royall gifts, for their conseruation. Thus farre out of a letter written by T.M.

A Copy of his Majesties Warrant, written with his owne hand, and directed to Sir Beniamin Touchborne, high Sheriffe of Hampshire, for stay of the execution of the late Lord Cobham, Lord Gray, and Sir Griffin Markeham at Winchester. 1603.

Although it be true, that all well governid and flourishing Kingdomes and commonwealths, aire established by justice, and that these two Noblemen by birth, that aire now upon the point of Execution, aire for thair treasonable practises condemnid by the Lawe, and adiudgit woorthy of Execution thairof, to the exemple and terror of otheris: The one of thaim having filthily practised the ourthrow of the quhole Kingdome, and the other for the surprise of our owin Person: Yet in regaird that this is the first yeere of our Raigne, in this Kingdome, and that neuer King was so farre obleissed to his people, as we haue bene to this, by our entry here with so hairtie and generall an applause of all sorts; Among quhom all the kinne freindis, & allies of the saidis condemned persones, vaireas sindurat, & dueitsul as any other our good Subiectis, at also that at the very time of thair Arrainment none did more freely and readily giue thair assent to thair condemnation, and to deliuer thaim into the handis of Iustice, then so many of thair neerest kinsmen and allies (as being Peeris) vaiere vpon thair Iurie; as likewise in regaird that Iustice hath in some sort gotten course already by the execution of the two Priests, and George Brooke, that vaire the principall plotteris and intisaris of all the rest, to the embracing of the saidis treasonabill Machinations, We thair fore (bing resoluid to mixe Clemency with Iustice) aire contented, and by thise presents command you, our present Sheriffe of Hamshire, to supersseide the execution of the saidis two Noblemen, and take thaim backe to thair person againe quhile our further pleasure bee knowin. And since we will not haue our Lawis to haue respect to persons, in sparing the great, and strikking the meaner sort, It is our pleasure, that the like course be also taken with Markeham, being sory from our hairt, that such is not onely the heynous nature of the saidis condemnid persons crime, but euen the corruption is so great of thair naturall disposition, as the care we haue for the safety and quiet of our State, and good Subiectis, will not permit us to vse that clemency towardis thaim, quhich in our owin naturall inclination, we might vary easily bee perswadit vnto.

On the 15. of Decemb. Sir Griffin Markham Barrlemew Brooksby, and Anthony Copley, with the Lords Cobham and Gray, and Sir Walter Rawley, were all returned to the Tolor or of London. In the former yere to wit, 1602. the plague of pest. being great in Holland, Zealand, and other the Low Countries, and many Souldiers returning thence into England, the infection was also spread in diuers parts of this Realme, namely in the City of London, and liberties thereof, it so increased, that in the space of one whole yeare, to wit, from the 23. of December 1602. vnto the 22. of December, 1603. there died of al diseases (as was weekly accompted by the parish Clarks and so certified to the King) 38244. whereof of the Plague. 30578. God make vs penitent, for he is merciful.

The 11. of January was Proclamation made for summons of a Parliament to bee holden at Westminster. A conference graunted by the King, and Proclaimed to be holden the 12. of January, before his Maiestie, in his priuy chamber at Hampton Court, betweene the Bishops and other of his Clergie: was vpon occasion deferred till Saturday the 14. of January, on which day was holden the first conference: on day the 16. was the second, and wednesday the 18. the third. Agents for the Millenary plaintifes were Doct. Reynolds, Doct Sparks, Master Knewstubs, & Da. Chatterton, commandement was giuen by his Maiestie, that none should be present but only the Lords of his Priuy Councell, and the Bishops, to wit, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishopps of London; Durham, Winchest. Worcester, S. Davids, Chichester, Carlile, and Peterborow, 5. Deanes, viz of the Chappell, Westminster, Paules, Westchester, and Salisbury: who being called in, the doze was close shut by my Lord Chamberlain. The first day his Maiestie consulted with the Bishops about some speciall points, wherein himselfe desired to be satisfied, first concerning the Booke of Common Prayer and diuine Service vsed in the Church, second excommunication in the Ecclesiasticall Courts: Third, the prouiding of fit and able Ministers, for Ireland, &c.

The second day, the foure opponents brought in their complaints, who kneeling dolune doton Reynolds reduced all matters disliked to foure heads & so into branches, all which was heard and answered by his Maiesty and the Bishops, to their contentments, as it seemed.

The third day, the Kings Maiestie shut vp all with a pithy exhortation to both sides, for vnitie, perswading diligence in each mans place without violence in the one partie, or disobedience in the other: to which they all gaue their vnanimous assent, taking exceptions against nothing that was sayd or done, but promised to performe all dutie to the Bishops as their reuerend Fathers, and to ioyne with them against the common aduersaries, &c.

For as much as by this time, many Iesuites and Seminaries, were come into this land which neuer had beene heere since they were made Priests, & many others having remained here contrary to sundry statutes, and Proclamations in that behalfe, as also for that they presumed vpon the benefit of the 11. generall pardon swarming in many places, and in a manner making open shew of their religion and profession, all which together with the remembrance of the practise of three Iesuites not long since executed, caused his highnesse to publish a speciall Proclamation against them which proclamation being especially obserued, and recorded by by diuers forreine Chronicles, I haue thought good to set downe the same verbatim as follow, eth:

The Proclamation, &c.

HAuing after some time spent in setling the politique affaires of this Realme, of late vouchsafed no small labour in composing certaine differences, late found amongst our Clergy about Rites and Ceremonies heretofore established in this Church of England, and reduced the same to such an order and forme, as We doubt not but euery spirit that is led only with Pietie, and not with Humor, shalbe therein satisfied: It appeared vnto vs in the debating of those matters, that a greater contagion to our Religion, then could proceede from those light differences, was imminent by persons common enemies to them both, Namely, the great number of Priests both Seminaries and Iesuites abounding in this Realme, as well of such as were here before our coming to this Crowne as of such as haue resorted hither since vsing their functions and professions with greater liberty then heretofore they durst haue done, partly vpon a vaine confidence of some innouation in matters of Religion to bee done by Vs, which wee neuer intended, nor gaue any man cause to expect, and partly vpon the assurance of our generall pardon, graunted according to the Custome of our Progenitors at our Coronation, for offences past in the dayes of the late Queen, which pardons many of the said Priests haue procured vnder our great Seale, and holding themselues thereby free from the danger of the Lawes, doe with great audacitie exercise all Offices of their profession, both saying Masses, perswading our Subiects from the Religion established, and reconciling them to the Church of Rome, and by consequence seducing them from the true perswasion, which all Subiects ought to haue of their dutie and obedience to Vs. Wherefore, forasmuch as by way of prouidence to preserue their people from being corrupted in Religion, Piety and obedience, is not the least part of Royall dutie: we hold our selfe Obliged both in conscience, and in wisedome, to vse all good meanes to keepe our Subiects from being infected with superstitious opinions in matters of religion, which are not only pernitious to their owne soules but the ready way and meanes to corrupt their dutie and allegiance, which cannot be any way so surely performed, as by keeping from them the Ministers and instruments of the infection, which are the Priests of all sorts ordained in forraine parts, by authoritie prohibited by the Lawes of this Land, concerning whom therefore we haue thought it fit to publish to all our Subiects this open declaration of our pleasure. That where there be of Priestes at this present within our Kingdome, be they regular or without rule, diuers sorts, some in prison, some at liberty, and of both, some hauing obtained our pardon vnder our great Seale, & some hauing no such pardon; And again, some that were here before our coming into this Realme, & some common hither since: For all such as are in prison we haue taken order that they shalbe shipped at some conuenient port, & sent out of our Realme as soone as possible may be, with commandement not to returne againe into any part of our dominions, without our licence obtained, vpon paine and perill of the Lawes being here in force against them, and for all others who are at liberty, whether hauing such our pardon or not, which we doe aduertise them and all our Subiects, that extending onely to matters done before the death of the late Queene, doth not exempt any Priest from the danger of the law for his abode here since our accession to the Crowne, aboue the time by the Statute limited.

In especiall Proclamation for the banishment of all Iesuites and Seminaries.

We do hereby will and command all maner Iesuites, Seminaries, and other Priests, whatsoeuer, hauing ordination from any authoritie by the Lawes of this Realme prohibited, to take notice that our pleasure is, that they do before the nineteenth day of March next ensuing the date hereof, depart forth out of our Realme and Dominions. And that for that purpose it shall be lawfull to all Officers of our Ports, to suffer the said Priestes to depart from thence into any forraine parts, betweene this and the said nineteenth day of March: admonishing and assuring all such Iesuites, Seminaries, & Priests of what sort soeuer, that if any of them shall be after the said nineteenth day, taken within this Realme or any our Dominions, or departing now vpon this our pleasure signified, shall hereafter returne into this Realme or any our Dominions againe, that they shall be left to the penalties of the Lawes here being in force concerning them, without hope of any fauor or remission from vs. Wherefore We will & command all Archbishops, Bishops, Lieutenants, Iustices of Peace, and all other our Officers and Ministers whatsoeuer, to be vigilant and carefull after the said nineteenth day of March past, to do their duties and diligence in discouering and apprehending of all Priests that shall remaine here contrary to this our declaration. Which though perhaps it may seeme to some to presage a greater seuerite towardes that sort of our subiects, who differing in their profession from the Religion by Law established, call themselues Catholicks, then by our proceedings with them hitherto we haue giuen cause to expect: yet doubt we not, but that when it shall be considered with indifferent Iudgement, what causes haue moued vs to vse this prouidence against the said Iesuites, Seminaries and Priests, all men will institute therein. For to whom is it vnknowne, into what perill our person was like to be drawn, & our Realme vnto confusion not many moneths since, by a conspiracy first conceiued by persons of that sort, who hauing preuailed with some, had vndertaken to draw multitudes of others to assist the same, by the authority of their perswasions & motiues grounded chiefly vpon matter of conscience and religion? Which when other Princes shall duly obserue, we assure our selues they will no way conceiue that this alteration groweth from any change of disposition now more euaporate then heretofore, but out of necessary prouidence to preuent their perills, otherwise inuentable, consi-touring that absolute commission to Forraine Iurisdiction at their first taking of orders, only leaue to conditionall all authoritie to Kings ouer their Subiects, as the same power by which they were made, may dispense at pleasure with the straitest band of loyalty, and tone betweene a King and his people. Amongst which forraine powers although wee acknowledge our selues personally so much beholding to the now Bishop of Rome for his kind offices, and priuate temporall carriage towards vs in many things as we shall be euer ready to requite the same towards him, (as Bishop of Rome in state and condition of a secular Prince.) Yet when wee consider and obserue the course and claime of that Sea, We haue no reason to imagine, that Princes of our religion and profession, can expect any assurance long to continue, vnlesse it might be affented by mediation of other Princes Christian, that some good course might bee taken (by a generall Counsell free and lawfully called) to plucke vp those roots of dangers and iealousies which arise for cause of Religion, as well betweene Princes & Princes as betweene them and their Subiects, and to make it manifest that no State or Potentate either hath or can challenge power to dispose of earthly Kingdomes or Monarchies, or to dispense with Subiects obedience to their naturall Soueraignes: In which charitable action, there is no Prince liuing, that will be readier then We shall be to concurre euen to the vtmost of our power, not onely out of particular disposition to line peaceably with all States and Princes of Christendome, but because such a setled amity might (by an vnion in Religion) bee eftablished among Christian Princes, as might enable vs all to resist the common enemie.

Given at our Pallace at Westminster the two and twentieth day of February, in the first yeere of our Raigne of England, France and Ireland, and of Scotland the seuen and thirtieth.

Archbishop of Canterbury deceased.

The 29. of Febr. at his house at Lambeth, deceased the most reuerend Father in God (and my very good Lord) Iohn Whitgift Archbishop of Canterbury, a man borne for the benefite of his Countrie, and the good of the Church, wherein he ruled with such moderation, as he continued in his Princes fauour all his life, by preuenting such new sects as in his time began to rise, as his learned workes of purpose written by him against such Schismes doth well appeare, whose aduancements for his good life, and sincere manners in the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, and Common Wealth grew to these degrees. That hee was after some preferments taken in the Schooles, as Master of Arts, Batcheler of Diuinitie, Master of Peterborough house, Master of Pembrooke hall, Master of Trinitie Colledge, and Doctor of Diuinitie, and twise Vice-Chancellor: made Chaplaine to Queene Elizabeth, after Deane of Lincolne, in the yeere, 1573. next in the yeare 1577. he was entitled Bishop of Worcester, and shortly following, Vice-President of Wales, and vpon the Death of Grindall, 1583. he was made Archbishop of Canterbury: in the yeare 1585. sworne one of her Maiesties Priuy Councell, wherein he conti nued during his life. At whose funerall at Croydon (where hee had founded a famous hospitall) were mourners of the Nobilitie (besides the Bishops) the Earle of Worcester, and the Lord Zouche, which among other Noblemen had beene his pupiles, when they were brought vp in Cambridge, of whom I will say no more in this place, saue onely that he was very deuout, mercifull, and free from malice, or practise of reuenge.

MAny the Kings subiects & others as well Sectaries, as Romane Catholiques, according to their seuerall inclinations, diuulged and expected an inner Regnum in Religion, and alteration of the booke of Common prayer, &c. whereupon to manifest his Maiesties minde therein, and to giue due satisfaction vnto all men, Proclamation was made the 5. of March 1603. that the same religion which for so many yeeres, & vpon mature deliberation confirmed, together with the Episcopall Iurisdiction of Bishops, in matters Ecclesiasticall should fully and onely be publikely exercised in all respects as had beene vsed in the late raigne of Queene Elizabeth, without hope of tolleration of any other, in this Proclamation there was mention made of former Proclamations to the like effect, and of the solemne disputations had before the King, betweene the reuerend graue Bishops and other learned of the chiefe selected Sectaries who endeuoured strongly to haue ouerthrowne the state of Bishopry, and vse of the booke of Common prayer, which disputation is registred by sundry forraine Pilkotians.

The Kings Maiestie lodging in the Tower of London on the 13. of March, after he had surueyed all the Offices, Storehouses, and the Mint, where both the King and the Queene coyned money, & gaue to diuers persons there present, being told of the Lyons he asked of their being & how they came thither, for that in England there were bred no such fierce beastes, whereunto was answered, that no mention is made in any record of Lyons breeding here, neuertheless Abraham Ortelius, and other forraine writers doe affirme that there are in England beasts of as great courage as the Lyon, namely the Spaltife Dog. Whereupon the King caused Edward Alen, late seruant to the Lord Admirall, now sworne the Princes man, and Master of the Beare-Garden, to fetch secretly three of the fellest dogs in the Garden, which being done, the King, Queen and Prince, with some fiue Lords, went to the Lions Tower, and caused the fiercest Lion to be separated from his mate, and put into the Lyons den one Dog alone, who presently flew to the face of the Lion, but the Lyon suddenly choake him off, & grasht him fast by the neck, drawing the dog vp staires & downe staires. The King now perceiuing the Lyon greatly to exceede the Dogge in strength, but nothing in Noble heart and courage, caused another Dogge to bee put into the Denne, who prouoked as hotte and lustie as his fellow, and tooke the Lyon by the face, but the Lyon began began to deale with him as with the former, whereupon the King commanded the third dog to be put in before the second dog was spoyled, which third dogge more fierce and fell then either of the former, and in delight either of clawes or strength, tooke the Lyon by the lippe, but the Lyon so tore the dog by the eyes, head, and face, that he lost his hold, and then the Lyon tooke the Dogs necke in his mouth, drawing him vp and downe as hee did the former, but being wearied, could not bite so deadly as at the first, now whilest the last dog was thus hand to hand with the lion in the vpper roome, the other two Dogs were fighting together in the lower roome, whereupon the King caused the Lyon to be drawn downe, thinking the Lyon would haue parted them, but when he saw he must needes come by them he leapt cleane ouer them both, and contrary to the Kings expectation, the Lyon fled into an inward den, and would not by any meanes endure the presence of the dogs, albeit the last dog purshed eagerly, but could not find the way to the Lyon. You shall vnderstand the last two dogs whilest the Lyon held them both vnder his pawes, did byte the Lyon by the belly, whereat the Lyon roared so extreamely, that the earth shooke withall: and the nert Lyon rampt and roared as if hee would haue made rescue. The Lyon hath not any peculiar or proper kind of fight, as hath the Dog, Beare, or Bull, but only a rauenous kind of surpassing for prey. The two first dogs dyed within few dayes, but the last Dog was well recouered of all his hurts, & the yong Prince commanded his seruant Ed. Allen to bring the dog to him to Saint Iames, where the Prince charged the said Allen to kepe him, and make much of him, saying, he that had fought with the King of beasts, should neuer after fight with any inferiour creature.

The 15. of March King Iames, Queen Anne his wife, and Henry Fredericke the Prince, passed Triumphantly from the Tower of London, through his Royall Citie and Chamber of London, towards Westminster. The companies of the Citie marshalled according to their degrees, were placed, the first beginning at the vpper end of Barke lane, and the last reaching to the Conduit in Fleet-street, or thereabout: their seates being double railed, vpon the vpper part whereof they leaned: the Streamers, Ensignes and banners of each particular company, decently tired. And directly against them, quite through the body of the Citie, so high as Temple barre a single raile, in faire distance from the other, was likewise erected to put off the multitude: the King richly mounted on a white Gennet, vnder a rich Canopie, sustained by eight Gentlemen of the Priuie Chamber, for the Barons of the Cinque Ports, entred his Royall City of London, and passed the same towards Westminster, through seuen gates, of the which, the first was erected at the East end of Fanchurch, ouer the which gate, was represented the true liknesse of the notable houses, Towers, and Steeples within the City of London.

The second gate, a most sumptuous peece of workemanship, was lokely raised in Gracestraete by the Italians.

Close to Saint Mildreds Church in the Poultrie, a Scaffold was erected, where (at the Cities coste) to delight the Queene with her owne Country Musicke, nine Trumpets and a kettle Drumme, did very actiuely sound the Danish March.

The fourth gate, where through his Maiestie passed, was (at charges of the Citizens) raised in West-cheape, at Soper-lane end.

The fourth gate or Pagiant.

Adioyning to the East front of the great Crosse in Cheape, was erected a square low gallery some foure foote from the ground, set round about with Pilasters, where stood the Aldermen, the Chamberlaine Maiwne-Clearke, and Councell of the Citie, with Sir Henry Mountague, Recorder of the Citie, who made to his Maiestie a gratulary Oration as followeth.

Recorder his Oration at the Crosse in Cheape.

HIgh Imperiall Maiestie, it is not yet a yeare in dayes, since with acclamation of the people, Citizens, and Nobles, auspiciously here at this Crosse was Proclaimed your true succession to the crown. If then it was ioyous with hattes, handes, and hearts lift vp to heaven, to cry King IAMES, what is it now to see King IAMES: Come therefore O worthiest of Kings, as a glorious Bridgrome through your Royall Chamber: but to come neerer Adeste quem quærimus. Twenty & more are the Soueraignes we haue serued since our Conquest, but conquerors of hearts, it is you, and your posterity, that wee haue vowed to loue, and wish, to serue, whilest London is a City: In pledge whereof, my Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, & commons of this Citie, wishing a golden Raigne vnto you, present your Greatnesse with a little Cup of gold.

At the end of the Oration, three cups of gold were giuen (in the name of the Lord Maior, and the whole body of the City) to his Maiestie the young Prince, and the Queene.

From thence his Maiestie passed to the little Conduit at Paules-gate, where was placed the fift gate Arbour-like, and so called the Arbour of Musicke, from thence hee passed through S. Paules Church-yard: vpon the lower battlement of which Church an Antheme was sung by the Quiristers of the Church, to the musicke of lawe instruments: which being finished, a Latine Oration was delinered by one of maister Mulcasters Schollers, at the house of the free Schoole, founded by Doctor Coller sometime Deane of Paules Church.

At Temple-bar, where his Maiestie was vpon the point of giuing a gracious and Princely farewell to the Lord Mayor, and the Citty, a seuenth Arch or gate was erected, the forefront whereof was proportioned in euery respect like a Temple, being dedicated to Ianus, &c.

A Pageant at the Strand.

The City of Westminster, and Dutchy of Lancaster at the Strand, had erected their inuention of a Raine-bow, the Poore, Sunne, and Starres, aduanced betweene two Pyramides, &c. which piece of worke was beginne and ended in twelue dayes: of all which Pageants, deuises, speeches and songes, deliuered in them, yee may read at large in a Booke intituled, The Magnificent entertainment giuen to King Iames, &c. vppon the day of his triumphant passage from the Tower, through his honorable Citty of London, the 15. of March 1603. by Thomas Dekker.

A Parliament at Westminster.

The 19. of March, the King the Prince, with all the Lords Spirituall and Temporall ryd to the Parliament house at Westminster, being the first day of the Parliament, and there in the full assembly of the Lords aforesaid, and of the Knights, and Burgesses of the lower house of Parliament: his Maiestie made a most excellent speech, as followeth.

THE

Kings Maiesties Speech as it was deliuered by him in the vppor house of the Parliament, to the Lords Spirituall and Temporall, and to the Knights Citizens, and Burgesses there assembled on Monday the 19 of March. 1603. &c.

The Kings speech in the Parliament.

NOT did no sooner please God to lighten his hand, and relent the violence of his deuouring Angell against the poore people of this City, but as soone did I resolue to call this Parliament, and that for three chiefe and principall reasons: The first whereof is, (and which of it selfe, although there were no more, is not onely a sufficient, but a most full and necessary ground and reason for conuening of this Assembly.) This first reason I say is, That you who are here presently assembled to represent the Body of this whole Kingdome, and of all sorts of people within the same, may with your owne eares heare, and that out of mine owne mouth, may deliuer vnto you the assurance of my due thankefulnes for your so ioyfull, and generall applause to the declaring and receiuing of mee in this seate (which God by my birth-right and lineall descent, had in the fulnesse of time prouided for me) and that immediatly after it pleased God to call your late Soueraigne of famous memory, full of dayes, but fuller of immortall trophies of honor, out of this transitory life. Not that I am able to expresse by words, or vtter by eloquence the viue image of mine inward thankefulnesse, but onely that out of mine owne mouth you may rest assured to expect that measure of thankefullnesse at my handes, which is according to the infinitenesse of your deserts, and to my inclination and abilitie for requitall of the same. Shall I euer? nay, I can euer be able, or rather so vnable in memory, as to forget your vnexpected readinesse and alacritie, your euer memorable resolution and your most wonderfull conjunction & harmony of your hearts in declaring and embracing me as your vndoubted & lawfull King and gouernour: Or shall it euer bee blotted out of my mind, how at my first entry into this Kingdome, the people of all sorts ryd and ran, nay rather flew to meete me: their eyes flaming nothing but sparkles of affection, their mouthes and tongues vttering nothing but soundes of joy, their handes, feete, and all the rest of their members in their gestures discouering a passionate longing, and earnestnes to meete and embrace their new Soueraigne. Quid ergo retribuam? Shall I allow in my selfe, that which I could never beare with in another? No I must plainly and freely confesse heere in all your audiences, that I did euer naturally so far mislike a tongue to smooth, and diligent in paying their creditors with lip payment and verball thankes, as I euer suspected that sort of people meant not to pay their debtors in more substantiall sort of coine. And therefore for expressing of my thankfulnesse, I must resort vnto the other two reasons of my conuening of this Parliament, by them in action to vtter my thankfulnesse: Both the sayd reasons having but one ground, which is the deeds, whereby all the dayes of my life, I am by Gods grace to expresse my sayd thankefulnesse towards you, but diuided in this, That in the first of these two, mine actions of thankes, are so inseparably conjoyned with my Person, as they are in a maner become individually annexed to the same: In the other reason mine actions are such, as I may either doe them, or leaue them vndone, although by Gods grace I hope never never to bee weary of the doing of them.

As to the first: it is the blessings which God hath in my Person bestowed vpon you all, wherein I protest, I doe more glory at the same for your weale, then for any particular respect of mine owne reputation, or aduantage therein.

The first then of these blessings, which God hath ioyntly with my Person sent vnto you, is Outward peace: that is, peace abroad with all forraine neighbours: for I thanke God I may justly say, that neuer since I was a King, I either received wrong of any other Christian Prince or State, or did wrong to any: I haue euer, I prayse God, yet kept Peace and Amity with all, which hath beene so farre tied to my Person, as at my comming here you are witnesses I found the State embarqued in a great and tedious warre, and only by mine arrivall here, and by the Peace in my Person is now amitie kept, where warre was before, which is no small blessing to a Christian Common wealth: for by peace abroad with their neighbours the townes flourish, the Merchants become rich, the Trade doth encrease, and the people of all sorts of the Land enioy free liberty to exercise themselues in their severall vocations without perill or disturbance. Not that I thinke this outward peace so vnseparably tyed to my person, as I dare assuredly promise to my selfe and to you the certaine continuance thereof: but thus farre I can very well assure you, and in the word of a King promise vnto you. That I shall never give the first occasion of the breach thereof, neither shall I euer be moued for any particular or priuate passion of minde to interrupt your publike peace, except I bee forced thereunto, either for reparation of the honor of the Kingdome or else by necessitie for the weale and preservation of the same: In which case, a secure and honourable warre must bee preferred to an vnsecure and dishonourable peace: yet do I hope by my experience of the by-past blessings of peace, which God hath so long euer since my birth bestowed vpon mee, that hee will not bee weary to continue the same, nor repent him of his grace towardes me, transferring that sentence of King Dauid vpon his by-past victories of warre to mine of peace, That, that God who preserved mee from the deuouring iawes of the Beare, and of the Lyon, and deliuered them into my handes, shall also now graunt mee victory ouer that vncircumcised Philistine.

But although outward peace bee a great blessing: yet is it as farre inferior to peace within, as ciuill wars are more cruell and vnnaturall then wars abroad, And therefore the second great blessing that God hath within my person sent vnto you, is peace within, and that in a double forme, First, by my descent lineally out of the loynes of Henry the seauenth, is reunited and confirmed in me the Vnion of the two Princely Roses of the two Houses of Lancaster and Yorke, whereof that King of happy memory was the first Vniter, as hee was also the first grownd-layer of the other peace. The lamentable & miserable events by the ciuill and bloody dissention betwixt these two Houses was so great and so late, as it need not bee renewed vnto your memories: which, as it was first settled and vnited in him, so is it now reunited and confirmed in me, being justly and lineally descended not onely of that happy conjunction, but of both the Branches thereof many times before. But the Vnion of these two Princely Houses is nothing comparable to the Vnion of these two auncient and famous Kingdomes, which is the other inward peace annexed to my Person.

And here I must craue your patiences for a little space, to give mee leaue to discourse more particularly of the benefites that doe arise of that vnion which is made in my blood, being a matter that most properly belongeth to me to speake of as the head wherein that great Body is vnited. And first, if we were to looke no higher then to naturall and Physicall reasons, we may easily bee perswaded of the great benefites that by that vnion doe redound to the whole Iland: for if twenty thousand men be a strong Army, is not the double thereof, fortie thousand, a double the stronger army? If a Baron enricheth himselfe with double as many landsas he had before, is he not double the greater? Nature teacheth vs, that Mountaines are made of Motes, and that at the first, Kingdomes being divided, and euery particular Towne, or little County, as Tyrants or Vsurpers could obtaine the possession, a Segnorie apart, many of these little Kingdomes are now in processe of time, by the ordinance of God, joyned into great Monarchies, whereby they are become powerfull within themselues, to defend themselues from all outward invasions, and their head and governor thereby enabled to redeeme them from forreine assaults assaults, and punish private transgressions within. Doe wee not yet remember, that this Kingdome was divided into seauen little Kingdomes, besides Wales? And is it not now the stronger by their Vnion? And hath not the Vnion of Wales to England added a greater strength thereto? Which though it was a great Principality, was nothing comparable in greatnesse and power to the auncient and famous Kingdome of Scotland. But what should we sticke vpon any naturall argument, when it is manifest that God by his Almighty prouidence hath preordained it so to be? Hath not God first vnited these 2. Kingdomes both in Language, Religion, and similitude of Manners? Yea, hath hee not made vs all in one Iland, compassed with one sea, & of it selfe by nature so indivisible, as almost those that were borderers themselues on the late borders, cannot distinguish, nor know, or discerne their own limits? These 2. Countries being separated neither by Sea, nor great Riuer, Mountaine, nor other strength of nature, but onely by little small brooks, or demolished little wals, so as rather they were diuided in apprehension, then in effect, and now in the end and fulnesse of time vnited, the right and title of both in my Person, alike lineally descended of both the Crownes, whereby it is now become like a little world within it selfe, being intrenched and fortified round about with a naturall, and yet admirable strong pond or ditch, wherby all the former feares of this Nation are now quite cut off: The other part of the Iland being euer before now not onely the place of landing to all strangers that was to make invasion here, but likewise mooned by the Enemies of this state by vntimely incursions, to make inforced diversio from their Conquests, for defending themselues at home, and keeping sure their backe-doore as then it was called, which was the greatest hinderance and let that euer my predecessors of this nation gat in disturbing them from their many famous, and glorious conquests abroad. What God hath conjoyned then, let no man separate. I am the husband, and all the whole Ile is my lawfull wife; I am the head and it is my body; I am the shepheard, & it is my flock: I hope therfore no man will be so vnreasonable as to thinke that I that am a Christian King vnder the Gospell, should be a Polygamist & husband to two wiues; that I being the head should haue a diuided and monstrous Body; or that being the Sheepheard to so faire a Flocke (whose fold hath no wall to hedge it but the 4. Seas) should haue my flocke parted in two. But as I am assured, that no honest Subiect of whatsoeuer degree within my whole Dominions, is lesse glad of this joyfull vnion then I am: So may the friuolous obiection of any that would be hinderers of this worke, which God hath in my Person already established, be easily answered which can be none, except such as are eyther blinded with ignorance, or else transported with malice, being vnable to liue in a well governed common Wealth, and only delighting to fish in troubled waters. For if they would stand vpon their reputation & priuiledges of any of the kingdoms, I pray you was not both the Kingdomes Monarchies from the beginning, & consequently could euer the bodie bee counted without the Head, which was euer vnseparably joyned thereunto? So that as Honour and Priuiledges of any of the Kingdomes could not bee divided from their Soveraigne. So are they now confounded and joyned in my Person, who am equall and alike kindly head to you both. When this Kingdome of England was divided into so many little Kingdomes as I tolde you before, one of them behoued to eate vp another, till they were all vnited in one. And yet can Wiltshire or Devonshire, which were of the West Saxons, although their Kingdome was of longest durance, and did by Conquest ouercome divers of the rest of the little Kingdomes, make claime to Prioritie of place or honor before Sussex, Essex, or other shires which were conquered by them? And haue wee not the like experience in the Kingdome of France, being composed of diuers Dutchies, and one after another Conquered by the Sword? For euen as little Brookes loose their names by their running and fall into great Riuers, and the very name and memorie of the great Riuers swallowed vp in the Ocean: so by the conjunction of divers little Kingdomes in one, are all these private differences & questions swallowed vp. And since the succesSe was happy of the Saxons Kingdoms being conquered by the speare of Bellona; How much greater reason haue we to expect a happy issue of this greater vnion, which is onely fastened and bound vp by the wedding Ring of Astrea? And as GOD hath made Scotland the one halfe of this Isle to enioy my Birth, and the first and most vnperfect halfe of my life, and you heere to enioy the Mars.

Love and Peace.

the perfect and the last halfe thereof; so can I not thinke that any would bee so injurious to me, no not in their thoughts & wishes, as to cut asunder the one halfe of me from the other. But in this matter I haue farre enough insisted, resting assured that in your hearts and mindes, you all applaud this my discourse.

3 Now although these blessings before rehearsed of Inward and Outward peace, be great: yet seeing that in all good things, a great part of their goodnes and estimation is lost, if they have not appearance of perpetuitie or long continuance; so hath it pleased Almightie God to accompanie my person also with that favour, hauing healthfull and hopefull issue of my body, whereof some are here present, for continuance and propagation of that vndoubted right which is in my person: vnder whom I doubt not but it will please God to prosper and continue for many yeeres this Vnion, and all other blessings of Inward and Outward peace which I haue brought with me.

4 But neither peace Outward nor peace Inward, nor any other blessings that can follow thereupon, nor appearance of the perpetuity thereof, by propagation in the posterity, is but a weake pillar & a rotten reede to leane vnto, if God do not strengthen and by the staffe of his blessing make the durable: for in vaine doth the watchman watch the Citie, if the Lord be not the principall defence thereof: in vayne doth the Builder build the house, if God give not the successe: And in vayne (as Paul sayth) doth Paul plant and Apollo water, if God give not the increase. For all worldly blessings are but like swift passing shadowes, fading flowers, or chaffe blowne before the Wind, if by the profession of true Religion, and workes according thereunto, God bee not mooued to maintaine and settle the Thrones of Princes. And although that since mine entry into this Kingdome, I haue both by meeting with divers of the Ecclesiasticall Estate, and likewise by divers Proclamations clearely declared my mind in points of Religion, yet doe I not thinke it amisse in this so solemne an Audience, I should now take occasion to discover somewhat of the secrets of my heart in that matter: For I shall never (with Gods grace) bee ashamed to make publike profession thereof at all occasions, lest God should bee ashamed to professe and allow mee before men and Angels, especially lest that at this time men might presume further vpon the misknowledge of my meaning to trouble this Parliament of ours then were convenient. At my first comming, although I found but one Religion, and that which by my selfe is professed, publiquely allowed, and by the Law maintained: Yet found I another sort of Religion, besides a private Secte, lurking within the bowels of this nation. The first is the true Religion, which by mee is professed and by the Law is established: The second is the falsly called Catholikes, but truely Papistes. The third, which I call a Secte rather then Religion, is the Puritans and Novelists, who do not so farre differ from vs in points of Religion, as in their confused forme of pollicy and parity, being euer discontented with the present gouernment, and impatient to suffer any superioritie, which maketh their Secte vnable to be suffered in any well governed common wealth. But as for my course toward them I remit it to my Proclamations made vpon that Subiect. And now for the Papists, I must put a difference betwixt mine own private profession of mine owne salvation, and my politique government of the Realme for the weale and quietnes thereof. As for mine owne profession, you haue mee your Head now amongst you of the same Religion that the Bodie is of. As I am no stranger to you in blood, no more am I a stranger to you in Faith, or in the matters concerning the house of God. And although this my profession bee according to mine education, wherein (I thanke God) I sucked the milke of Gods trueth, with the milke of my Nurse: yet do I here protest vnto you, that I would neuer for such a conceite of constancy or other prejudicate opinion, haue so firmely kept my first profession, if I had not found it agreeable to all reason, and to the rule of my conscience. But I was never violent nor vnreasonable in my profession: I acknowledge the Romane Church to bee our Mother Church, although defiled with some infirmities and corruptions, as the Iewes were when they crucified Christ. And as I am none enemie to the life of a sicke man, because I would haue his body purged of ill humoures: no more am I enemy to their Church, because I would haue them reforme their errors, not wishing the downe-throwing of the Temple, but that it might bee purged and cleansed from corruption: otherwise how can they wish vs to enter, if their house be not first made cleane? But as I would be loather to dispense in the least point of mine owne conscience for any worldly respect, then the foolishest Precisian of them all: so would I be as sorry to straight the politique government of the bodies & minds of al my subiects to my priuate opinions: Nay, my mind was euer so free from persecution, or thralling of my subiects in matters of conscience, as I hope that those of that profession within this Kingdome haue a proofe since my comming, that I was so farre from increasing their burdens with Reboboam, as I haue so much as eyther time, occasion, or law could permit, lightened them. And euen now at this time haue I bin carefull to reuise and consider deepely vpon the lawes made against them, that some overture may be proponed to the present Parliament for clearing these Lawes by reason (which is the soule of the Law) in case they haue bin in times past further, or more rigorously extended by Iudges, then the meaning of the Law was, or might tend to the hurt aswell of the innocent as of guiltie persons. And as to the persons of my subjects which are of that profession, I must diuide them into two rankes, Clericks, and Laylcks; for the part of the Layickes, certainly I euer thought them farre more excusable then the other sort, because that sort of religion containeth such an ignorant, doubtfull, and implicit kind of faith in the Layicks grounded vpon their Church; as except they doe generally beleeue whatsoeuer their teachers please to affirme, they cannot bee thought guiltie of these particular points of heresies and corruptions, which their teachers do so wilfully professe. And againe I must subdivide the same Layicks into two rankes, that is, either quiet & well minded men, peaceable Subiects, who either being olde, haue retayned their first drunken in liquor vpon a certaine shamefastnesse to be thought curious or changeable: Or being young men, through evill education haue neuer beene nursed or brought vp, but vpon such venim in place of wholesome nutriment. And that sort of people I would bee sorry to punish their bodies for the error of their minds, the reformation whereof must onely come of God & the true spirit. But the other ranke of Layicks, who either through curiositie, affectation of Novelties, or discontentment in their priuate humours, haue changed their coates, onely to be factious stirrers of Sedition, and Perturbers of the Common-wealth, their backwardnesse in their religion giueth a ground to me the Magistrate, to take the better heed to their proceeding, and to correct their obstinacy. But for the part of the Clerickes, I must directly say & affirme, that as long as they maintaine one speciall point of their doctrine, and another point of their practise, they are no way sufferable, to remaine in this Kingdome. Their point of doctrine is that arrogant and ambitious Supremacy of their Head the Pope, whereby hee not onely claimes to be Spirituall Head of all Christians, but also to haue an Imperiall civill power ouer all Kings and Emperors dethroning and decrowning Princes with his foot as pleaseth him, & dispensing and disposing of all Kingdomes & Empires at his appetite. The other point which they observe in continuall practise, is the assassinates and murthers of Kings, thinking it no sinne, but rather a matter of saluation, to doe all actions of rebellion & hostilitie against their naturall Soueraigne Lord, if he be once cursed, his subiects discharged of their fidelitie, & his Kingdome giuen a pray by that three crowned Monarch, or rather Monster their Head. And in this point, I haue no occasion to speake further here, sauing that I could wish from my heart, that it would please God to make me one of the members of such a generall Christian Vnion in Religion, as laying wilfulnesse aside on both hands, we might meete in the middest, which is the Center & perfectio of all things. For if they would leaue and be ashamed of such new & grosse corruptions of theirs, as themselues cannot maintaine, nor deny to be worthy of reformation, I would for mine owne part be content to meete them in the mid way, so that all nouelties might bee renounced on either side. For as my faith is the true, ancient, Catholike, and Apostolike faith, grounded vpon the Scriptures & expresse word of God: so will I euer yeeld all reuerence to antiquitie in the points of Ecclesiasticall pollicie; and by that meanes shall I euer with Gods grace keepe my selfe fro either beeing an Heretieke in Faith, or schismaticke in matters of pollicy. But of one thing would I haue the Papistes of this land to be admonished, that they presume not so much vpon my Lenitie (because I would be loth to be thought a persecuter) as thereupon to thinke it lawfull for them dayly to increase their number and strength in this Kingdome, whereby if not in my time, at least in the time of my posterity posteritie, they might be in hope to erect their religion againe. No, let them assure themselues, that as I am a friend to their persons if they bee good subiects: so am I a vowed enemie, & doe denounce mortall warre to their errors: And that as I would be sory to be driven by their ill behauiour from the protection and conseruation of their bodies & liues; so will I never cease as far as I can, to tread downe their errors and wrong opinions. For I could not permit the encrease and growing of their religion, without first betraying of my selfe, & mine owne conscience: Secondly, this whole Isle, aswel the part I am come from as the part I remaine in, in betraying their Liberties, and reducing them to the former slauish yoke, which both had casten off, before I came amongst them: And thirdly the libertie of the Crowne in my posteritie, which I should leaue againe vnder a new slavery, having found it left free to me by my Predecessors. And therefore would I wish all good subiects that are deceiued with that corruption, first if they find any beginning of instinction in themselues of knowledge and loue to the truth, to foster the same by all lawfull meanes, and to beware of quenching the spirit that worketh within them; And if they can find as yet no motion tending that way, to bee studious to reade and conferre with learned men, and to vse all such meanes as may further their resolutio, assuring themselues, that as long as they are disconformable in Religion from vs, they cannot be but halfe my subiects, beable to doe but halfe seruice, and I to want the best halfe of them, which is their soules. And here I haue occasion to speake to you my Lords the Bishops. For as you, my Lord of Durham, sayd very learnedly to day in your Sermon, correction without instruction is but a Tyranny: So ought you, & al the Clergy vnder you, to be more carefull, vigilant, and diligent then you haue bin, to win Soules to God, aswell by your exemplary life, as doctrine. And since you see how carefull they are, sparing neither labour, paines, nor extreme perill of their persons to diuert you: (the deuill is so busie a Bishop) yee should bee the more carefull and vakefull in your charges. Follow the rule prescribed you by S. Paul. Be carefull to exhort, and instruct in season, and out of season; and where you haue bin any way sluggish before, now waken your selues vp againe with a new diligence in this point, submitting the successe to God, who calling them either at the second, third, tenth, or twelfth houre, as they are alike welcome to him, so shall they be to me his Lieutenant here.

The third reason of my convening of you at this time, which conteineth such actions of my thankefulnesse toward you, as I may either doe, or leaue vndone, yet shall with Gods grace euer presse to performe all the dayes of my life. It consists in these two points: In making of lawes at certaine times, which is onely at such times as this in Parliament; or in the carefull execution there of at all other times. As for the making of them, I will thus far faithfully promise vnto you, That I will ever preferre the weale of the body and of the whole common-wealth, in making of good lawes and constitutions, to any particular or private ends of mine, thinking ever the wealth & weale of the common wealth to be my greatest weale: an I worldly felicitie: A point wherein a lawfull King doeth directly differ from a Tyrant. But at this time I am onely thus farre to forewarne you in that point, That you beware to seeke the making of too many Lawes, for two especiall reasons: First, because. In corruptissima Republica plurima leges; and the execution of good Lawes is far more profitable in a common-wealth, then to burden mens memories with the making of too many of them. And next, because the making of too many lawes in one Parliament will bring in confusion, for lack of leisure wisely to deliberate before you conclude. For the Bishop said wel to day, that to deliberation would a large time be giuen, but to Execution a greater promptnesse was required. As for the execution of good Lawes, it hath bene very wisely and honourably foreseene & ordered by my predecessors in this Kingdome in planting such a number of Iudges and all sorts of Magistrates in conuenient places for the execution of the same. And therefore must I now turne me to you that are Iudges and Magistrates vnder me, as mine eyes and eares in this case. I can say none otherwise to you, then as Iehoshaphat the good King of Iuda said to their Iudges, Remember what the Thrones you sit on are Gods, and neither yours nor mine. And that as you must be answerable to me, so must both you and I be answerable to God for the due execution of our offices. That place is no place for you to vtter your affections in, you must not there hate your foe nor loue your friend, feare the offence of the greater party, or pittie the misery of the meaner; yee must be blind and not see distinctions of persons: handlesse not to receive bribes: but keep that iust temper and mid-course in all your proceedings, that like a iust ballance yee may neither sway to the right nor left hand. Three principall quallities are required in you; Knowledge, courage, & Sincerities that you may discerne with knowledge, execute with courage, & doe both in vpright sincerity. And as for my part, I doe vow and protest here in the presence of God, & of this honourable audience, I never shall be weary, nor omit no occasion, wherin I may shew my carefulnesse of the execution of good Lawes. And as I wish you that are Iudges not to be weary in your office in doing of it; so shall I never be weary, with Gods grace, to take account of you, which is properly my calling.

And thus having told you the 3. causes of my convening of this Parliament, all 3. tending onely to vtter my thankefulnesse, but in divers formes, the first by word, the other two by action; I doe confesse that when I have done & performed all that in this speech I have promised, Invitis fervus sum. Invite, because the meaning of the word Invitis in that place of Scripture is vnderstood, that in doing all that service which we can to God, it is but our due, & we do nothing to God but that which we are bound to do: and in like manner, when I have done all that I can for you, I do nothing but that which I am bound to doe, & am accomptable to God vpon the contrary. For I doe acknowledge, that the speciall & greatest point of difference that is betwixt a rightfull King & an vsurping Tyrant is in this: That whereas the proud and ambitious Tyrant doeth thinke his Kingdome and people are onely ordained for satisfaction of his desires and vnreasonable appetites; The righteous and just King doth by the contrary acknowledge himselfe to be ordained for the procuring of the wealth and prosperity of his people and that his greatest & principall worldly felicity must consist in their prosperitie. If you be rich, I cannot be poore; if you be happie, I cannot but be fortunate, and I protest that your welfare shall ever be my greatest care and contentment: And that I am a Servant it is most true, that as I am Head & governor of all the people in my Dominion, who are my naturall vassals & subiects, considering them in numbers & distinct Rankes; So if wee will take the whole people as one Bodie and Masse, then as the Head is ordained for the bodie and not the Bodie for the Head: so must a righteous King know himselfe to bee ordained for his people, and not his people for him. For although a King and people bee Relata: yet can he be no King if he want people and subiects. But there be many people in the world that lacke a Head, wherefore I will never be ashamed to confesse it my principall honour to bee the great servant of the common wealth, & ever thinke the prosperity thereof to be my greatest felicity, as I have already said.

But as it was the whole body of this Kingdome, with an vniforme assent and harmony, as I told you in the beginning of my Speech, which did so farre oblige me in good will and thankefulnesse of requitall by their alacritie and readinesse in declaring and receiuing mee to that place which God had provided for me, and not any particular persons (for then it had not beene the body) So is my thankefulnesse due to the whole state. For euen as in matters of faults, Quod à multis peccatur, impunè peccatur: Euen so in the matter of vertuous and good deeds, what is done by the willing consent & harmony of the whole bodie, no particular person can justly claime thankes as proper to him for the same. And therfore I must here make a little Apology for my selfe, in that I could not satisfie the particular humours of euery person, that looked for some aduancement or reward at my hand since my entry into this Kingdome. Three kind of things were craved of me: Advancement to honor, Preferment to place of credit about my person, and Reward in matters of land or profit. If I had bestowed honor vpon all, no man could have bin advanced to honor: for the degrees of honor doe consist in preferring some above their fellows If every man had the like accesse to my priuy or Bed chamber, then no man could haue it, because it cannot containe all. And if I had bestowed lands and rewards vpon every man, the fountaine of my liberalitie would be so exhausted & dryed, as I would lacke meanes to bee liberall to any man. And yet was I not so sparing, but I may without vaunting affirme, that I haue enlarged my favour in all the three degrees, towards as many and more then ever K. of England did in so shorta space: No, I rather craue your pardon that I haue beene so bountifull: for if the meanes of the Crowne be wasted, I behoued then to, haue haue recourse to you my Subiects, and be burdensome to you, which I would be lothest to be of any King alive. For as it is true, that as I have already sayd, it was a whole Body which did deserue so well at my hand, and not euery particular person of the people: yet were there some who by reason of their office, credit with the people or otherwise, tooke occasion both before, and at the time of my comming amongst you, to give proofe of their loue and affection towards me. Not that I am any way in doubt, that if other of my Subiects had beene in their places, and had had the like occasion, but they would have vttered the like good effects, (so generall and so great were the loue and affection of you all towardes mee:) But yet this having beene performed by some speciall persons, I could not without vnthankefulnesse but require them accordingly. And therefore had I iust occasion to advance some in Honour, some to places of service about me, and by rewarding to enable some who had deserued well of mee, and were not otherwise able to maintaine the rankes I thought them capable of, and others who although they had not particularly deserued before, yet I found them capable & worthy of place of preferment and credit, and not able to sustaine those places for which I thought them fit, without my helpe. Two especiall causes mooued me to be so open handed: whereof the one was reasonable & honorable; but the other I will not be ashamed to confesse vnto you, proceeded of mine owne infirmitie. That which was iust and honourable, was: That being so farre beholding to the bodie of the whole State, I thought I could not refuse to let run some small brookes out of the fountaine of my thankefulnesse to the whole, for refreshing of particular persons that were members of that multitude. The other which proceeded out of mine owne infirmitie, was the multitude and importunity of sutors. But although reason come by infusion in a manner, yet experience groweth with time and labour: And therefore doe I not doubt, but experience in time comming will both teach the particular Subiects of this Kingdome, not to bee so importune and vndiscreete in craving: And me not to be so easily and lightly moued, in granting that which may be harmefull to my estate, and consequently to the whole Kingdome.

And thus having at length declared vnto you my mind in all the points for the which I called this Parliament: My conclusion shall onely now be to excuse my selfe, in case you have not found such Eloquence in my Speech, as peradventure you might have looked for at my hands. I might, if I list, alleage the great weight of my affaires, and my continuall businesse and distraction, that I could neuer have leasure to thinke vpon what I was to speak before I came to the place where I was to speake: And I might also alleage that my first sight of this so famous and honorable an Assembly, might likewise breed some impediment. But leauing these excuses, I will plainely and freely in my manner tell you the true cause of it, which is: That it becommeth a King, in my opinion, to vse no other Eloquence then plainnesse and sincerities. By plainnesse I meane, that his Speeches should be so cleere and voyd of all Ambiguitie, that they may not bee throwne, nor rent a sunder in contrary fences like the olde Oracles of the Pagan gods. And by sincerities I understand that vprightnesse and honestly which ought to be in a Kings whole speeches and actions: That as farre as a King is in Honour erected aboue any of his subiects, so far should he strive in sincerities to be aboue them all; and that his tongue should bee euer the true messenger of his heart: and this sort of Eloquence may you euer assuredly looke for at my hands.

This Parliament continued till the 7. of July, and was then prorogued vnto the 7. of February next following. An. Reg. 2. 1604

Thomas Smith, a worthy Gentleman, late Aldermam of London, was sent Ambassadour from King James of England, to the Emperor of all Russia, great Duke of Volodemer, Mosco, and Novograd King of Cazan, King of Astracan, &c. Hee beganne and entred on his Journey thitherwarde on the twelfth of June. Ambassador to Russia.

The third of August, about 10. of the clock in Great raine the forenoone, great claps of thunder was heard and haile at London, and great raine and haile followed, such as the like hadde not beene seene in the memory of man, for one houres space, to wit, till, eleuen of the clocke, and then ceased, but the Channels and water courses rose so high, that many Sellers by them were ouerflowed or filled, and the goods or wares in them drowned. London.

Sunday the 15. of August, a Lioness named Elizabeth, in the Tower of London, brought forth a Lyons whelpe, which Lyons whelpe liues not longer then till the next day. whelped in the Tower.

Commissioners from the King of Spaine and the Archduke to treat of peace.

About the beginning of this Summer, there came Commissioners from the King of Spaine and the Archdukes, to treate of peace, not in respect of any warre, or dissention betweene King Iames, and the said Princes, for vntill the King came into England, hee was in perfect Amitie with all Christian Princes, in which peace hee was borne, raigned thirtie eight yeeres in Scotland, and Crowned in England, yet neuertheleste at his first comming into England, found the same in tearmes of hostilitie, to the great hurt of both Nations, effusion of blood, disturbance of other Christian Princes, aswell in Commerce, as otherwise, &c. and to the great aduantage of the common enemie the Turke: whereupon in his most Christian consideration, and redresse thereof, his Maiestie authorized diuers wise graue, and Noble personages, to be Commissioners in this treatie of peace, which sayd Commissioners on either side, vpon due, and mature deliberation, agreed and concluded vpon all such articles, as concerned the vniuersall good of either parties viz. the Kings of England, Spayne, and the Archdukes, and for the better ratification whereof, the Spanish King vpon knowledge of the sayd agreament, sent Don Iohn de Velasco, Constable of Castile, and Legion, Duke of the Citie of Fryas, Earle of Hare, Lord of the Townes of Villapand, and Pedraca de la Syerra, Lord of the house of Velasco, and of the seuen Infants of Lara, great Chamberlain vnto Philip the third King of Spaine, &c. accompanied with Marquesses, Earles, Barons, Knights, and Gentlemen, to the number of one hundred persons, all which arriued here Dooer the first of August, where according to the Kings expresse commandement, they were honorablie, and kindly entertained by the Nobilitie, and Gentrie of Kent. The Kings Barges brought them from Gaueslend, to Somerset house, where the Spanish Commissioners kept residence: the Archdukes Commissioners remayned at Durham house, both which houses with the aforesayd Lotraine Commissioners and Ambassadors, were dieted at the Kings cost serued and attended by the speciall seruants and officers of the King, Queene and Prince, viz. the Gentlemen vshers, Sewers, Cookes, Yeomen of the guard, and Groomes of the chamber, &c. the foresayd Duke came to Somerset house the tenth of August, and had audience the 15. of the same moneth: the 19. day of the same moneth being Sunday, the Earle of Deuonshire accompanied him to the Court, where the King in his Chappell in the presence of all the aforesayd Commissioners, as well English as others: the Duke holding the Kings hands betweene his hands; the King tooke his corporall oath vpon the holy Bible, religiously to keepe the sayd Articles of peace, League, and Amitie lately agreed vpon, the Articles being then written in Latine, were openly shewed vnto all there present.

Which solemne oath performed, the King feasted them all most royally in the Vnicorne house, & after dinner rode the Course gate, they saw Bull baytting, and Beare baytting, and in the preaching place, they beheld dancing, and running vpon Ropes, with other pleasant feats of activity, &c. And then taking their leaues of the King, they returned to their lodgings.

The same afternoone at the Crosse in cheape side, this ioyfull peace was Proclaimed in these words following, Iames by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland. To all our louing Subiects, and to all others that these presents, shall heare or see, greeting. Know ye that this day to the honor of Almightie God, the welfare of all Christendome, and specially to the welfare, and tranquillity of this our realme of England, a league of peace, and Amitie, is concluded, ratified, and sworne on our part betweene vs, our Realme, and Dominions, and the high & mighty Prince Philip the third of that name, King of Spaine, &c. and Albert, and Isabel, Archdukes of Austria, Dukes of Burgundy, &c. which as we hope shall bee of long continuance and for the Comfort of our people, so doe we hereby make knowne the same to them, requiring them all to obserue and keepe the same, and from henceforth to accompt all Subiects of the sayd King of Spayn, Archdukes of Austria, Dukes of Burgundie, to bee our friendes and allies, and so to vse them as they will answere the contrary at their perills, giuen at our Pallace of Whitehall the day, and yeare abouesayd. This was Proclaimed by William Seager alias Garter, principall King of Armes, assisted by William Romney Sheriffe of London in his Scarlet robe, eight Heraulds in their Coates of Armes, the Sergeant Trumpetter, and seuen others, all of them on horseback.

This peace was more ioyfully accepted then the people made shew for, by reason the multitude of pretended Gallants, Bankcrouts, and vnruly youths were at this time setled in Pyracy, accompting whatsoeuer they got good purchase, young Citizens, Prentisses, Yeomen, and Seruingmen disdayned their honest laudable professions, taking aduauntage of the time, became Rouers to the great discredite of the English nation.

The true Merchant, and honest Citizen, was exceeding glad and right ioyfull of this peace, hoping thereby to haue free trade with all nations, preuention of bloodshed, quiet enioying of their sonnes, and seruants, which yearely were prest for Lotraine seruices, and sometime one Constable in malice would presse another, offering like violence vnto honest husbandmen and others comming to London to the Fearm, and for want of them, Prest they cared not whom comming out of the Churches, hauing newly receiued the Sacrament, & that hereafter they should be eased of the continual charge of setting forth of Souldiers, making of Galies, and setting forth of Ships, &c. besides many other blessed benefits which they enioyed euen as their hearts wished, but within short space, all these benefits were generally forgotten, and the happinesse of their generall peace, was was of the most part contemned, such is the wonts of corruption, and manis vile ingratitude, despising all blessings and benefits which being obtained are seldome or neuer thankefull for any, no nor so much as to make acknowledgement, least thereby they should be forced to sin their errors.

The twentie five of August the aforenamed Duke departed, and gaue very bountifully vnto all that attended him, he was honorablie vsed in all places at his departure, as at his first arriuall, the Kings ships which brought him from Donkerke to Dooer, transported him and at the rest of the Commissioners with their traine, from Dooer vnto Donkerke, notwithstanding the Hollanders Bauado. Now followeth the Articles lately sworne & agreed, with the names of the commissioners on either side.

FIrst it is concluded, & accorded, that from this day forward, there shall be a good sincere, true, firme, and perfect Amity, League, & Peace to endure for ever, and inviolably to bee observed and kept, as wel by Land as Sea, and fresh Waters, betwixt the most renowned King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, &c. And the most renowned King of Spaine, &c. And the most renowned Archdukes of Austrice, Dukes of Burgundie, &c. and their Heires and Successours whomsoeuer, their Kingdomes, Countries, Dominions, Lands, Peoples, Liegemen, and Subiects now being, or which hereafter shall be, of whatsoeuer condition, state, or degree they are or may be, so as the sayd Vassalls and Subiects from henceforth are each of them to fauour other, and to vse one another with all kind and friendly offices.

II.

AND that from henceforth all hostilitie, and enmitie shall cease, and all offences, iniuries, or damages which eyther part (in time of the troubles) hath sustayned by the other, shalbe taken away and forgotten, in such sort, as that hereafter neither party against other, for, or vpon occasion of any damages, offences, depredations or spoyles past, may pretend any matter, but that there shall be a perfect abolition of all and every of them vntill this present day: and that all actions for the same shall be held and reputed to be extinguished: excepting onely such depredations as hane bin committed since the 24. of Aprill, one thousand sixe hundred and three (because of these an accourt is to bee made:) And each partie shall hereafter abstaine from all depredations, offences and spoyles, as well by Sea, as Land, and fresh waters, in whatsoeuer the Kingdomes, Dominions, Places, or Gouernments of the other: neither shall the aforesayd Princes consent, that any of the grieuances before mentioned, bee done by any of their Vassals, Inhabitants, or Subiects: and they shall also cause restitution to bee made of all depredations and spoyls which hereafter shall be committed and of the damages growing by meanes thereof.

The King incorporateth the Feltmakers of London.

In this Moneth of August, 1604. the strong Towne of Ostende, was surrendred vnto Archduke Albertus of Austria after he had besieged it three yeares, and three moneths, during all which siege, there was on either side performed as much true valour, stoute resolution, labor and industry, bold attempts, & ingenious practises as either witte of man could deuise, or the ability of man could execute: as well in the besieged, as in the besieger, many Nations during the siege came from farre to behold it, and all the World admired it, many valiant Gentlemen and good Commanders perished in that seruice, many English men of name within the Towne and defence thereof, shewed themselues perfect souldiers: the chiefe whereof was Sir Francis Vere Generall, Syr Horatio Vere Collonel, besides which, there were many other braue Captaines and most noble and right valiant The siege of Ostend.

valiant commanders, and leaders in the Towne whose meritorious fame should neuer haue died if by any meanes I could haue learned their names, notwithstanding the sundry hard measures offered me by some Thrasonical or rather pretended souldiers, who instead of Instruction, gaue me scoffes, disgrace and derision, &c.

Spinola. There were slaine on both sides during the siege, one hundred and twenty thousand, the most of them old Souldiers, by meanes whereof, the fury both of the assailant, and defendant was much spent, but towardes the end of the sledge, Marquise Spignola, a merchant of Genua, who not long before in despight of his aduersaries, had brought six Gallies from Spain to Sclusa, hauing vowed himselfe to the fortune of warre, and being now the chiefe commander of the Spanish forces, maintained the assaults with such violence, that hee won the Towne.

Genes Mauritius wonne Sauls the last moneth. For which seruice, and for diuers losses, and expences when Genes Maurice take his 6. galies at the winning of Sclusa, The King of Spaine sent for him into Spaine, made him Duke of Santa Severina, and the yere ensuing made him Lord Generall of all his forces in the Low Countries.

After the Town was lost, those of the States side sayd, that if they had bin but a little more prouident at the first comming of the enemie, he should neuer haue won it.

And those of the Archdukes side, sayd that if at their first approach they had bene but a little better armed, they might haue won the Town within three moneths sledge, and with small losse of men.

The 20. of August, Robert Lord Cicell of Essenden, was created Viscount Cranborne.

A Lion whelped in the Tower.

The 26. of February, was another Lyon whelped in the Tower of London, by the foresayd Lioness, which was taken from the Dam assone as the same was whelped, and brought by by hand according as the King commanded: but this Lyon whelp also dyed about some 16. dayes after in the moneth of March. Thus much of these whelps haue I obserued, and put in memory, for that I haue not read of any the like in this land, before this present yere, to wit, one on the 5. of August, and the other on the 26. of February next following.

A great plague in London and most parts of England.

In the former yeere, 1603. the Plague of Pestilence being great in Ostend, and diuers other parts of the Low Countries, and many Souldiers returning thence into England, and many ships of War lying long at Sea, became also infected, who in their returne brought that contagion into diuers parts of this land, chiefly into the Citty of London: by reason whereof many Citizens, and other inhabitants thereof, for their better safety, went into most shires of this Kingdome, where in diuers places they were kindly entertained, & entreated, and in many places most liberall kindly, and bountifully vsed, and not suffered to haue recourse, neither for loue, nor money, saying, God must needes plague you for your monstrous wickednesse, for many died in high wayes, fields and Barnes, neere vnto good Townes, and villages, where too many of them, were let remayne too long vnburied, but God whose mercy is aboue all his workes, hayed his visitation in London, to the honour of his owne name and admiration of all men. The Citie of London the yeere ensuing viz. 1604. was cleared of all infection, and the other Cities of this Kingdom, most billages, and Mowises Corporate, more extreamely visited, and some by Proclamation prohibited from comming to London, and it was Christianly obserued in the yere 1604. in the which it pleased Almighty God, to visite the whole land with Pestilence (London only excepted) that all those places, were vsed, or not at all visited, with the yeere before had relieued the distressed, there died in London, and the Liberties thereof, from the 23. of December 1602. vnto the 22. of December 1603. of all diseases, thirty eight thousand, two hundred sixty seuen; whereof of the plague, thirtie thousand, fiue hundred seauenthe, and eight: the next March following, against the time, the King should ride in triumph through London, to behold the state and beautie thereof beeing the Clergye, Nobilitie and chiefest Gentry, of euery Countrey, and great numbers of Strangers from beyond Seas, there repaired thither such great multitudes of people from all places, as the like in London was neuer seene vntill that day, all which notwithstanding, there died that yeere of all diseases within London, and the liberties of London but foure thousand, two hundred, sixtie and three: for euerlasting remembrance whereof, I beseech thee right Christian reader, to note the sweete mercy of our most gracious God, in so speedy and fatherly staying his hand of Iustice from greater or longer punishment of this Citty and Kingdome, hauing so many wayes sinned, and incessantly prouoked his wrath and indignation, as well in wilfull, and forgetfull ingratitude, as in outward pride of habit, Gluttony, and all other sinnes. It is most evident by the plain testimony of very many Chronicles, that other Cities and Kingdoms, for the like transgressions, haue beene more seuerely punished not only by Pestilence, but with extreame famine, spoiled by the enemies, ouerwhelmed with swaine inundations, vtterly consumed by fire from heauen, swallowed quicke with Earthquakes, and deuoured by wild beastes, and for yet better satisfaction hereof I thought good to recommend vnto thy good consideration a briefe abstract of former vniuersall Pestilences, and mortalitie as followeth:

There died in one weeke within the liberties and the adioyning parishes. 7094.

Aboue all things temporall, it is the corruption of humane nature and the daily practise and instigation of our ancient enemie Satan Prince of this world, to hearken and encline more to worldly pleasures, and the vaine attempts of Kings, in their lust, and wilfull conquests and actions, being farre more delighted with the remembrance of their owne follies and deuices, then any way desirous to be reformed or to note the sinnes of former Ages, and Gods iust visitation for the same: to put them in minde, and feare of the like or worse punishment: thereby to cause them to auoyd sinne, and to grow more penitent: in Christian charitable consideration whereof, sith at this day all sinnes are as great and notorious in all sorts of people as in any former age, I haue thought good for discharge of my dutie, and for prescient vnto our selues, and successors to shew one of the great visitations of Almighty God, vpon the world for sinne: you shall therefore vnderstand, that in the yeere of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ, 1346. was the conjunction of three superiour Planets in the signe of Aquarius, of which conjunction the

the Astronomers sayd Saturne was Lord, the like conjunction hauing beene diuers times before seene, and their influence obserued, but the diuine Iustice of God, for sinne in so short space like the deluge, was not like vnto this wonderfull pestilent mortalitie, which began this yeere, in the East part of the world towards Cataya, the higher India, and in their bordering confines, and towards the great Sea, there fell a pestilence amongst all sorts of people, of all ages estates, degrees, and seres, they at first began to spit of bunnt blood, and so died soundly of within two or three dayes, and it happened, that such as kept or attended any of these infected persons became also presently infested with the same corruption & sickines: and died in like manner, this sickneste was discerned by seuerall signes either in their fingers, or some other part of their bodies of such as were infected, and by such tokens it was generally obserued and knowne: this strange and terrible pestilence by little and little was spread from people to people, and from Countrey to Country, almost ouer the third part of the world, and namely ouer all Asia, and at last it was into the nations of the great Sea, and alongst the coast of the said land Sea, and was continued with Syria, Turkye, Egypt, the Red Sea, and from thence it came into the North parts of Russia, Grecia, Armony, and their bordering Prouinces, and at this time it was most extreame in Italy, and diuers other Countries, whereunto sundry shippes and Galleys, with their goods and Merchandize, and sayled into Islands, and into the maine Sea, hoping thereby to haue escaped this vnheard of Pestilent mortalitie, whereof many died at Sea, and the rest wheresoeuer they arriued brought with them the furie of that infection and gaue it vnto such as conuerst or kept company with them, but not all in generall, by this time as God had appointed, this mortalitty was spread ouer all the parts of Africa, and the Leuant Sea, & after that by time and time, a little, and a little, it also possest the West parts of Europe, it ran also into the South countries where it assailed them in more sharpe manner then in other places.

Christ the consolation hath beene diuers times before, but continued not so long, as the effect of this consolation continued almost 16. yeares.

Such houses and Ballaces as were infected with this noysome Pestilence made Saints or sanctuaries for more safetie from the Murderers vnnatural.

And in the yeare 1348. were likewise heauily infected all Italy, as also Italy, the Alpes, and also Germany, where few perished, and vnto the dead Sea, as also the Kingdomes of France, Spayne, and Granada: and in the yeare 1349. it came into England, Scotland, Ireland, and other Ilands of the West, and into the Low countries with like infectious mortalitty, Brabant onely excepted, where it did sin all offence, and in the yeare 1350. it spred ouer Friseland, Egipt, Denmarke, the Goths Vandals, and other people and nations Northwards and in that place where this deadly Pestilence came, the people began to know it, by their observation and experience, that they could tell by feeling and seeling who was infected, as well of youth as aged persons, and so soone as they discouered any to be infected, all the rest would instantly flee from them, and leaue them helpeselfe, and by that meanes, very great numbers perished for want of succor, and things necessary which might haue escaped. This vnkind & cruell forsaking of one another, began first amongst the Turkes and Infidels, where the Parents forsooke their children, and the children their parents, brothers and sisters forsooke one another, the wife left her husband, and husband the wife, and this monstrous barbarous cruelties, which is strange to tell, was also very much vsed amongst Christians, some went into sweete and solitary places, where they thought themselues secure from hazard of infection, others kept and concealed themselues in their houses and Castles, keeping their ports and doores safe locked and guarded, being plentefully furnished with all manner of food and Phisicke: but all this did not any way preuaile or preuent Gods diuine Iudgement, with whom locker nor guard neuer made any resistance, whereupon many became more kind and resolute and with a holy kinde of resolution, prepared themselues for death, and therewithall became kind, and seruiceable vnto the sicke, and ministred all things needfull vnto them, and by that meanes very many recouered health, and became secure, and then they shewed like kindnesse vnto others, in which Christian course, it pleased God to bestow their indeauors, and very many of them were healed by helping one another, the fury of this fierce mortalitty, wherefoeuer it came, it lasted vsually fiue moneths viz. from Aprill to September, the Phisitians in all places were vtterly confounded in their iudgements concerning the cure of this disease, either by naturall Philosophy, Astrology, or art, they could not finde any argument either for remedy or preuention: yet neuertheless there were certaine that for the getting of great summes of money, would vndertake and attempt to cure the diseased, and secure the whole, but fayled in both, and themselues perished, but very honestly restored backe all such summes as they had receiued.

Many wise could neuer preuent Gods will.

Touching the Originall of this disease, some write, that a little before it beganne, in the parts of the higher Asia, there issued out of the earth, or fell from heauen a mighty fire, which stretched toward the West, which burned and consumed great Countries, and that from the stench of this fire grew the matter of corruption, which breede this generall pestilence, but this opinion was least beleeued, but others of greater credit, write that in the Citie Lanchen, it rained Snakes and Blood, three dayes and three nights together, wherewith the whole Countrey was infected, and in that Mempell, part of Mahomets Temple was beaten downe, and part of his Sepulcher broken, during the extremitie of this sickneste, Pope Clement the first, gaue pardon vnto all that confessed their sinnes, and were contrite, and whilest this heauy mortalitie lasted euery Christian became zealous, deuout and penitent, preparing to yeeld their soules to God, and by seeing the visitation of Almighty God, vpon their Countrey, Kindred, friends, and neighbour Nations, became very Religious, with fasting and prayer, patient, humble, and mercifull, thus was it for a time with those whom it pleased God to preserue from this pestilence, but they perished not long in that piety for in many Countreys to some as they perceiued the mortality to cease, they inclined their hearts and actions quite contrary and ran vtterly into worse course of life then formerly, and like vnbridled horses ran headlong into all manner of disordered life, and voluptuous nesse, giuing themselues ouer to pride, cloth, lust, dunnekennesse, and enuie, and became extreame fantastique in new deuices of their vsuall garments, which they studied to make rich & costly: these sins raigned as well in women, as in men, perswading themselues, that hence-forth they should neuer neede to till the earth, worke, builde houses, plant vines, or doe ought else that appertained vnto humane life: hauing, as they supposed, more store of fode, and all other necessaries left vnto them then they could spend whilest they should liue, and perswaded themselues likewise that they were now secure, the fury of Gods iustice being past, and that the hand of God being weary, forgetting the saying of the Prophet Esay, to wit, that the arme of God is neuer shortned, nor his hand wearied. Thus they secured themselues euery man accounting himselfe rich, inclined to sloth, & sought no more then what the earth brought forth, whereupon God sent a great and vniuersall famine, and in short space a greater scarcitie and want of apparell and all other necessaries, then was at any other time before this mortality: they also became contentious, falling at strife for euery matter and went to Law for possessions and other things, whereupon ensued sharpe wars in most nations, as may appeare by the seuerall Chronicles of all Kingdomes: of this you may reade more in many forraine authors, but most readily in the chronicle of the two brothers of Florence, viz. Signior Iohn Villano, and Matheo Villano, the first booke, and 12. 13. and 14. Chapters: and at this time presently after the Mortality was founded the vniuersity in Florence, by authozitie and consent of the Pope and Emperor.

In the yeere 1552 in Barbary the famine began to be wonderous great, whereupon Italy, France and Spaine vpon hope of receiuing gaine, transported so much coyne thither, that the Famine became so extreame in those Kingdomes and other places of Europe as there was but three ounces of bread to be allowed a man for a day.

The vniuersities of Florence founded

Two other great and vniuersall mortalities.

This foresayd Mortalitie, was one of the three greatest mortalities that euer happened since the great deluge so far as I reade: the other were in the time of Marcus Aurelius Antonius Emperour of Rome, in the yeere after Christ 171. the which began at Babylon in Egypt, it endured fifty Yeeres in the parts of Asia, whose fierce infection spread it selfe in horrible manner to destroy the Romish Legions in the East parts, and from thence it came into Rome where it brought destruction to her inhabitants the other was in the dayes of Gallus Hostilius, Aurelius, and Valerius, rulers of the Empire together with the extreame persecution of the Christians, the which began in the yeare of our Sauiour, two hundred fiftie and foure, and continued in diuers kindes, yet alwayes a cruell and incredible Pestilence ouer many Regions of the world, and continued for the space of fiftene yeares: by which mortality, as many Historicall Authors affirme, there perished in the people for sin, then did in the great deluge, by reason of the worlds great and generall enormitie which was not so in the dayes of Noah, & thus hauing said somewhat in order of sundry notorious and heauy visitations of Gods iuditie Iustice vpon the world for sin, all which haue happened since the birth of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ I haue likewise thought good, to giue a briefe touch, of some former Pestilent Mortalities, which were before the birth of our Sauiour Iesus Christ, thereby to put our selues and posteritie the more in remembrance that the sins of the world without true repentance, neuer escaped vnpunished. In Rome it rained bloud two dayes together, then followed a mighty Plague that yeere together, by which meanes Rome, and all Italy, was well nigh dispeopled: this raining of bloud was the yeare after the death of Asdrubal and Scipio the said Hannibal died 188. yeeres before the birth of our Sauiour Christ, (and within few yeeres after that, the Macedonians affliced the Romanes grieuously after that, the Romanes destroyed Corinth, and Carthage, both in one yeere, but by seuerall Armies, and vpon sundry occasions. In the time of Apius Claudius, viz. of Rome, fire hundred and twelue, there happened such a Plague in Rome, that the liuing could scarce bury the dead and the stench of the dead bodies, poysoned the liuing, yea the eye became so infectious, that for a good while after none durst come neere Rome.

188 yeeres after the birth of our Sauiour Christ.

And within a few yeeres after that, was a vniuersall plague in Africa, where there dyed thirtie thousand Romane soulduers in sundry garrisons, and ten hundreth and fourescore thousand of the African, and yet it ceased not there, but was dispersed further into other partes. I could set downe many other Pestilences, and mortalities and sundry great earthquakes, and extreame famine, slaughter of people, with the vtter spoyle of rich Cities, States, and strong Kingdomes, and diuers nations driuen from their habitations, by Serpents of sundry kinds, hornets frogs, toades and flies, but that I feare I should seeme to be tedious to the generall Reader, knowing that this is the most scoffing, Carping, respectlesse, and vnthankfull age that euer was.

Romulus betaketh himselfe to Rome in the yeare of the world 3961. and 3961. before the birth of our Sauiour Iesus Christ.

Rudolfus.

The twenty eight of March Charles Earle of Nottingham, Lord high Admirall of England, being accompanied and attended with one Earle, three Barons, thirty Knights, and many Gentlemen of note and quality, one Herauld, two Doctors of Physicke, besides thirty Gentlemen of his owne in clokes of blacke velues, fiue Pages in Cloaks of Orenge tawny Velues like to the rest of their apparell: he had also fourescore Yeomen in Liuery Cloakes of Orenge tawny cloath 6. Trumpeters in Orenge colour Damaske, and Liuery Cloakes of tawny cloth, and the Footemen in Orenge tawny velues:

An. Reg. 1604.

The Admirals departure into Spaine to take the oath for confirmation of the Articles of peace.

Velues: hee was well furnished with diuers Coaches and Chariots, very richly adorned, the like whereof haue not beene seene in former dayes.

The aforenamed Lord Admiral after fourteene dayes being at Sea, vpon Munday the 15. of Aprill, Stilo Anglicæ recouered the harbour of the Groyne, & there stayed a ship-board vntill the next day, at which time his Lordship and all his traine were as kindly and loyally entertained, as was possible, as well by the gouernour Don Lewis Conde de Caracena, and the other Magistrates of the Towne, as by the common people in generall, hauing formerly receiued expresse commandment from the King to doe their vtmost and best endeauours for the honour of their King and country during their abode at the Groyne, his Lordship solemnized the Feast of S. George, and was for that day onely serued by his owne seruants, and chiefe followers as is accustomed in England, but at all other times and places hee was altogether serued and attended by the King of Spaines Officers and others.

Many Noble Lords & Gentlemen of great account take the state vpon them for honour of the Feast.

The King kept his Court at Vallodolid, which is about three hundred English myles distant from the Groyne, and vnderstanding of the Ambassadors arriuall, in respect of his age & long trauaile, considered it was very conuenient for his Lordship and all his traine to rest and refresh themselues a while, before they set forward on their land iourney. The ninth day after their landing, the King sent a messenger vnto the Gouernour of the towne, signifying that Don Baltodor Aragon, Nephew to the Conde de terra nous, a man of speciall regard with the King, was vpon the way comming to salute the great Ambassador, who came accordingly: and declared that the King his Master expected his Lordships personall presence, with such other as he best pleased to bring along with him. And thereupon the English were numbred, and found to be about fiue hundred and fifty persons, and therewithall considering how vnable the Countrey was to sustaine them, through which they should passe, his Lordship abated part thereof, and sent some a ship-board with much of his owne prouision, as coaches, carriages, and diuers other things, whereof he should haue little or no vse, by reason the way was bad, and that the King had prouided more conueniently for them.

Friday the third of May, his Lordship being amply furnished all at the Kings cost with coaches, litters, mules mulets, and all other necessaries, that might serue for ease and pleasure for euery man, they set forward on their iourney, being in all respects and in all places, whersoeuer they came as kindly vsed as they were at their first arriuall, and continued the same vnto their departure at Saint Anderas.

The English as they trauailed were entertained into euery Towne, by the chiefe Rulers and Magistrates of the County, with great signes of gladnesse as appeared by their planting of high mayes with boughes, strawing the Streates with flowers, and decking their walles and windowes with their richest furniture. After 12. dayes trauaile, they came to Vallodolid, and there rested two dayes, and then his Lordship with the rettume were sent for by the Court being accompanied and attended thither with diuers Lords and others of chiefe estimation with the King: And by the way as they passed from Simancca, his Lordship was presented with a horse, wherein the King vsed to ride himselfe very gallantly furnished.

The passage into Vallodolid was wonderously replenished with Ladies, Noble women and Gentlemen in Coaches, being at least fiue hundred coaches of them, and a great many of Lords and others of honourable quality, highly mounted, attending the comming of the English into the Towne, whose extraordinary bauery on either part was at an infinite suppresse, and disgraced by an extraordinary shower of raine, which fell so suddenly & vnexpected, as it was a wonder to see, especially to raine hauing bin there in thy moneths before. After two dayes rest being at a hon'e of the Conde de Salua where his Lordship was most honorably entertained and attended in all respects: and during his abode there, was often visited by diuers, as well from the King and Queene, as from the generall Ambassadors there resident, viz. from the Emperour, the French King, the Dukes of Sauoy Florence, and Venice, and other great Lords both Spirituall and temporall, of the Kingdom of Spaine, and other regions. His Lordship being sent for to Court, diuers Dukes, Marquesses, Earles, and Barons, came to attend him, obseruing therein the best order and decorum they could, much people beeing assembled to behold them, and was receiued with the greatest state that might be, and by the King himselfe, he was extraordinarily entertained, respected and vsed all the while his Lordship abode at Vallodolid the King manifested great signes of his especiall good affection towards the English vpon sundry occasions, but chiefly and in the highest degree, he expressed it at the Christening of the young Prince, the Churching of the Queene, in seuerall processions before his Lordships lodging, where the King himselfe carried a burning Taper in his hand: their desperate hunting of the Bull, their play at Iocode Canas, the shew of his armed men, diuers sumptuous feastes, masses, and dauncing, at all which his Lordship and his followers were with all care and kindnesse prouided for, to their content, so as they might both see and obserue the same.

The very like accident happened vnto the Earle of Cherroyd and his company at Burgos.

At the deliuery of the presents by Thomas Knoll Esquier, the King and Queene came in person to view and receiue them with a very kind and Princely acceptation.

Presents sent to the King and Queene of Spaine.

The Presents were.

Fiue stately Hoyles with saddles and saddle-clothes, very richly and curiously embroydered, that is to say, three for the King, and three for the Queene.

Two Crosse-bowes with theakes of arrowes,

Foure fowling pieces with their furniture very richly garnished, and inlaid with plates of gold.

A couple of Lyme-hounds of singular qualities.

Thursday the 30. of May, being Corpus Christi day, his Lordship was sent for to Court in greater state then before: the English Lords Knights, and Gentlemen had gallant Coates provided for them, the Grandes and others of the Spanish Nobilitie accompanied them to Court, and brought them into a very large and spacious roome, which they called the Grand sala, at the upper ende whereof sate the King in royall Estate, who with great kindnesse arose, and entertained his Lordship, and caused him and the Ambassador Leiger to sit downe upon a forme on the left hand. The Grandes and nobles of Spaine were placed upon a forme on the right hand about two degrees lower: then was there brought before the King a little Table, and a Bible very reverently layd upon it, and with the same a Crucifixe: then the Archbishoppe of Toledo read the Oath, at part of which oath his Lordship held the Kings hands betweene his, and so the King kneeling layd his hands upon the Booke, and after his Oath, his subscribed to the aforesayd Articles formerly concluded upon.

The King of Spain sweareth to the former Articles.

The 7. of June, his Lordship with the rest of the English Nobilitie, tooke their leave of the King and Queene, in as kind and Royall manner as at any time before. In his returne to S. Anderas himselfe and all his traine, in all places, by all persons, were as kindly and respectively entertained and bred, and with as great manifestation of their love, as when his Lordship made his first arriuall: hee imbarked the 19. of June, and arryued at Portesmouth the 29. of June.

The Lord Admirall returneth.

Presently upon their departure from Spaine the Spaniardes published a Booke by authoritie, concerning the demeano; of the English in the Embassie, wherein they highly commended the graue and Noble behauiour of the Lord Ambassador, and other the Lords and Gallant Gentlemen of his company, and the sober and peaceable behauiour of all his seruants, friends and followers.

The generall behauiour of the English in Spaine.

The Earle of Hertfords voyage into Flanders to take the oath of the Archduke and Marchesse for confirmation of the Articles of peace

Upon Saturday the fourth of May, the hall at Greenwich being richly hanged with Arras, and a cloath of Estate being there erected: the Kings Maiestie standing there vnder, accompanyed with the Princes his children: the Duke of Holstein, the Duke of Lennox, and the most part of the great Nobilitie, both of England, and Scotland, created three Earles, one Viscount, and foure Barons, that is to say, Robert Cecill, Viscount Cranborne, Baron of Essington was created Earle of Salisbury.

The Lady Mary Christened.

First, the three Courts at Greenwich were rayled in, and hung about with broad cloath, where the proceeding should passe.

The childe was brought from the Queenes lodgings through both the great Chambers, and through the presence, and downe the winding staires into the Conduit Court: At the foot whereof attended a canopy borne by eight Barons, before which went the Officers of Armes, and diuers Willoppys, Barons, and Earles. The Earle of Northumberland bore a couered gilt Basen, after followed the Countesse of Worcester, bearing a Crysen couered with Lawne, which had thereon many Iewels of inestimable price.

Vnder the Canopy went the Countesse of Darby, bearing the child, and the Lrs supported by the Dukes of Holstein & Lennox, the trayne of the Mantle was borne by two of the great The Mantle was purple Velure. felt Countesses: then followed the Godmothers, the Lady Arabella, and the Countesse of Northumberland, after whom followed many Countesses, and other great Ladies.

At the entrance of the Chappell, stood the Doctor Neal Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted with Dean. Meuerthe Deanes of Canterbury and of the Chappell in rich Copes receiued the child, and bringing the child vnto the Trauerse: the Quier sung certaine Anthems, and the Lords tooke one side of the Rails, and the Ladies the other:

In the midst of the Quier was erected a most stately Canopy of cloth of gold, 12. foot square, within the which vpon a foote pace of foure degrees, stood a very rich and stately font of siluer and gilt, most curiously wrought with figures of Beasts, Serpents, and other antickeworks, and after a while the Gentlemen Vshers opening the barryers of the Canopy, the Lord Archbishop with the two Deanes entred the same, then followed the Countesse of Darby with the child, the Duke of Holstein Godfather, and the two Godmothers, attended on each side of the Font,

During the solemnitie of Baptisme, which in all points was fully read and performed according to the Church of England, naming the childe Mary, then the child was carryed backe into the Trauerse, and the God-father and Godmothers ascending, offered at the Altar. The Lord Almoner bishop of Chichester receiued their offerings. Doctor Watson.

Then the Earle Marshall, and the Lord Chamberlaine placing Seager Garter, principall King of Armes betweene them, Master Garter making low reuerence vnto the Kings Maiesty, who stood in the closet windowe, began to pronounce with a loud voyce, these words following.

The childes name ordained & pronounced. Almighty God of his infinite grace, and goodnesse, preserue & blesse with long life, in health, honour, and all happinesse, this high and right Noble Lady Mary, daughter to the most high and mighty Prince, Iames by the grace of God, King of great Britaine, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, and of the most excellent Princesse Queene Anne, Amen.

Which being ended, then the Gentlemen Vshers, and Seruers, brought in a voyde of wine and confections, & the trumpets sounded, the whole trayne returned the same way and order that they came, hauing that the gifts of their Godsips were carryed by six Earles.

Richard Haydock, of New Colledge in Oxford, a professed Phylitian pretended to preach in his sleepe, and hauing an imperfection in his vtiall or dayly speech, yet by his nightly practise practise in his priuate chamber, hee attained a very good delinery of his mind, and carried himselfe so cunningly, that hee would often come in his priuate chamber, to preach in his sleepe. And being diuers times heard by such as were neere him, who though they called or spake vnto him neuer so oft, or earnestly: yea though they stirred or pulled him by the hands and feete, &c. yet would hee make no manner of answere at all, but perfitt smoothly on, keeping his countenance: whereupon his fame was spread throughout the land, by the name of the sleeping preacher: at last the King commanded him to bee brought to the Court, where his Maiestie sate vp the most part of the night, attending the event, and at length, the seeming sleeper began to pray: then pronounced a text, made his diuision of his text: and applying it to his purpose, for in his preaching he vsed to inueigh against the Pope, against the Crosse in baptisme, and against the last Canons of the Church of England: and hauing ended his Sermon seemed to continue sleeping: his Maiestie hauing throughly obserued, what hee had there heard and seene, departed to his lodging, and within few dayes after called the sayd Haydocke before him: after some conference, the King in his Princely wisedome discouered all his drifts, and practise. The offender being no way able to Iustifie himselfe, acknowledged his abuse vnto God, to his Maiestie, and the world, and humbly besought mercy of his Maiestie: the King most graciously pardoned him conditionally, that in all places hee would acknowledge and confesse his offence, because the people greatly supposed, and many verily beleeued, his nocturnall preaching was either by inspiration or by vision,

And vpon May day the said Haydocke came to Lambeth, and acted particular forgiuenesse, of the most reuerend Father in God Richard Bancroft, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

Words of the sayd sleeping Preachers confession: copied by the originall of his owne hand.

I doe in the naked simplicitie of a thankfull, and most penitent heart ingeniously confesse, and acknowledge, that this vse of my nocturnall discourse, seeming to bee in a sound and dead sleepe, when indeed I was waking and had perfecter sence of that I conceiued, and spake, then when by day I attempted the same, was from the beginning, a voluntary thing done with knowledge, vpon a discovery in my selfe of a greater abilitie and freedome of inuention, memory, and speech in that milde quiet, and silent repose of the night: then in the day time I found.

Vpon Whit-sunday, the 19. of May, the Queenes Maiestie was Churched, in manner and forme following.

The Queene Churched.

First the King accompanied with the most part of the Peeres of the Realm, went into the Closet, and there heard a Sermon preached by Doctor Watson, Almner Bishop of Chichester, from thence he went solemne into the Chappell, and offered. When withdrew himselfe into a rich trauerse on the right hand of the Altar.

Then came the Queene from her lodging, and went into her Closet, and staying there a while, with a great Trayne of Ladyes, was brought from thence into the Chappell by the great Lords, supported by the Dukes of Holsteyne, and Lenox, and being come before the Altar, thee made low reuerence, and offered her besant, and then went into the Trauerse which stood on the left side of the Altar, and after the vsuall prayers and thanksgiuing for her health, and safe delinery, according to the booke of the Common Prayer, and sundry Anthemes sung with Organ, Cornets, Sagbot, and other excellent Instruments of Musicke.

The King and Queene came both forth of their Trauerses, and met before the Altar, and imbracing each other with great kindnesse, went hand in hand together, vntill they came to the Kings presence Chamber doore, where they parted, doing great reuerence each toother. And the same day the King dined openly in the presence Chamber, accompanied with the Archdukes Ambassador, Prince Henry and the Duke of Holsteine.

Twelue Knights made.

Upon Wednesday following, in the afternoone, the King made twelue Knights, that is to say, Sir John Mewes, of the Ile of Wight, Syr William Kirkham of Deuonshire, Sir Ambrose Button of Hamphire, Sir Robert Payne of Medlow in Huntingtonshire, Sir Hugh Plat of London, Sir Edward Cope of Northamptonshire.

Sir Henry Mallery of Tambridgeshire, Sir Hals of Deuonshire, Sir Anthony Wildgoose of Kent, Sir John Lee of Surrey, Sir Robert Albancy of Surrey, Sir John Fitz-Williams of Berkshire.

Duke Vlrick returneth to Denmarke.

Saturday the first of June, the Kings Maiestie, Prince Henry, and diuers Lords, Knights and Gentlemen, accompanied Duke Vlricke, to the Citie of Rochester, where he tooke shipping for Denmarke.

Petty Treason strangely discouered.

Anne Waters, through the often and importunate perswasion of a certaine louer of hers, at length consented with him to kill her husband: and thereupon her lustfull louer and his man, with her consent, strangled the husband of the sayd Anne by night, and buried him as secretly in a Cow-house, and vnder the Cow-baighill: within few dayes after, the dead man was generally mist by his neighbours: vnto whom the wife made seuerall answeres and reports: but within fourteene dayes it chanced that one of the inhabitants of the Towne, dreamed that his Neighbour Waters was strangled, and buried vnder the Cowdung-hill in an out house: after he had thus dreamed diuers nights, he told his wife, how hee was nightly troubled in his dreames, which being presently told to other neighbors, the Constable searched, and found the dead body: then Shee vtterly denied her guiltinesse vntill she saw no hope of life and then shee came penitent, was Anne Waters committed to the Gaole, in Lancaster: for her louer and his man were fled, fled, and the 22. of August. 1608. she was condemned of petty Treason, and burned: Barons Altham, and Serieant Phillips, being then Iustices of the assize, for Lancashire.

This spring of the yeare, the King builded a wall, and filled up with earth, all that part of the mote of ditch, round about the West side of the Lyons den, and appointed a drawing partition to be made towards the South part thereof, the one part thereof to serue for the breeding of Lionnesse: when she shall haue whelps, and the other part thereof, for a walke for other Lions. The King caused also three trap doores to be made in the wall of the Lyons den, for the Lyons to goe into their walke, at the pleasure of their keeper, which walke, shall be maintayned, and kept for especiall place, to baight the Lyons, with Dogges, Beares, Bulles, Horses, &c.

Monday the third of June, in the afternoone, his Maiestie being accompanied, with the Duke of Lenox, the Earles of Worcester, Pembroke, Southampton Suffolke, Denonshire, Salisbury and Montgomery, and the Lord Hoskins, Captaine of his highnesse guard, with many Knights, and Gentlemen of name: came to the Lyons Tower, and for that time was placed, ouer the platforme of the Lyons, because as yet, the two Galleries were not builded the one of them for the King and great Lords, and the other for speciall personages.

A tryall of the Lyonesse quality.

The King being placed as aforesayd, commanded master Ralph Gyll, keeper of the Lyons, that his seruants should put forth into the walke, the male, and female breeders, but the Lions would not go out by any ordinary meanes, that could bee vsed, neither would they come neere the trap doore, vntill they were forced out, with burning Links, and when they were come downe into the walke, they were both amayed, and stood looking about them, and gazing up into the ayre, then was there two rackes of mutton throwne vnto them, which they did presently eate: then was there a lusty liue Cocke, cast vnto them, which they presently killed, and sucked his bloud, then was there another liue Cocke cast vnto them, which they likewise killed, but sucked not his bloud.

After that the King caused a liue Lambe to bee easily let downe vnto them, by a rope, and being come to the ground the Lambe lay vpon his knees, and both the Lyons stood in their former places and only beheld the Lambe, but presently the Lambe rose vp, and went vnto the Lyons, who very gently looked vpon him, and smelled on him, without signe of any further hurt, then the Lambe was very softly drawne vp againe, in as good plight as he was let downe.

A Lyon baited with Dogge.

When they caused those Lyons, to bee put into their denne, and another male Lyon only to bee put forth, and two lusty mastiffes, at a by ooze, to be let into him, and they flew fiercely vpon him, and perceiuing the Lyons fierce to bee so defended with haire, as there they could not hurt him, sought onely to bite him by the face, and did so, then was there a third Dogge let in, as fierce, as the fiercest one of them, a brended Dogge, tooke the Lyon by the face, and turned him vpon his backe, but the Lyon spoyled them all, the best Dogge, dyed the next day.

Saturday, the 15. of June, Thomas Dowglas was committed to the Tower of London, having Irons vpon him, and but three dayes before arriued in England, being sent prisoner by the County Palatine of the Rheme.

Tho. Dowglas committed to the Tower.

Vpon Wednesday, the twenty first of June, the foresaid named Thomas Dowglas, was brought from the Tower, vnto the Sessions house without Newgate, and there arraigned, and condemned of high Treason: and the next day was drawne on a Hurdle into Smithfield, and there hanged, and quartered, who at his death acknowledged, and confessed, all that to be true whereof he was Indicted, and Conuicted, and protested before God, that there was not any one person, so much as accessory in any one point of his Treasons, the Abstract whereof followeth.

Tho. Dowglas arraigned.

First, whereas the last yeare Iames Steward was executed for counterfeiting the Kings hand, thinking thereby, to haue procured the great Seale of England, vnto a forged Letters Patents, for the passing and conueying of an hundred markes by the yeare, of Crowne land vnto himselfe, you shall vnderstand that this Dowglas was his Councellour, and Coadiutor, who seeing the foresayd reward apprehended, presently prepared himselfe to gaine wealth, or preferment, by deuice of forraine Employment.

And whereas at first he pretended, to haue obtained the Kings Priuy Signet, from the Lord Secretary of Scotland, by meanes of his brother, that then serued the Lord Secretary. The sayd Dowglas, after his conuiction confessed, that in truth he caused the sayd Priuy Seale to be counterfeited, and therewith sealed fiue letters, vnto fiue Princes of Germany, counterfeiting the Kings hand to euery one of them, and changing his name, in diuers of them.

For as much as all gifts and graces, proceede onely from God, and that his mercy and benefits haue bayly encreased more and more, whereof euery man is bound, in Religious duetie, to acknowledge euery particular, &c. (especially such as haue the trust, to Register the same, to the honour of whose inestimable goodnesse, and discharge of my duty, being intrueth, the reason of Originall Chronologie.) hauing already in the forty fourth yeare of Queene Elizabeth, mentioned the royall benefit, and Art of Nauigation.

The first knowledge, and comming of diuers things into England.

I haue here thought good to set downe, the Inuention of diuers things in this latter age, together, with the great encrease of generall Commerce, and the vnimaginable enlarging of London, and the Suburbes, within the space of fifte yeares.

Inuention of letters and Characters.

But that it is my meaning, to auoide tedious nesse, I would set downe, the seuerall opinions of the Christians, who differ in opinion amongst themselues, and of heathen writers, touching the deuising and inuenting, of Characters, and Letters, being things that brought the generall knowledge of Philosophie, succession of times, Estate, and Arte, which some say, was first inuented in Assyria, some say in Egypt, some say in Italy, others say in Greece, and about the time of Abraham and Iob, and that three was but seuentene Letters then in vse, neither had they then the vse of knowledge of Printing Inke, or of Paper, but onely writ vpon leaues of date trees, and such like, whereof to this day, the word leafe, or leaues of bookes tooke originall.

Goyn leaues in stead of paper.

And that the word Paper, taketh his name of a tree called papirus, whereof they then made paper, of the pap of rotten linnen, whereof it is now made, and that the word Carta in Latin, beareth the name of the Citie Cartago where it was first brought to perfection, and solde, the generall opinion of all Christians is, that Adam, and his sons before the flood were the first inuenters of letters, and Characters and so much by the way for letters Characters and Paper.

The first, and principall inuention which I according to my promise, will briefely set downe is, the singular Art of Printing, which rare and commodious Art, as Pollidor Virgill, affirmeth was deuised, by Iohn Catenburgus, a Knight of Germany, of the City of Maguntia, in the yeere of our Lord, 1442. and 16. yeeres after that, he deuised Inke to Print withall, in the yere 1458. at which time the professors thereof, and for diuers yeeres after, carried their letters by and downe sundry Prouinces, in bagges, hanging at their backs, and only printed in Noblemens houses, small pamphlets, Epistles, Epitaphs, and such like, vntill about the yeere, one thousand foure hundred and seauentie, as Raphaell Volateranus, and Don Pedro de Mexia, indifferently agree. There came two brethren out of Germany to Rome, and one Iohnton a Frenchman in their companies into Rome, and there set vp certaine printing presses the first, and the chiefe Bookes that was then printed, was S. Augustines Booke, De Ciuitate Dei, and Lactantius, diuine Institutions, this Art of all Artes, is the most kindest, vnto all men of Learning, desert, and qualitie, and most friendly vnto Poets, by meanes whereof, their eminence is encreased, and knowne which happily, else the flowing number of this time, might easily haue beene kept in equipage, with those of former ages.

There is at this time a booke, in the Popes Library, made onely of leaues of trees, plants, or hearbes, which is sayd to come from China, and hath in it Letters, or Characters of that Countrey, in which kingdome of China, as dayly experience sheweth vs, bee many fraile vessels, curious workemanshippe, and fine stuffes that are brought from thence, the people thereof to be ingennious, and skilfull in all handicrafts, yet notwithstanding, there is not any pregnant proofe, that they haue the true vse of Printing, but only certaine number of Letters or Characters as aforesayd, whereof any one of them, with little difference they make it serue, and signifie diuers things, albeit some haue held an opinion that the Chinyans haue had the full number of Letters answerable to the largest Alphabet, with Inke, and Paper, and full perfection of Printing, for more then a thousand yeeres past.

Guniues and Gunpowder.

About the same time, and in the same Countrey where and when Printing was first deuised was also Inuented, the making of Guns, and Gunpowder.

Wine.

In the time of Henry the eight, and Edward the first, Vinteners and Tauerners houses, were not in any such measure, manner nor plenteous store and variety of wines of all Nations in any one mans house, as now at this time there is in euery Vinteners house, for in those dayes wholesome Well-tasted Claret, and red Wine, sold at three Pence the Gallon, the Dutch then sold salt Rennish Wine, as now they doe, and at that time, when Anne of Cleeue came with Greeke and Spanish Wines, Sir Sutcliffe, Chalmley, Greene, and Ballard, the Apothecaries of London then went into those Merchants, and euery man bought such Hundreds, Tonnes, and Hogsheads of those rich Wines, as they thought they should receyue in the Cittie, vnto such as vsually bought of them only for Physicke, and for the Communion Table, and for Speciall Country Chapmen that dwelled in Cities or Speciall good Townes, who likewise solde them againe in the Country for the vse of the Communion, and vnto aged, and sicke persons, and the generall phrase of the people in all Shires at that time was, when I goe to such a City or such a Market Towne, I will goe to the Vintners and buy some Wine.

In the second yeere of Queene Elizabeth, one thousand fiue hundred and three, her Silke woman Mistris Mountague, presented her Majestie, with a payre of blacke knit Silke stockings, for a new yeeres gift, the which after a few dayes wearing pleased her Highnesse so well, that shee sent for Mistris Mountague, and asked her where she had them, and if shee could helpe her to any more, who answered saying I made them very carefully of purpose only for your Majestie, and seeing these please you so well, I will presently set more in hand, do so quoth the Queene, for indeede I like silke stockings so well because they are pleasant fine & delicate, that henceforth I will weare no more cloth stockings, and from that time vnto her death, the Queene neuer wore any more cloath hose, but only silke stockings, for you shall vnderstand that King Henry the eight, did weare only cloath hose, or hose cut out of all broade peeces of Taffaty, or that by great chance, there came a payre of Spanish silke stockings from Spaine, King Edward the first had a payre of long Spanish silke stockings sent him for a great present, Dukes Daughters then wore Gownes of Satten of Bridges, vpon solemne dayes, Cuthens, and window pillowes of Veluet, and Damaske, &c. were onely vsed in the houses of the chiefe Princes, and Peeres of the Land, though at this day those Ornaments of Estate and other Princely furniture, be very plenteous in most Citizens houses, and many other of the like rankie.

Cushens, Pyonts, quilts and bolsters.

In the yeere 1564. Guilliam Boonen, a Dutchman, became the Queenes Coachman, and was the first that brought the vse of Coaches into England.

Coaches.

And after a while, diuers great Ladies, with as great Jealousie of the Queens displeasure, made them Coaches, and rid in them vp and downe the Countries, to the great admiration of all the beholders, but then by little and little, they grew vsuall among the Nobilities, and others of sort, and within twentie yeeres became a great trade of Coach making.

The first Earle of Lincolne that had a Coach.

Long waggons.

About that time, began long Waggons to come in vse, such as now come to London, from Canterbury, Norwitch, Ipswich, Glocester, &c. with Passengers, and commodities.

Carriers.

Lastly, euen at this time 1605. began the ordinary vse of Carroches.

The first vse of Carroches.

In the third yeere of the Raigne of Queene Elizabeth, 1562. began the knowledge and wearing of Lawne and Cambrike, which was then brought into England by very small quantities, and when the Queene had Ruffes made thereof, for her owne Princely wearing, there was none in England could tell how to starch them, for vntill then all the Kinges and Queenes of England wore fine fine Holland in Ruffes, but the Queene made speciall meanes for some Dutch woman that could starch, and Guilliams wife, was the first starcher the Queene had, and himselfe was the first Coachman.

Starching.

Dutch people come into England.

In the yeere 1563. at which time began the ciuill dissention, in Flanders, and very many Netherlanders fled into this land, with their wiues, Children, and whole Families, and that in such abundance, that whereas before their comming, faire houses in London were plentious, and very easie to be had at low and small rents, and by reason of the late dissolution of Religious houses, many houses in London stood vacant, and not any man desirous to take them at any rate, were all very suddainly inhabited, and stored with Inmates, to the great aduantage of the English Nation, and aduantage of Landlords, and Lease-mongers.

French people become into England.

London sodainly encreased.

And presently after that, beganne the great factions, and brawles in France, by reason whereof, very many Families fled into this land, and chiefly vnto London, all which together with the encrease of our owne Nation, who from that time, haue infinitely conioyned in marriage with Straungers, and the great Freedome, of Traffique, and commerce into France, Spayne Italy, and Turky, &c. that then, and foo many yeeres after, this Land enioyed, was, and is the maine cause of our encrease of wealth, and great Byppes, the vndecernable and new building of goodly houses, shoppes, sheds, and loadgings within the Cittie, in many vacant places, with the conuerting of the Cities Bulwarkes, into houses of pleasure, and the great and wondrous enlarging of the Suburbes, and skirts thereof, namely Ratcliffe, Limehouse, Rederiffe, and Southwarke, Shoredich, Whitechappell, and Saint Katherines, the new buildings about the Tolver Ditch, Holmdolditch, Petty France, Longlane, Great Saint Bartholomewes, Holborn, Chancery lane, and the Strand, Drury lane, now called the Princes Streete, the West side of Saint Martines lane, the building about Saint Iames Parke, with other new encrease of infinite buildings in Tuthill field, and on the South side of Westminster Abbey, besides many others in sundry other places.

Princes Street.

The great and sodaine enlarging of all the Innes of Court and Chancery.

The like may well bee iustified, by the ancient, famous, and honourable Innes of Court, and by their sufficient houses, cols, or Quinzies the Innes of Chancerie, the particular increase of euery one of the sayd Innes of Court, and Chancery, both in building, and students, is such and so great since the first yeere of Queene Elizabeth, vnto this present yeere 1614. that except some present, and speciall notice thereof be made, and carefully kept, it will seeme vnto after ages, impossible, and incredible that so manifold an encrease, should be in so short a space.

London in plenty of all commodities recouerly all other Cities.

Dangers from Egypt, Arabia, India, and diuers other places Silkes from Persia Spain, China, Italy, and many other Prouinces; fine linnen from Germany, Flanders, Holland, Artois, and Hainault war and tar, pitch, Tarre, Waxes, Cables, and Hony, from Denmarke, Poland, Swethland, Russia, and other Northen Countries, and the superfluities in abundance of French and Reynish Wines; the vnmeasurable, and vncomparable encrease of all which commodities, comming into this Cittie, and the encrease of houses, and inhabitants, within the compasse and tearme of fiftie yeeres, is such and so great, as were there not now two third parts of the people yet living, hauing bin eye witnesses of the premises, and the bookes of the Custome house, which remaine extant, the truth and difference of all things afore mentioned were not to be Iustified, and beleeued.

Fiue Yeeres not knowne.

Fellowes, or Haberdashers had not then any gloues imbroydered, or trimmed with Golde, or Silke, neither Golde nor Imbroydered Greek and Hangers, neither could they make any coftly wash or perfume, vntill about the fourteenth or fifteenth yeere of the Queene, the right honorable Edward de vere Earle of Oxford, came from Italy, and brought with him Gloues, sweete bagges, a perfumed leather Jerkin, and other pleasant things, and that yeere the Queene had a paire of perfumed Gloues trimmed onely with foure Rolles, or Roses of coloured Silke, the Queene tooke such pleasure in those Gloues, that she was pictured with those Gloues vpon her handes, and for many yeeres after, it was called the Earle of Oxfords perfume.

Cost six shillings.

After the Royall Exchange, which is now called the Eye of London, had beene builded two or three yeeres, it stood in a manner Empte, and a little before her Maiesty was to come thither to view the beautie thereof, and to giue it a Name, Sir Thomas Gresham, in his owne person, went twise in one day round about the vpper pawne, and besought those few shoppekeepers then present, that they would furnish, and adorne with wares, and wax lights, as many shops, as they either could or would, and they should haue all those shops so furnished rent free that yeere, which otherwayes at that time was fortie shillings a shoppe by the yeere, and within two yeeres after hee rayled that rent, vnto

foure marke a yeere, and within a while after that, he raised his rent of every shoppe, unto foure pound ten shillings a yere, and then all shops were well furnished according to that time, for then the Millioners, or Haberdashers in that place, solde Pouse-trappes, Bird Cages, Sponing-horns, Lanthornes and Jewes trumpes, &c. there was also at that time that kept shoppes in the upper pawne of the Royall Exchange, Armorours, that sold both olde and new Armor, Apothecaries, Booke-sellers, Goldsmiths, and Glasse-sellers, although now it is as plentifully stored, with all kinde of rich wares and fine commodities, as any particular place in Europe, unto which place many forraine Princes daply send, to be well served of the best sort.

Cheape side.

At that time Cheapside, which is worthily called, the Beauty of London, was on the North side, very meanely furnished, in comparison of the present estate.

The first that openly taught starching in England.

In the yeere one thousand fine hundred sixty and foure, Mistris Dinghen, van den plasse, borne at Mænen in Flaunders, daughter to a worshipfull Knight of that Province, with her husband came to London, for their better safeties, and there professed her selfe a Starcher, wherein shee excelled, unto whom her owne Nation presently repaired, and imployed her, and payed her very liberally, for her worke.

Some very few, of the best and most curious wives of that time, observing the neatenesse, and delicacy of the Dutch for whitenesse, and fine wearing of linnen, made them Cambricke Ruffes, and sent them to Mistris Dinghen, to starch, and after a while they made them ruffes of Lawn, which was at that time, a stuffe most strange, and wonderfull, and thereupon rose a generall scoffe of by-word, that shortly they would make Ruffes, of a Spiders Web, and then they began to send their Daughters, and neatest kinswomen, to Mistris Dinghen, to learne how to starch, her usuall price, was at that time, foure or five pound, to teach them how to starch, and twenty shillings how to seeth starch.

This Mistris Dinghen was the first that ever taught Starching in England.

The Bandora devised.

In the fourth yere of Queen Elizabeth, John Rose dwelling in Widewell, devised and made an Instrument with wyer strings, commonly called the Bandora, and left a Son, far excelling himselfe in making Bandores, Voyall de Gamboes, and other Instruments.

The first making of wouen stockings in England.

In the yeere, one thousand fine hundred sixtie and foure, William Rider, being an apprentife with Master Thomas Burder, at the Bridge foote, duer, against Saint Magnus Church, chanced to see a paire of knit Worsted stockings, in the lodging of an Italian Merchant, that came from Mantua, bespreaded those stockings, and caused other stockings to be made by them, and these were the first woollen stockings made in England.

The Earle of Pembrooke the first nobleman that ware woollen stockings.

Within few yeeres after, began the plentuous making both of Gersey, and Woollen stockings, and so in short space they waxed common.

Merchants sold by retaile.

The Dutch Merchants, who onely at that time sold Lawne and Cambricke, did cut and retayle, unto all shoppe keepers, both Lawne and Cambricke, by ells yeards, halfe ells, and halfe yeards, for there was not then one shopkeeper amongst forty, durst buy a whole peece, either of Lawne or Cambrick, and at that time there was not so much Lawne, and Cambricke to be had in all the Merchants houses in London, as at this day may easily bee had in one Linnen drapers shop.

Within few yeeres after, diners Noble personages, and other of speciall note, made them Ruffes, a full quarter of a yeard deepe, and 12. Lengths in one Ruffe: this fashion in London, was called the French Fashion, but when Englishmen came to Paris, the French knew it not, and in derision called it the English monsker.

The first use of the diffaffe in England.

And whereas untill about the twelfe or thirteenth yeere of Queene Elizabeth the auncient English fight: of Sword and Buckler, was onely had in use; the Bucklers then being but a foote broad, with a pike of foure or five inches long then they began to make them full halfe ell broad with sharpe pikes ten or twelve Inches long, wherewith they meant either to breake the Swords of their enemies, if it hit upon the pike or els suddenly to run within them and stabbe, and thrust their Buckler with the pike into the face, arme, or body of their adversary; but this continued not long, every Haberdasher then solo Bucklers.

The old Engl. fight was Sword and Buckler.

Long tucks, Rapier and dagger.

For shortly after, began long Tucks, and long Rapiers, and he was held the greatest Gallant, that had the deepest Ruffe, and longest Rapier: the offence to the Eye of the one, and the hurt into the life of the Subiect, that came by the other: caused her Majestie to make Proclamation against them both, and to place Selected graue Citizens, at every gate to cut the Ruffes, and breake the Rapiers points, of all passengers that entended a yeard in length of their Rapiers, and a naple of a yeard in length of their Ruffes.

The Queene much offended by wearers of Rapiers.

Walter John Tyce, dwelling neere Shoreditch Church, the first Englishman that deuised, and attayned the perfection of making all manner of Tufted Taffeties, Cloth of Tissue, wrought Velvets, branched Sattins and all other kinds of curious silke stuffes.

Velvet and silke stuffes made by Englishmen.

In the yeere 1599. was deuised, and perfected the Art of knitting, or weauing silke stockings, Waistcoates, and diuers other things, by engines, or steele Loomes, by William Lee, master of Arts, of Saint Johns College, in Cambridge, and after that hee went into France, where hee obtained a Patteut of the King, and there taught them that Mistery, his seruants were entertained in forraine Nations, as in Spayne, Venice, and in Ireland, and in other places, where they taught the secret of their Art, and so it went through the world.

A newe kind of weauing.

And albeit the making & weauing of woollen cloth in England, be very ancient, and beyond record, yet it is most certaine that the English weauers neither did, nor could make sufficient cloth to serue the English Nation, for which cause in the 2. yeere of Edward the third there was special permition, and liberty giuen, for the bringing in of forraine Clothes to serue this land. After that, the King drew in Dutchmen and Frenchmen, and made them teach his native people a more perfection of cloth making, and then the King restrained all his wool from being transported upon great penalties, and prohibited, the bringing in of any forraine cloathes upon paine of forfaiture, within few yeeres after that, came many Weauers out of sundry Prouinces, and dispersed themselues into diuers parts of this Realme. In the first yeere of Richard the third, began the making of cloathes full two yardes broad within the list, which before were but seauen quarters and vnder, and the said Size of seuen quarters of all broad clothes, was confirmed in the 27. yeere of Henry the 8. About the 20. yeere of Henry the seuenth, Anthony Bonvise an Italian came into this land, and taught English people to spin with a distaffe, at which time began the making of Denonthire Kersies, and Cotall clothes.

Anno Reg. 3. seuenteene Scottish ministers, contrary to the Kings expresse command, held a solemne assembly at Aberdeene in Scotland, who being for the same conuented before the Councell of Scotland, vtterly denied, not only their Lord. Bishops authoritie in that behalfe, but the Kings also, saying, that in matters Ecclesiasticall they neither owe, nor ought to acknowledge themselues in any subiection, either to the King or to any temporall Councell, and that all spirituall differences should be tried & determined by the Church, as competent Iudges, &c. iustifying their voluntary meeting to be good, and warrantable by the word of God, alleadging the great assembly of the Apostles, without knowledge or consent of any temporall estate, &c. for which riot, and for denying the Kings supremacie in causes Ecclesiasticall, six of the chiefe the 10. of January following, at Blackneste were arraigned and condemned of high Treason.

Sir Thomas Smith returned out of Russia about the twentieth of September, being the last yeere, by his Maiestie sent Lord Ambassador, with Commission vnder the great Seale vnto Borris Theodorowich the Emperor, vnto whom he performed the charge imposed, and became so gracious with the Emperor, that he fully obtained what soeuer he desired: and hauing dispatched his dispatch, he departed, from the great Citie of Moico, and came downe by Wlodga, vnto Vollogda, where he stayed till the yce brake vppe, in which space the aforesayd Borris died, and his sonne Theodor Borilowich succeeded, vnto whom all the Nobilitie and State swore fealtie vpon knowledge whereof, the Lord Ambassador speedily dispatched his letters, which the yong Emperor most kindly accepted, and detained present with me, he would willingly write what euer his Father had promised: which sayd Theodor lyued also withe in the space of eight weekes after his Father, and Demetrius his brother, came to the assistance Duke Wasilowich the second, which said Demetrius hauing in armes against both the Emperors aforesayd, presently vpon the arriuall of his Lord Ambassador, [illegible]

Idus and amitie with King Iames of England, aboue all Kings in the world, promising, that when his Daughter was Crowned, hee would send his especiall Ambassador vnto King Iames. This message was deliuered when the Ambassador was come downe to Archangell to be imbarked for England, but contrary to his purpose and promise, the ancient diuine prouerbe was fulfilled in him, to wit, Man purposeth and God disposeth: being by vntimely death and his Countries disquiet, not only preuented of the premises, but of lundry others his Kingly determinations: concerning the manner of whose death, with the death of Borris and his sonne, and the aduancement of a third person to the Imperiall throne, all which happened within the space of one yeere, hereafter followeth, with some other things of note, which happened of late yeares in Ru[illegible]

A briefe relation of Russia.

The Estate of Russia, and the death of their Emperours in one yeare.

After the death of Basilius, great Duke of Moscouia succeeded in the regall throne, Knez Euan Vassiliwich, his onely Sonne and heire apparant, who in processe of time married seuen wiues, but the issue he had was only by two of them. the first whereof brought forth two male children, Euan and Theodor, who after was Emperor, by the latter wife yet liuing, hee had the Prince Demetrius, who afterwards was sayd to haue beene slaine by the procurement of Borris. Phedrowich Godonou, a man though of a meane descent, yet at length obtained the Crowne, which hee had long desires: whereof more God willing, shall bee sayd hereafter.

Knez Euan eldest son to this Emperor, liues to wife a Noble Gentlewoman, against whom his Father concealing dislike notwithstanding his former consent to the marriage, caused them to be diuorced, and that Noblewoman to become a professed Nunne: the Prince liued not long after, but died as it is thought a violent and vnnaturall death.

Theodor his second sonne espoused the sister of the aforesayd Borris Godonou, esteeming his desire aboue his dignitie, and with her liued all his life, notwithstanding that his father would haue done it like vnto his wife as he had formerly done by his eldest sons: but this man would by no meanes assent to his purpose, considering the weake ground of his fatherdetary.

Fiftie and foure yeeres swayed he the Emperiall Sceptre, in which time, what tiranies he wanted, what Countries he subdued, as also his fatherlie vertues and vices, would aske a larger discourse. This I say that he was the first that broke vpon him the name of Tcher, which is as much as Emperor, clayming that title by the conquest of Cazan, and Astracan, they say the Kings Interpret hee brought presents in abundance Britaine, and Poland, Holdeers Celtic, and that [illegible] hee [illegible] he [illegible] he [illegible] his [illegible] his second [illegible] yeares, eldest eldest liuing: ouer whom for his great imbecillitie, and weake capacity, vnable to gouerne so large Territories, (especially where the Princes word is a Law, and his Commaund a Statute.) His father ordayned foure principall Noblemen, to whom he committed as well the care of his son, as the charge of the Kingdome: but little enioyed these Noble personages their rule or their liues, being soone after bereaued of both, by the Lord Borris, brother in Law to the Emperor, who now began to flourish, and by meanes of the Empresse his sister, became at length to be the master of the house (the principallest place of honor in that Countrey) and consequently the onely man in all the Empire.

But his aspiring thoughts, not contented with that alone, aymed at no lesse then the Imperiall Crown, to which he must wade through streames of blood, as he did indeed, for first he practised against the lines of those foure Nobles, the Kings protectors, the one of them, Vncle to the Emperor that now raigneth, he caused to be smoaked to death: the second for feare became a Fryer: the third dyed of griefe, and the fourth being a man of small power, to hinder his intendements, he permitted to liue, yea, (and that his murthers might be the lesse suspected) he protected him against the rage of the Commons, who deadly hated him as the chiefe instrument of the last Emperors tyranny, whose especiall fauorite he was: a thing of note that called the cruelty of Borris, was Prince Demetrius, whole life denyed what the other desired: but within a while he was bereft thereof, by the procurement of Borris, at a Citie called Ouglets, distant from the Moico about 130. myles, the hate of whose death comming to the eares of his brother the Emperor, he bitterly bewayled the same three daies together, silly man not once dreaming, that he dyed by the meanes of Borris, who yet enioyed not the fruition of diuers, who gessed him the author of that cruell deed, whereof he hauing vnderstanding, knew no better meanes to driue men as well from deploring the Princes death (sayd to be slaine) as suspecting his truth, then to fire their houses in diuers parts of the Citie, which he secretly did, and afterwards to gratifie the people, caused their houses to bee built against at the Emperors charge, which so well pleased them, that whatsoeuer they thought, they ceased to murmure any more against Borris.

Fiftene yeeres raigned this Emperor Theodor, and dying without issue, left the Kingdome void of succession, which happened well for Borris, who was presently chosen King, by the generall consent of all men; but he denied that saluerly, which he wished intirely, yea, and he sayd further, that a Fryers cowle was fitter for him then a Kings Crowne, which hee vtterly refused to take vpon him, but hee well knew what his denyall would aduantage him, for whereupon the people cry, no King but Borris, who's wife and politique gouernment they had long experienced, desiring the Empresse to giue them her brother to bee their Emperour, then whom they knew no man fitter. This hauing wonne to condescend to their requests, he was elected, and forthwith Crowned Emperor of Russia, the Kingdome confirmed to him and his heires for euer: and by the way to speak somewhat of this Noblemans proceedings, in the whole course of his gouernment, as also of the qualitie and disposition of his mind, and body, sure it is that for naturall politie (for so I call and terme it in him, being vtterly voyd of litterall knowledge) few or none euer went before him, intricate his deepe deuises and subtile plots to obtaine the Crowne being at first but an ordinary attendant at Court, yet continuing to places of honour, spared nothing that he surmised might any way further his purpose, which at length effected as himselfe desired: louing and liberall he was to all that sued to him for fauour, and withall so affable, yet intermingled with grauitie, that he wrought both loue and feare in the hearts of his beholders.

Of countenance he was to his friends amiable and pleasant, but to his foes sterne and of a cruell aspect, which he would notwithstanding often times smother and restraine his passions vntill such time as hee obtained the Crowne, when he might with more boldnesse make his eyes the messengers of his heart, nor can I let passe as a slender point of wisedome and politicie in this Noble Prince, his loue to Strangers, especially (that it may bee sayd without lying) to the Englishmen, whom he preferred before all other nations whatsoeuer: but howsoeuer he was constant ouer the strangers, yet much suspected his owne people, and would often complaine of their falshood, whom (whether it were the experience he had of their inconstant dealing, or the torment of his owne guiltie conscience, I haue not to say) once hee tooke but little ioy in wearing the Crowne, especially towards his latter time, in which he seldome came abroad, which, and his insatiable coueteousnesse, now far greater then euer it was his former bounteе, lost him more hearts then euer he gained.

He had not raigned full three yeeres, but hee beganne to practise to make himselfe the Noblest, as well in blood, as estate, which how could by no meanes be, but by extirpating the houses and families of all that exceded him in noble race: and first hee began with a Gentleman of a royall descent, Competitor to the Crowne, suggesting by false accusations, many trecherous plots entended to haue bin practised by that Nobleman, his wife, his brethren, and all his allies, against his Crowne and dignity, yea and the lines alio of himselfe, and his Queene, and Prince, who should all haue beene destroyed by roots, and braches, which he was so ledged, those noble personages had procured to worke vpon by inchantment, how true it was the Lord knoweth, once those Gentlemen were miserably entreated: the eldest to saue his life became a Fryer, all the rest dyed in banishment onely the youngest still liueth, and is now restored to his former honor.

The murmuring of the Commons, for the wrong done to the Noble men, made Burris desist from offering further violence to others, who else, had no doubt, drunke of the same cup, yet he forbare not to oppresse the grudge he bare them without cause, by his seruile subiects on he kept them in, nor was himselfe free from iealous thoughts, allwayes ready to mistrust the worst by them: In briefe thus he reigned and thus hee lived the space of seauen yeres, at what time the threefolde yeeres of Famine (whereof for continuance in extremitie the like hath seldome beene heard of) were now ended, and that he thought himselfe secure on all sides allwell by peace with the Pole (whereto himselfe and the King were lately solemnely sworn for one and twenty yeres: as also beeing in teames of amitie with all other neighbouring Princes, to diuers of whom he had sent his Ambassadours for his childrens marriage, though nothing effected, and euen now when hee attended the answere of the King of Georgia, to whom hee had sent to the like end: Euen now came newes to the Psoico of Prince Demetrius who was sayd to be slaine, yet escaping away into Poland, came with foure thousand men onely to the borders, requiring aydes to recouer his estate usurped by Burris, the suit that came to him, were the fields Cazzacks, Souldiers both in warre and peace retained continually in the Emperors pay: and vnto whom, who so long as they were payed duly, serued faithfully, but now hauing their wages detained foure yeres together, through the wretched mind of Simeon Mekwich Godonowa, hating of a detected humour yet ouer-laden with honours by Burris, with whom by reason that all men feared his informations, wherewith he so often acquainted the Emperor, hee was the onely man in fauor, nor was the Souldiers salary detained without the consent, and peraduenture command of Burris, who towards his latter end was so led by the perswasions of this man, and withall thinking to redeeme his former misdeedes with large gifts to the Church, that hee altogether neglected those whom hee ought most to haue regarded: yea and rewarded for their faithfull seruice, and losse of their deerest blood, spent in the defence of his wurped title.

This occasioned his souldiers reuolt, who to the number of eight thousand, in good equipage went to the forsaid Demetry, who notwithstanding that his forces were small, yet he had store of treasure lent him by diuers Nobles of Poland, especially by the Palatine of Sendiuere, whose daughter hee promised to marry if he euer obtained the Crowne, besides hee was saluted by the boyarers with 50000. markes, a 10000. able horse, taking him for the true Prince Demetrius whatsoeuer he was, so much he relyed vpon his souldiers valour, and his pretended title that within two moneths he besieged and won many Townes, yea and with that handfull of men, had giuen the ouerthrow to Burris his army of 200000. sent against him, hadde not a stratagem of fiue hundred strangers amongst the Muscouians by giuing them a watch-word in the Dutch language prevented the same, by which policy the Cazzacks, but chiefly the Poles taking the most part for strangers whose valour they had after approued, turned their backes, and left the field. Demetry himselfe very narrowly escaping, yet would he not surcease his claims, but seconding his attempt, in fine, by the reuolt of Burris: his armie, he won the field and consequently the Crowne: but ere this newes came to Psoico, Burris who well perceiued how his peoples hearts were inclined, departed this life as it was thought by poyson, which his owne hands ministred vnto him, the 13. day of April. 1605 in the eight yere of his raigne.

The 11. of June following, his wife and son were openly shewed dead, smothered by expresse commaund from Demetry, till which they were effected to be denied to come to the Psoico, the chiefe and Imperiall Citie: The daughter of Burris onely remained aliue, who receiuing at Demetrys handes, 500. marks, and there withal a proffer of marriage with any one she would chose of the Nobles, she became a Nouall Nun in a Monastery farre from the Psoico.

Thus in lesse then foure moneths this supposed Prince ended his warre and begunne his raigne presently after: whose comming to the Psoico, the body of Burris was taken by out of the Sepulchre of the Russian Kings, where it was first layd together with his Queene and Prince, interred in an obscure place of buriall without either signe or monument of mourning or memory.

The 21. of July 1605. was this Conquerour Crowned by the name of Demetry Ivanowitch, and forthwith began to settle an estate of government according to his owne liking. Some after the Pope sent to him his Ambassador with a faire present, viz. a rich chaine and Crucifixe and a picture, as also foure stately horses, willing him to remember his promise, which (as it after appeared by the contract betwixt him and the Pope) was to establish Popery, allwell by fire as by faire meanes within the space of a twelvemoneth after his comming to the Crowne: what answere the Ambassador had is not knowne, but he was soone dismissed, and preparation made for receiuing the Palatines daughter of Sandiuere, assianced to the Emperour by his Ambassador lately returned out of Poland, in briefe she came to the Psoico with her father & brother, and a great traine to the number of 7000. persons, & hauing solemnly married, and the Crowned in the Cathedrall Church of our Lady, the 9. day after, this Demetry was Slaine, vpon the 17. of May, ending his Coronation, and with him to the number of 1100. Polonians sute for a bride honorably bid, and afterward sent to her fathers lodging, with whom as yet she remaineth in the Psoico.

The body of this false Emperor was dragged into the market place, where three dayes together it lay, for a spectacle to all that would view the same, and then he was carried out to be buried, and after burnt as as well for the hatred they bare him, reputing him as a counterfeit: as also for that the night ensuing his death, there fell so great a frost, that the coyne will neere two hundred miles about the Citie, was all spoyled, which they imputed to his sorcery, vsed as they say, allwell in death as life.

Foure dayes after was Kneaz Vassily Evanowich (who now raigned) elected Emperor, and forthwith Crowned, at whose hands as we English men haue receiued especiall fauours, so wee cannot but applaud his aduance: And thus haue you heard the briefe relation of those mighty Emperors, their liues and deaths: with the election and establishment of the fourth, all which happened within the space of thirteene moneths.

The Patriarch of Greece resigneth his Patriarchship and dignitie vnto the Archbishop of Psico.

In the yere 1588. the Patriarch of the Greeke Church, vpon priuate discontentment came from Chio, alias Sio in Greece, vnto the City of Psoico: And vpon seuerious consideration of twenty thousand pounds, hee not onely translated his Sea, but absolutely yeelded and resigned all his Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction and dignity from himselfe, and all his successors, and conferred the same vnto the Archbishop of Psico. Whereupon the Emperor of Russia, in his reuerend respect towardes his new dignified Clergie, not only allowed the alteration of the stile, and title of his Archbishop, who for many hundred yeeres before themselues highly graced with the ancient stile and title of Archbishop of Psico, but also ratified & confirmed the agreement betwixt the Patriarch and the Archbishop, and from that time the Archbishop and his successors, are and haue beene called the most holy Patriarch of all Russia, and for the more constant continuance, and better maintenance of their new established Patriarchie. The Emperour forthwith encreased his reuenues, landes, and possessions, and obtained vnder him foure Archbishops, whereas formerly there was only one Archbishop, and one Archbishop. And it is written from diuers Prouinces, that the old Patriarch aforesayd, who vpon discontent translated his Sea, and for some sold his spirituall promotion and Graces, within a while after as hee returned backe towardes Grecia, purposing with his money speedily to aduance himselfe, and his family, the Turkes robbed him and slew him.

The practise of blowing vp the Parliament house in Anno 3.

Whereas for more then thirtie yeeres of the raigne of Queene Elizabeth, especially during the hostilitie with Spaine: many English Iesuits incessantly solicited diuers forreine Princes, to attempt inuasion vpon England, retaining opinion amongst themselues, that the sayd diuision of the Queene, with other Christian Princes, was very auayleable for their generall good, allwell because it vnpeached any further proceeding against them, and their faction, as hopefull through continuall hostilitie and vexation of Warres, either to subdue the Kingdome, or force the Queene vnto toleration: whose sundry vnnaturall practises, and treasonable attempts remaine freshly in memory, and though many of those old plotters, and practisers be dead, whose deepe deuices neuer attained desired effect: yet are there others of more violent & fiery spirits sprung vp in their place, amongst which of most note are, Archer Croswell, Oliwell, Tesmond, and other Iesuites residing in forreigne parts, chiefly within the Dominions of Spaine, attending from time to time all opportunities to preferre, and solicite any thing tending to the disturbance of this State, and to that purpose in the highest degree: the parties aforesayd with others, in the last yeere of the sayd Queene, with the speciall ayde of Henry Garnet, a principall Iesuite, residing in England, procured Robert Catesby, and Francis Tresham Esquires, to send Thomas Winter Gentleman, vnto the King of Spaine, which sayd Winter vsed all meanes possible to intreate the sayd King, forth with to furnish a royall Nauy, for present inuasion vpon England, and to land his men in Milford hauen in Wales, promising the King by whom he should be receiued & seconded by the English Catholiques: and thereupon in consideration of their importunity and protestations, and the long continued open hostility with the Queene, he promised not only to make inuasion, but withall to send fifty thousand pound into England, to be disposed by the aforenamed Robert Catesby, and others for leuying forces, and making prouision against the time of inuasion: but it happened that whilest this b sinesse was in contriuing, the Queene of England dyed.

A practise vpon the death of the Queen.

In the moneth of March, in which the Queen dyed, Catesby sent Christopher Wright into Spaine, to negotiate with the King of the late purpose preferred by Winter, vnto whom the King answered, saying: Your olde Queene is dead, with whom wee had Warres, and you haue a new King, with whom wee haue euer been in good peace, loue, and amitie, and for confirmation of our mutuall continuance thereto, we haue sent our speciall Commissioners, and whilst wee see what will become of this Treatie, wee will not hearken vnto any other course whatsoeuer, leaning you to your best fortunes, and wishing as much good to the English Catholiques, as to our proper Subiects, &c.

This determination of the King, was nothing pleasing vnto Catesby, who perceiuing the peace likely to goe forward, without any fauourable clause, or Article, concerning the English Catholiques, and that the King of Spaine, and Archdukes fought onely their generall good, without any respect of him and his adherents, began to cast about againe, how o' themselues they might perfourme some domestique exployt, to ease them of their greeuances, sith all forreine friendship had forsaken them, and hauing recall himselfe to mind, who were the greatest Malecontents, and most resolute spirits, both at home and abroad, fit, tell for his purpose, burning in agony of spirit, vntill hee had, as he thought deuised some speedie way, either to restore the Catholique Religion, or eternize his name, as appeared by his his owne woords at his death: At last resolued himselfe, that now he had continued the onely meane, without the ayd of any forreine Prince, to change the State, and restoare the Romane Catholique Religion, hauing before received encouragement from Sir Wil. Stanley Knight, Hugh Owen gentleman, and William Baldwin Iesuite, remaining in the Low Countries, with direct notice of diuers others, most apt, and resolute Gentlemen, such as were familiar with extreamest stratagems, and ready to undergoe any hazard for the Catholike cause, all which notwithstanding, Catesby yet concealed his purpose from all men.

The Kings first Parliament ended in July, the second yeere of his raigne, wherein Catesby, Percy, Wright, and the rest, seeing therein nothing done to their ease or content, began to consider of such encouragement as they had receiued from Flaunders in June the yeere before: and Percy sware hee would undertake to kill the King, whereunto Catesby answered, if you doe kill him, it is to no purpose, in respect of the Generall cause, but stay a while, for I haue deuised a fairre fairer course, and readier way to effect what we desire, and that without the helpe of any forreine Nation: but as yet he did not impart his secret proiect to any man, vntill after the returne of Thomas Winter, whom hee sent to conferre with the Constable of Castil, being now in Flaunders, readie to come for England, to take the Kings oath for confirmation of the Articles of peace, agreed vpon by the Commissioners, all which being consummate, and the parties before named, observing that the purpose of this peace, was onely for the Vniuersall good of all Christendome, without respect of any particular place, or people, and therewithall noting the carelesse inclination of the Constable, to their desire, which was earnestly to moue the King of England in fauour of the Catholiques, as al o that the Generall peace would procure a continuall meane for their aduersaries, to procede at all times in any course whatsoeuer, against the English Catholiques, and prouent them of all hope of succour and sustentation from any forraine Potentate: and from thistime, one increased another, speedily to attempt some hope of remedy for themselues, by themselues: Percy more prone then diuers other, with a great oath, Kay, let vs now doe something, and not alwayes talke.

Catesby being now resolued to put in practise his long concealed proiect, being well assured he had found fit persons for his purpose, acquainted Thomas Piercy, Thomas Winter, John Wright and Guydo Fawkes, with his deuice, viz. to vnderminte the vpper Parliament house, and to blow it vp with gun-powder, at the very instant of the great assembly, the 7. of February next following, hauing before giuen them the oath of secrecy, which they as willingly embraced as his heart desired: and after that for more assurance of secrecy they receiued the Sacrament. This combustible combination thus concluded, each man prepares to doe his vtmost in the enterprise, like those headstrong Horses, of whom the Kingly Prophet speakes, bend themselues to run a deiperate course, respectlesse what misery might befall on King, Country, or Common Wealth, and if their deepe deuice, borrowed from the lowest hell, had taken effect, yet the chiefe purpose of their proiect, if well weighed, had beene neuer the nearer, but rather further of, with apparant likelihood of sudden slaughter of themselues, their faction and their friends.

Presently vpon the compact aforesayd, Percy hired a house close adioyning to the vpper Parliament, and from this time vnto the day of discouery, by a generall consent amongst themselues, Guydo Fawkes changeth his whole name, and is called Iohn Iohnson, Master Percies man, and about the beginning of December, those fiue began the mine, hauing at first entrance, made competent prouision for twenty dayes, of wine, beere, and baked meates, because their being there should neither be seene, nor suspected of any, neither came they foorth vntill Christmas eue, and for certaine dayes ceast their labour, then they tooke into their ayde Christopher Wright, hauing likewise taken Oath and Sacrament for secrecie, and so about the twentieth of January, they began to worke a fresh and for that they would be secure from any sudden discouery, or apprehension they caused Iohn Iohnson, whom they knew to bee an excellent skilfull and resolute Souldier, to keepe warp Sentinell, who continually gaue them warning vpon the least signe of suspition, when to cease, and when to worke againe: they had also furnished themselues with weapons, shot and powder, being determined rather to die there in their owne defence, then to be apprehended. When they came to the foundat on of the wall, which was three yards thicke, and found it a matter of great difficultie they tooke vnto them Robert Winter, after hee had taken oath and Sacrament like vnto the rest. About Candlemas they had wrought the wall halfe through, and as they were at worke, they heard a rushing of Sea-coales in the next rome, which was a Celler right vnder the Parliament house, and then they feared they had beene discouered wherevpon Iohnson went thither, who being returned, told them it was a Cellar full of Sea-coales, which were now a selling; and that the same was to be let for yeerely rent, assuring them withall, that he had well obserued the manner of that Cellar, and that it was most commodious for their purpose, and then Master Percie forthwith hired the same for yeerely rent, being now fully perswaded, they should doe Iustice vpon that place, where their religion was suppressed, and where so many seuere Lawes had past against them; and then they layd into the Cellar twenty barrels of powder, which were formerly prouided, and couered them with Billets, and Faggots, prouided for that purpose.

But when they vnderstood that the Parliament was adiourned to October, they dispersed themselues, hauing held many Councels how to manage the affaires of State, if the deed were done, one while they purposed to surprize the person of the Prince, another while the Duke of Yorke, and for performance of either of those, Percy was the man that with his friends would vndertake that charge, then they considered, that if they could not ceaze vpon the person of any of them two, because the Prince would be at the Parliament-house, and the Duke being kept in neare London, where they wanted friends, how they might surprize the person of the Lady Elizabeth, being in the Custodie of the Lord Harrington in Warwickeshire: and in the end resolued to aduenture their fortune vpon her, whom they meant to Proclaime Queene, and in her name to proceed in all things, hauing in readinesse a proiect of a Proclamation to that purpose, wherein was no mention of Religion, neither would they haue answered the deed to haue beene theirs, vntill they had tryed their friends and strength, as well abroad, as at home and then they would haue answered both. Secondly they considered vpon forraine aide, and in their opinion Spaine was too remote, and slow to helpe them in their most extremitie: France was too neare and to mighty, and hauing command of Holland ships, would easily make away with them, marry Sir William Stanley, Owen, and others on the hither part of Flaunders, with their particular friends, and forces, might giue them more fit and friendly ayde. Lastly, they considered what Lords to take from the Parliament, as well in respect of Religion, as for policy: vpon all which particulars though they often conferred, yet concluded nothing, sauing only to send one to Rome, to acquaint the Pope with their proiect, and to know whether the Pope would approue or condemne it, carrying a kind of Iealousie amongst themselues, that their seducers had already run too far in reuelation, and thereupon vnder pretence to bee ascertained, they sent Sir Edmond Bayn ham for a Breuiat from his Holinesse, which sayd Sir Edmond departed from England but in August before the Parliament, in which space the aforesayd conspirators neuer staued their intent, nor omitted any thing that might preter their pernicious course.

They send a messenger to Rome but he neuer returned.

The chiefe conspirators hauing many wayes spent great sums of money in this action, especially Catesby, vpon whom lay the most part of expence, being now quite destitute of forraine ayde, and hauing already taken vp as much money in London vpon interest, as either his owne credit, or his friends would extend vnto, obtained by a generall consent, in consideration of further supplyes of powder, money, munition, and horse, it shall be lawfull for him to acquaint any whom himself thought good, without making the same knowne vnto any of the aforesayd conspirators, and thereupon he acquainted Iohn Graunt, Ambrose Rookewood, Francis Tresham, Sir Eucrard Digby, and some others vnknowne, which sayd Sir Eucrard Digby, hee acquainted with all matters, towards the end of September, who at first misliked the proiect, but hauing taken oath of secrecy, agreed to cause a great assemblie neere vnto Dun-church, vnder pretext of a great match of hunting by the chiefe gentlemen of the Country the 1st of November, being the day after they purposed the fatall blowe should be giuen, at which time also it was determined, that Graunt and others, should possesse themselues of their neighbors horse, and armour, and conioyne with other confederates comming to the purposed hunting, and surprize the Lady Elizabeth from the Lord Harrington, and from that time Catesby and his combination rested secure, by reason that hitherto there was not any of them cald in question, nor terrified with any vulgar speech, or suspect of Treason. But when the day of Parliament grew neere, they heard of diuers reports tending to the discouery of some terrible Treason, especially by a Letter which the Earle of Salisbury shewed the King, wherevpon they pondered amongst themselues, from whom such a letter might come: and their generall Iealousie was, that if any such letter were sent by any of them, it should be from Tresham, but hee vtterly forsware it, and therevpon notwithstanding that the rumour of discouery dayly encreased, so as they might plainly perceiue that their treason either was or would be discouered, yet in their wilfull blindnesse: some would stay about the Court to see the euent, and the rest being drunke with the same follie, went to the appointed hunting at Dun-church.

About ten dayes before the Parliament should begin, the Lord Mounteagle, Son and heyre to the Lord Morley, being then in his lodging at the Strand, ready to goe to bed supper at eight of the clocke, one of his seruants whom hee had sent of an errand ouer the streete, was met with an vnknowne man of different stature, who suddenly deliuered him a Letter, charging him to put it presently into his Lords hands, the which Letter so soone as his Lord could open it, began to peruse, and perceiuing the same to bee an vnknowne, and lowmishat an vnlegable hand, without either date or subscription, called one of his men vnto him, to helpe him reade it, the tenor whereof followeth.

My Lord, out of the loue I beare to some of your friends, I haue a care of your preseruation, therefore I would aduise you as you tender your life, to deuise some excuse to shift off your attendance at this Parliament. For God and man haue conspired to punish the wickednesse of this time, and thinke not slightly of this aduertisement, but retire your selfe into your Country, where you may expect the euent in safety: for though there be no appearance of any stirre, yet I say, they shall receiue a terrible blow this Parliament, and yet they shal not see who hurts them: this counsell is not to be contemned, because it may doe you good, and can doe you no harme, for the danger is past, so soone as you haue burnt the Letter, and I hope God will giue you the grace to make good vse of of it, to whose holy protection I commend you.

And when with quicke apprehension, hee beganne warily to obserue the strange contents thereof, being greatly perplexed what construction to make thereof, as of a matter of consequence as indeede it was, or some foolish pasquill wherewith the time abounded, or whether some deuise of his enemies to doe him from his attendance at the Parliament, hee could not tell, and therefore in his loue and alleageance to his Prince and Country resolued not to conceale it any further, and thereupon notwithstanding the lateneſſe and darkenes of the night, went presently to the Court at White-hall (the King being then in person a hunting at Royston) and deliuered the same to the Earle of Salisbury the Kings principall Secretary of Estate.

And when the Earle had read the Letter, and conſidered the contents: and manner of the comming thereof vnto his hands, gaue condigne thankes: and encouragement vnto the Lord Mounteagle, telling him plainly that whatſoeuer the purpoſe of this Letter might proue: either now or hereafter, yet this accident put him in minde of diuers aduertiſements hee had receiued from beyond the Seas, wherewith he had already acquainted his Maieſtie, and diuers of his Priuy Counſell, concerning ſome practiſe of diſcontented Papiſts, both at home and abroad: by way of combination amongſt themſelues, againſt this Parliament, for enabling them to deliuer at that time ſome petition vnto his Maieſtie for toleration of Religion, which petition ſhould ſo cunningly be deliuered: and ſo ſtrongly backed as the King ſhould bee loth to deny their requeſts. Then the ſayd Earle acquainted the Lord Chamberlaine therewith: who likewiſe in depth of loue and dutie brought with himſelfe, what concerned his officeſ as well in places of the Kings vſuall repayre as otherwiſe, and then thoſe two Counſellors agreed to remoue vnto themſelues three other, that is to ſay, the Lord Admirall, the Earles of Worceſter, and Northampton, who hauing likewiſe peruſed the letter: became all of one minde, notwithſtanding the ſlightneſſe of the letter at firſt appearance, and dayly throwing of ſcandalous libells, in Court and City, to reproch and diſturbe both King and ſtate, many of them purporting more danger then this did, they concluded it was not abſolutely to be contemned, whereupon they in all ſecrecie entertained an eſpeciall care for preſeruation of the Kings perſon, and theruppon reſolued to acquaint the King withall: acknowledging amongſt themſelues his Maieſties extraordinary wiſedome, learning and experience in deepe and difficult matters, being Alholloudny, and the King being returned, but the day before from hunting, the Earle of Salisbury alone in the Priuy Gallery, acquainted the King with all their proceedings: the King hauing read the letter once, paused a while, then read it againe, and ſayd he thought it was not to bee contemned, for that Kile ſeemed to be more quicke and pithie then was vſuall in paſquils and libells, or ſuperfluities of idle braines. The Earle perceiuing the King to apprehend it deeplier then he expected, knowing his milde nature, ſayd he thought by one ſentence in it, if ſhould be written either by a foole or a mad man, (by (ſay the danger is paſt, ſo ſoone as you haue burnt the letter) for if the danger were paſt ſo ſoone as the letter was burnt, then the warning muſt needes be of ſmall auaile, when the burning of the letter onely might abolyſhe the daunger, but the King conſidering the former ſentence in the letter (by (that they ſhall receiue a terrible blow at this parliament) and yet ſhall not know who hurts them, ioyning it to the ſentence following before rehearſed, and therupon conſectured, that the propoſed daunger ſhould bee ſome ſuddaine daunger by blowing vp with powder, by reaſon it was not poſſible for them to endaunger the King, and ſtate, eyther by inſurrection, inuaſion, rebellion, or any other of like nature, that might be ſuddainly attempted in this time of Parliament, and therefore the King ſayd, it muſt onely be performed by Gun-powder by one traytor, onely in ſome darke and vnſuſpected place, about the Parliament houſe, which ſtratageme might bee done, as ſoone as the burning of the letter, the King all this while was neither amazed, nor iealous of any particular treaſon towards his owne perſon, yet neuertheleſſe in tender regard of the great aſſemblie of all the eſtate of this land, and to make the beſt vſe of this vnknowne and vnexpected admonition, wiſhed there ſhould be preſently a very ſecret, and exact ſearch made, in the Parliament houſe, and of all other roomes: and lodgings neere adioyning. The Earle obſerving the King to retaine ſtill his wonted free ſpirit, inſiſted no further concerning the imminent daunger, and ſo after ſome accuſtomed pleaſant ſpeeches, the Earle returned vnto the Lordes, being ouercome with care of this buſineſſe, could find no reſt within himſelfe, vntill he had told the Lordes all that paſt betweene the King and himſelfe, which being done they all agreed that the ſayd Earle the next day being Saturday, ſhould repaire againe vnto his Highneſſe, who when he came, found the King in the ſame gallery, accompanied with the Lord Chamberlaine, vnto whom the Earle renewed the former matter, and there it was determined, that the Lord Chamberlaine, according to the vertue of his office ſhould view the Parliament houſe and all other places adioyning thereunto: wherein if the leaſt cauſe of ſuſpition might be had, and withall to doe it with ſuch couerture as might preuent idle rumors, or giuing of any ſuſpition vnto the workers of this miſchieuous miſtery, and vpon Munday in the afternoone being, the day before the Parliament, the Lord Chamberlaine being accompanied with the Lord Mounteagle, ſpalous in this ſeruice, entring the Cellar vnder the vpper houſe, found great Roze of Faggots, Billets, and Coales, and enquiring of Whinyarus the keeper of the Wardrobe, to what vſe he bee had put thoſe lower Roomes, anſwered, that that Maiſter Thomas Percy had hired both the houſe, and part of the Vault vnder it, and that the wood and coale thereon was Maiſter Percies owne prouiſion, and as the Lord Chamberlaine looked about him, eſpied a fellow ſtanding in a corner, called him vnto him, who ſaid hee was Percies man, and keeper of that houſe for him, who ſtyled was the aforenamed Fawkes, ſole agent for this Tragedy.

The Lord Chamberlaine, who ſtill carried a ſeemely careleſſe ſuruey of things: yet in and a very ſerious, and prouident eye, obſerued him ſelfe to the King, whom he met in the Gallery, accompanied with thy Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Admirall, thy Earles of Worceſter, Northampton, and Salisbury, vnto whom after report what he had ſeene, ſaid, that ſo ſoone as the Lord Mounteagle heard Percy named, and that the houſe, vault, and prouiſion, was his, and therewithall calling to mind his backwardneſſe in Religion, and the olde neareneſſe in friendſhip betweene himſelfe and the ſaid Percie, vehemently ſuſpected the matter, and that the Letter ſhould come from him; all which together with the extraordinary prouiſion of fuell aforeſaid, for Maiſter Percy who came but ſeldome thither, and the ſuddaine anſwares, and dangerous aſpect of Fawkes, who from the firſt confederacy ſtill termed himſelfe ſeruitor, and Percies man, poſſeſt the Lord Chamberlaine with full reſolution, that hee was a deſperate fellow, and that the ſaid Roome muſt be very narrowly ſearched.

The King vpon knowledge whereof encreaſed his former appreheniion, and inſtantly agreed to ſearch thoroughly: many there arole a queſtion amongſt them vpon what pretence they ſhould make apparent ſearch, leſt finding nothing worthy their labours, a generall ſcandall might grow vpon the King and State, in being too credulous, and fearefull of the euaporation of idle braines, and alſo to lay an imputation vpon the Earle of Northumberland a chiefe Peere, and Councellor of State, for that this Percy was very inward with him, and by his meanes became the Kings ordinary ſeruant, as alſo for that the King in his owne nature, was neuer iealous of any his good Subiects, by reaſon hitherto all things had beene manadged with ſuch calm-neſſe, and ſecrecie, as neither Court nor Cittie ſuſpected any thing, yet retayn'd amongſt themſelues a thouſand Iealouſies of the Kings ſafety, whereupon it was diuiſed, that eſpecial ſearch was to be made for certaine Robes, and other furniture, of the Kings lately taine out of the Wardrobe: whereupon Sir Thomas Knuet, Gentleman of the Kings priuy Chamber, was ſelected for that buſineſſe, accompanied with a ſmall number, fit for that imployment, went the next midnight, and comming before the entry of the houſe, ſpied Percies pretended ſeruant ſtanding without the doore, booted, and ſpurred, apprehended him, and hauing removed ſome Billets and Coales, found one of the ſmall barrells of powder, and after that all the reſt being 36. in number ſmall and great, with other inſtruments fitte for that purpoſe.

And vpon the hearing of ſome ſuch, Sir T. Knewet required Maiſter Edmond Doubleday Eſquire, to goe vp into the Chamber ouerhead and the cauſe thereof, the which he diligently had there ſome ſpace: with Fawkes, being there with all very buſineſſe to ſearch and ſee what bookes, or inſtruments Fawkes had about him, but Fawkes being wondrous vnwilling to bee ſearched, very violently griped Mr. Doubleday by his fingers of the left hand, through paine whereof Mr. Doubleday offered to draw his dagger to haue ſtabd Fawkes, but ſodainly better bethought him elſe and did not, yet in that heat he ſtruck by the traytors halſes, and there with all fell vpon him and ſearched him, and in his pocket found his Garters, wherewith Mr. Doubleday, and others that aſſiſted, thy bound him, there was alſo found in his pocket, a peece of Touch-wood, a Tinder-box to light the touch-wood, and a Watch which Percy and Fawkes had bought the day before, to try concluſions, for the long or ſhort burning of the Touch wood, which he had prepared to giue fire to the traine of Powder. Fawkes apprehended.

When Fawkes ſaw his Treaſon diſcouered, inſtantly confeſſed his owne guiltineſſe, ſaying, if he had beene within the houſe when they firſt layd hands vpon him, hee would haue blowne vp them, himſelfe, and all.

After that being bound, and well guarded, Sir Thomas went to the Lord Chamberlaine, and the Earle of Salisbury, who preſently drew all the reſt of the Councell together, which lay within the Court, and about fours of the clocke they all came to the Kings bed chamber, the Lord Chamberlaine ſurchargd with ioy at the firſt entry, in a confuſed haſt, tolde the King all was diſcouered, the Traytor taken, and faſt bound, immediatly vpon this, all the Councell that lay abroad, with the reſt late in Councell and examined the ſaid Fawkes, who would acknowledge no other name but Iohn Iohnſon, Percies man, ſtiffe denying to know any complotters in this horrible treaſon, iuſtifying the fact to be good, and warrantable by Religion, denying the King to be his Liege, Lord, or Gods annointed becauſe hee held him an heretique, he was quick and careleſſe in his anſwers vnto all obiections that touchd not this treaſon, ſlearing and ſcoffing at all that miſliked him, and onely repented him the deed was not done, ſaying, that God would haue concealed it, and the deuill onely diſcouered it.

The Councell not knowing how farre this treaſon might extend, nor what degrees of perſons were in this conſpiracy, yet well perceiued to be commenced, and practiſed by ſome diſcontent Papiſts, gaue order to the Lord Maior of London, and the Cittie of Weſtminſter, to ſet a ciuill watch at their gates: the common people muttered, and imagined many things: the Nobles knew not what to ſay, nor whom to cleare or ſuſpect, and for certaine dayes a generall iealouſie poſſeſt them all. This day of diſcouery being the appointed day of Parliament, the King deferred his going vntill Munday following, following, and the Tuesday there were as many bonefires in, and about London, as the streets could permit, the people praising God for his most gracious deliuery, wishing that day for euer to be held festiuall.

The Spanish Ambassadour made bonefires, and threw money amongst the people: the like gladnesse was shewed by the Ambassadour of the Archduke; and by those of the French, and Dutch Church.

Now to returne to the rest of the Conspirators, who notwithstanding the silent and secret dispose of the affaires afore-said, yet I. Winter, the next day after the delinery of the letter, told Christopher Wright, that he vnderstood of an obscure letter deliuered to the Lord Mounteagle, aduising him not to appeare at the Parliament house the first day, and that the Lord Mounteagle had no sooner read it, but instantly carried it to the Earle of Salisbury, which 20 neuerthelesse was presently made knowne vnto the rest, who after diuers conferences, agreed to set further triall, but howsoeuer resolued to stay the last houre, vpon Monday morning the fourth of November, Caresby rode away. Percie hearing then at Ston: the next day early in the morning, being the very day of their desperate attempt, Percy, and the rest plainely perceiuing by generall speeches, vnusuall watches, as also by hearing a Noblemen say to the Lord Mounteagle, alias discouered, Percy, Winter, Wright, and diuers other presently take horse, to meete at the appointed hunting, at Dun Church, where comming late that night, said to Digby, and the rest, all was discouered, who thereupon left hunting, and prepared to stand in Armes, and raise rebellion: the same Tuesday morning, Grant broke vp S. Bennocks stable in Warwicke, a horse rider, and tooke from thence diuers horses, belonging to Noblemen and Gentlemen; the suddaine rumour whereof no sooner spread abroad, but all the Country was iealous of rebellion, and with all speede armed themselues.

The next day being Wednesday, all but Mr. Winter met at Dunchurch, where they diuulged many detestable vntruths, against the King and State, omitting no scandall which they thought might serue their trayterous purpole: and that they were now assembled, and prepared to some special seruice for the aduancement of the Catholique cause hoping thereby to haue drawne into their rebellion all those of their religion, and other wilfull malecontents, and in that manner past by diuers places in Warwickeshire, laying hands vpon all Munition they could for warre, namely at the Lord Windsors &c. From Wednesday vntill Friday, they were chased by Sir Ric. Verney the Sheriffe of Warwickeshire, into the shirre of Worcester-shire, where Sir Rich. Walsh Sheriffe of that County, knowing them to be entred into Stephen Littletons house at Holbach, raised his forces and beset them round, which at first they derided, saying, they had needs of better assistance, &c. thinking themselues to be of greater strength then in deede they were, being neuer full 30. strong, besides many of their houshold seruants forsooke them hourely, and being vnto desperate of any further succour, resolued to come forth together, and dye at once: but whilst they were thus concluding, they hauing before layde certaine Gunpowder to dry in the rome, which had taken wet, being carried through a fire, and diuers a blunt spiller chanced to let a cole of fire fall into the powder, which blasted them all more or lesse; young Winter was shot into the arme with a Pistoll, then issued forth Caresby, and Percy, who were both slaine with one shotte in their breasts, after them issued both the Wrights, who were slaine outright, Thomas Winter, thinking to haue beene as fortunate, was taken aliue: Caresby at his death said, The plot and practise of this Treason was onely his, and that all others were but his assistants, chosen by him selfe to that purpose, and that the honour thereof onely belonged vnto himselfe.

The Sheriffe hauing entred the house, apprehended all hee found, and sent them vnto sundry Gaoles and from thence conueyed to the Tower of London.

The heads of Percy and Caresby, after they were dead, were cut off, and set vpon the ends of the Parliament house.

Notwithstanding all accidents afore-said, yet Francis Tresham remained still about the Court, who vpon the first and second newes of outrages, and attempts done by the rebellious rout, offered his speciall seruice, desiring present imployment for their suppression, and apprehension, but within few dayes hee was restrained, examined, and then sent to the Tower, where he confest all, &c.

The practise of rebellion.

By this time the King had made three Proclamations, the first signifying the truth of the present discouery, and order for the apprehension of Thomas Percy, the second was as followeth, viz. that whereas Thomas Percy, Gentleman, and some other of his Confederates, persons knowne to be vtterly corrupted with the superstition of the Romish Religion, seduced with the blindenesse thereof, being also of lewd life, insolent disposition, and for the most part of desperate estate, cloaked with the zeale of superstitious Religion, ha. beene discouered to haue contriued the most horrible Treason, that euer entered into the hearts of men against our Person, our Children, the whole Nobility, Cleargie, and Commons, in Parliament assembled, &c. shewing the full practise of those Traytors as afore-said, willing if possible, they should be taken aliue, and for as much as many factious persons diuerly affected, had giuen out, that this Treason could not be attempted without the consent of the King of Spayne, the French King, or the Archduke, others strongly reporting, that against the aforenamed Teachers, the French King, and the King of Denmarke should haue beene murthered, and that the Duke of Saxony, the Lantgraue of Hessen, and Count Maurice, should be offered like violence, thereupon the King in the same Proclamation saith, faith, wee doe declare that we cannot admit so inhumane a thought, as to conceiue that any Prince of what Religion soeuer, could giue care vnto so strange and barbarous imagination, and that by such examinations, as hitherto had been taken, we finde them all, and their Ministers, cleare from any such pitton, of priuity thereunto, whereof an infallible argument to vs, is, that all the Ministers of forraigne Princes which are now here, made earnest suite to vs to bee present in the place that day, charging, and commanding all his subiects not to speake, of any his neighbour Princes, or their Ambassadours, but reuerently: and vnderneath the same, set downe the names of eight of the chiefe Traytors: Dated at Westminster the seauenth of Nouember.

The other was for as much as it appeareth now in part, who were the complices in this detestable Treason, published by our former Proclamations, in their assembling together, to moue our people to rebellion, although perhaps, many of them did neuer vnderstand the secret, and depth of his abominable purpose, &c. shewing the difference betweene Percies Treason, and other mens, signifying further the Kings most especiall care to take Percy aliue, to the end, that by his confessions, the whole plotte and Confederates might bee discouered, promising, that if any the said offenders should bring him aliue, he should haue pardon of his life, Lands, and Goods, and haue a thousand pound reward, &c. His bore date the eight of Nouember: all which Proclamations, could not speedily enough be knowne in the foresaid Shires, by reason of the great distance, shortnesse of the dayes, and foulenesse of the weather, so as whatsoeuer was performed against them by the Sheriffes, was meerely out of zeale and loyalty.

The seauenth of Nouember, the Earle of Northumberland was commaunded to keepe his house, and after a while was committed to the custody of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth: and the twenty seauenth of the same moneth, the said Earle was sent to the Tower.

The King goeth to the Parliament house.

Saturday the ninth of Nouember, the King, Queene, and Prince, with all the Nobility, and Commons, went to the Parliament house, where in the presence of the Lords spirituall and temporall, and Commons of the Parliament, and of the Ambassadors of Spaine, and the Archdukes, the King made an excellent Oration, wherein hee fully expreft the whole nature, and practise of the Treason, and the state and quality of the Traytors.

The 18. of Nouember, the King made Proclamation for the apprehension of Robert Winter, being knowne to be a principall, and deu for the same, lurking in secret places, &c. and in the same Proclamation order was giuen for apprehension of Stephen Littleton, with speciall caueat, to take them aliue: his praise in another Proclamation, promised reward vnto the dutifull apprehenders, and consigne punishment vnto all the disloyall reuolters, and Concealers, the which was truly performed vpon either parties.

The 22. of Nouember dies Francis Tresham in the Tower of the Strangurion: after that, his head was cut off, but not set vpon London Bridge, vntill the rest of that combination were executed.

I Present frō the King of Spaine.

The 19. of January, the Lord William Knowles, Baron of Grayes, married Elizabeth Howard, eldest daughter vnto Thomas Goathes of Suffolke.

The 19. of January, a great Porpus was taken aliue at Westham, in a small creeke, a mile and a halfe within the Land, and presented to Francis Cotton Esquire, chiefe Iustice of the Marrets, and within few dayes after, a very great Whale came by within eight mile of London, whose body was seene diuers times aboue water, and iudged to exceede the length of the longest Ship in the Riuer, and when she tasted the fresh water, and sented the land, she returned into the Sea. A great whale came vp as high as Woolwich.

The 22. of January, being Tuesday, all the Nobility and Commons, as the King had formerly appointed assembled themselues, and so continued vntill the 27. of May following, in which Parliament, they gaue the King and his Successours three entire Subsidies, and five Fiftanes, and then the Parliament was prorogued vntill the 18. of November next following 1606. Amongst other things of note contrary to the generall expectation of all persons, as well present at the arraignement as otherwise, seauen of the afore-named prisoners at the barre, pleaded not guilty to the admiration of all the hearers, confessing their severall private confessions, and the publique confessions of Fawkes, Tresham, and Winter, of all which during their imprisonment, euery of them take particular acknowledgement, & only Sir Everard Digby confessed the inditement, and desired pardon, the rest after conuiction besought the Kings mercie.

The next Thursday after Sir Everard Digby, Robert Winter, Graunt, and Bates, according to their iudgement, were drawne, hanged, and quartered, at the West end of Saint Pauls Church in London, where all but Graunt died very penitent, Sir Everard Digby protested from the bottome of his heart, he asked forgiuenesse of God, the King, the Queene, the Prince, and all the Parliament, and if that, hee had knowne it at first to haue ben so foule a treason, he would not haue concealed it to haue gayned a world, requiring the people to witnesse he died penitent, and sorrowfull for this vile Treason, and confident to be saued in the merits of his sweet Sauiour Iesus, &c. He prayed, kneeling about halfe a quarter of an houre, often bowing his head to the ground: in the same manner they all prayed, but no voyce heard, saueing now and then, Iesu, Iesu saue me, and keepe mee, &c. which words they repeated many times vpon the Ladder.

Friday the last of January, in the Parliament yard at Westminster, were executed as the former, Thomas Winter, Rookewood, Keyes, and Fawkes, which Fawkes at his death was more penitent, then any of the rest, and besought all Catholiques neuer to attempt any such bloody Act, being a course which God did neuer fauour nor prosper, Keys in obstinacie coheared much with Graunt, they all craued Testimonie that they died Romane Catholiques, their quarters were placed ouer London gates, and their heads vpon the Bridge.

Saturday the 22. of March, about halfe an houre before 7. a clock in the morning, was suddainly spread throughout the Court and the Citie of London, for certaine newes, that the King was slaine at Oking, which is about twenty miles Westward from London, and the same newes held firme vntill past nine a clock, in which space the Court being fore frighted, as well the great Lords as others, speedily that the Court gates with double Guard in all places, and thereupon London did the like, the Lord Maior gaue forthwith precepts vnto the wards to leuy traind Soulders, and they to repaire vnto their knowne London Captaines.

A most strange and terrible rumour of the Kings death.

Sir Wil. Wade Lieutenant of the Tower, summoned his Hamlets, drew his Bridge, shut close his prisoners, charged diuers Peeces of great Ordnance, tooke all the keyes from all inferiour Officers, being well prepared in all points to stand vpon his Guard by reason for two houres space & more, the newes grew more and more, that not only the King was slain, but with him in his defence, the Earle of Mountgomery, Sir Iohn Ramsey, and Sir Iames Hay, which Treason some said was performed by English Iesuites, some by Scots in womens apparell, and others said by Spaniards and Frenchmen, most reports agreed that the King was stabd with an inuenomed knife, which bitter newes was more grieuous vnto all sorts of people, then can well bee here expreſt, great weeping and lamentation both in old and young, rich and poore, maydes and wiues.

The Author of this booke was an eare certainly knowne.

The Councell vpon extraordinary expedition, hauing true knowledge of his Maiesties safety, to quiet the peoples distracted mindes, made present Proclamation as followeth.

VVHere a seditious rumour hath beene raised this morning, that some ill accident should bee befallen our Person, and thereupon the people there-abouts haue beene raised in Armes by direction from Constable to Constable, but with vncertaine knowledge from whom the first ground should be rayſed, or by what Warrant, which was held to bee done purposely by some tumultuous spirits, to draw our subiects together in Armes, to what intent we know not, vntill further Examination may make it manifest. Wee doe hereby make it knowne vnto all our loving Subiects, that (God be thanked) Wee remaine in good and perfect health.

And do require them to containe themselues from Assemblies & gathering together in Armes or in Conuenticles: Assuring themselues, that after due examination of this seditious rumour, Wee will make knowne to them the Authors and intent thereof. And whosoeuer shall not obey this our Commandement, Wee shall hold them for seditious, and breakers of our peace. And doe command all our Lieutenants, Deputy Lieutenants, Iustices of Peace, Maiors, Sheriffes, and all other our Officers, Ministers, and loving Subiects, to doe their duties in containing our people within their due Obedience, and to aduertise Vs of Our present Councell, of all disturbers thereof.

Giuen at our Pallace of Westminster the two and twentieth day of March in 1605. and in the third yeare of our Reigne of Great Britaine.

This was Proclaymed at the Court Gate a little past nine of the clocke, and in Cheapside at eleuen of the clock by which time Londons vniuersall feare, and griefe, was quite abated.

The afore-said terrible rumour came to the commons house of Parliament, some what before eight of the clocke, and ten tained vntill towards tenne, in which space, the whole assembly being mightily perplexed, sent euery fift quarter of an houre vnto the Earle of Salisbury and others of the Councell to bee truely certained, and for almost two houres space, they receiued newes that the King was safe, and shortly after in his bed, and shot with a Pistoll as he was riding.

At the hearing hereof, the whole house began seriously to debate, what was then best for them to doe. Some said let vs rise and goe hence for our better safety, lest we be suddainly surprised, &c. Some said one thing, and some another; but in briefe it was agreed that they should sit still in their accustomed peaceable manner, vntill the truth were knowne, lest their suddaine rising, should adde more terrour both to Court, City, and Country, continually sending Gentlemen of the house, for almost two houres space, to learne newes, by which time a speciall swift Messenger sent by the Lords, brought certaine knowledge of the Kings perfect health, and safety, who vntill then had not heard of any rumour of Treason, and that his Maiestly would come to Whitehall about two or three a clocke, and that afternoone, the prince, the councell, with other Lords and Iustices, met the King about Kingsbridge, and thousands of people flocking that way rauished with ioy, to behold the King.

Also that afternoone, the Lord Maior and Aldermen went to Court, where the Recorder, in all humble, and hearty manner, signified vnto his Highnesse the deepe sorrow that his Subiects sustained by the late dismall newes and the vnconceiuable ioy, there vpon conceiued vpon the assurance of his Princes safety, vnto whom the King cheerefully returned all princely thankes, and knowledgement of their singular loue, and loyalty, assuring them of his royall merrit, howlo, such equall thankfulnesse and duty.

Whilst the terrour of this terrible rumour lasted, wherewith all sorts of people were soe frighted, the Court Gates being made fast, strongly kept, and strongly guarded, the Queene, the Prince, and the Lords of the Councell, and many other Lords and Gentlemen, being then assembled at Whitehall and hearing all exceedingly amazed, and full of ioy, to see, both in their hearts and eyes, so soone as certaine newes came from the King vnto them, that he was well, and onward of his way towards London, they receiuing new spirits, thought fit that the Ambassadours of forraigne Princes, resident in this Realme, should be made sparke partakers of this most happy newes of his Highnes safety.

The great care of the Queene, the Prince and Councell, to feare and terrifie traytors raigne damnable deuises.

Thereupon they sent Sir Lewis Lewkenor, Master of the Ceremonies, willing him instantly to aduertise them all of this comfortable tidings, and therewithall commanded him to take order with the Common Sergeants to see their houses and persons secured, together with one of the Gentlemen Pensioners, which two knight performed, very speedily and discreetly, and as he reported this newes vnto Don Pedro de Zuniga, at the Family of the Duke of Bejar, the Ambassadour of Spaine, hee was almost rauished with suddaine ioy, and gaue vnto Sir Lewis Lewkenor, a very great Chaine of Gold of a large value.

Friday the 28. of March, Henry Garnet the Prouincall, or principall of the English Iesuites, was arraigned in Guild Hall by foure seuerall names, for concealing the foresaid treason of blowing vp the Parliament house, the Commissioners at his Triall, viz. the Lord Maior, the Earles of Worcester, Suffolke, Northampton, and Salisbury, the Lord chiefe Iustice of the Kings Bench, the Lord chiefe Barron of the Exchequer, and Iustice Yelverton, his Iurors were selected, grand Iury-men, and being iustly condemned, he acknowledged his errour, and was adiudged to bee drawne, hanged, and quartered, according to which sentence the third of May, he was drawn from the Tower to the West end of Paules Church, and there executed, after he had freely acknowledged his foule offence, in concealing the Treason and said I am iustly sorry for it, and I aske forgiuenesse for the same, of God and the King, and I beseech God blesse the King, and all his issue, and I doe abhorr all Catholiques, neuer to attempt any inforcement, rebellion, treason, or violent practise, either against the King or State, for all such courses are bitterly against the Catholique religion, &c. and concerning diuers others, both Gentlemen and Yeomen, not formerly mentioned, which were guilty in this Treason, for harbouring and concealing some of the forenamed Traytors and others, after they were made knowne by Proclamation, were likewise arraigned & executed in the Country nere to their habitations.

An. Reg. 4. Iacobi. 1606.

Garnet executed vpon a Saterday, which is said was vnlucky to him.

Tenne or twelue executed in the Country.

The King rewarded by the Lord Mountegle.

Speedily after the full knowledge, and discovery, of this horrible powder Treason, and due execution of the plotters, and practisers thereof, then his Maiesty, in his wisedome, and kingly disposition, for the euer good encouragement of all his Subiects, of what degree or quality soeuer, being all bound by obligation of their duties, to God and their Soueraigne to conceale nothing that may carry probability, or suspition of danger, to the King or State. And therefore in this particular, and perilous Treason, the King hauing seriously obserued, as well the measure of the loue, and dutifull affection; as the strength of the loyaltie of the Lord William Mountegle, by whose discreete, timely, and dutifull imparting vnto the Councell, the priuate letter before mentioned, out of which they had the first ground, and onely meanes that discouered the powder Treason, the King gaue in reward vnto the Lord Mountegle two hundred pound a yeere of Crowne land, in fee farme of him and his heires for euer, and fiue hundred pound a yeere pention, during his naturall life.

Great winds, floods, and shipwracke, the winde west and by South.

The nine and twentieth, and thirtieth of March, the winde was so extraordinary great and violent, that it caused great shipwracke, in England, Scotland, France and the Low countries, it blew downe part of the Pauonet Church, at Diepe, and diuers other Churches in the lower Belgia, and in Germany, in euery of which said places, and some others, it blew downe Villages, Trees, and Windmills, it also caused the Sea, and diuers Riuers to ouerflow their bounds, and drowned many people, and much Cattell.

Wherefore we will and commaund all our Subiects to bee conformable and obedient to this our Order, and that from henceforth they doe not vse to beare their Flagges in any other sort, as they will answere the contrary at their perill.

The Lady Sophia borne at Greenwich.

The Lady Sophia a daughter to our Soueraigne Lord the King, was borne at Greenwich vpon Sonday the 22. of June, at three of the clocke in the morning, and dyed the next day: and vpon Thursday following, was very solemnly conueyed by Barge, couered with blacke Veluet, accompanied with three other Barges, couered with blacke cloath vnto the Chappell Royall, in Westminster, and was there enterred by Doctor Barlow, L. Bishop of Rochester, where were present all the great Lords of the Councell, with the Heraulds, and the chiefe Officers of the Court.

The L. Mordant, and the Lord Stanton conueyed to the Starre Chamber.

The three of June, Henry Lord Mordant, and Edward Lord Stanton, were brought from the Tower to the Starre Chamber, before the Lord Chancellour, and other the great Lords of his Maiesties most honourable priny Councell, and the chiefe Iudges of the Realme, and there conuicted of diuers misprisions, and contempts, the chiefe whereof was, that whereas the said Noblemen, being peeres of the Realme, and and Warres of the high Court of Parliament, and either of them hauing seuerally to them directed, and deliuered his Maiesties Writs of Summons to the Parliament, vnder his Highnesse great Seale of England, requiring and commanding either of them seuerally to his Highnes court of Parliament, to haue bin holden at Westminster on the 5th day of November last, where they should haue conferred De arduis & vrgentibus causis Regni, &c. To haue consulted with his most excellent Maiestie, and the rest of the Nobility and Peeres of the Realme, about the defence of the King, Realm, and State, of the Church of England, but contrary to the tenor of the Writ, their honours allegeance, and discharge of their duties in that behalfe, neither of them made their appearance, and being by the said high Court found guilty, they both acknowledged their error, and for the same the foresaid Lord Henry Mordant was adiudged to pay vnto his Highnesse the summe of ten thousand Markes: and the foresaid Edward Lord Stanton, was censured to pay vnto his Highnesse the summe of fiue thousand Markes and that both of them should be returned to the Tower of London, from whence they came, there to remaine during his Maiesties most gracious pleasure.

The Earle of Northumberland committed to the Starchamber.

The 27. of June, Henry Earle of Northumberland was brought from the Tower vnto the Starre-chamber, before the great Lords and Iudges aforesaid, and there conuicted of misprisions, contempts, and offences, that is to say.

1 For endeauouring to bee the head of the English Papists, and to procure them Toleration.

2 For admitting and placing Thomas Percie to be one of the Kings Gentlemen Pentioners, without making vnto him the oath of Supremacie, knowing the said Percie to be a Recusant.

3 Whereas the said Earle being, and sitting in Councell with the other Lords, and saw apparant inducement, that the said Thomas Percie was a chiefe practiser and contriuer of the most horrible treason newly discouered, and the said Earle being by the good and iust reason of the King and Councell, restrained and commanded to keepe his house; yet the said Earle wrote two seuerall letters into the North parts, vnto his friends and seruants, to haue a sure of his money and reuenues, supposing the said Thomas Percie to be fled into those parts, negotiating them to preserue the same from the hands of Thomas Percy, and to bring the same treasure by vnto him, and in the same Letters did vtterly neglect and forbeare to take any order, or giue any commandement for apprehending the said Thomas Percy, being knowne for so damnable and dangerous a Traytor.

4 In presuming to write and send Letters abroad, after his restraint, without leaue of his Maiesty or his Prime Councell.

5 That hee being a Prime Councellour, sworne to preserue the Kings Maiestie and the State; to haue more care of his treasure, than of the King or State, without any endeuour to apprehend so dangerous a Traytor, as he knew the said Percy was.

6 Lastly, his letters into those parts where Percy was fled, the said Earle knowing at the Councell table how the state of all things stood against him: was to giue him a warly word and intelligence for his further flight & escape, besides the Earle confessed, that since his speaches Raigne, hee had conference concerning the King's Nobility, and how long, and in what manner he should raigne, &c.

For the which the said Earle was censured and adiudged to pay for a fine to the vse of his Maiestie, the sum of thirty thousand pounds, and to be displaced and removed from the place of a prime Councellor, and from being Captaine of his Maiesties Pentioners, and from being Lieutenant of any of his Maiesties Counties, and from all and euery other offices which he held of his Maiesties grace and fauour, and hereafter to be disabled to take vpon him, or exercise any of the said Offices and places, and to returne prisoner to the Tower of London from whence hee came, and there to remaine prisoner as before, during his life.

A Proclamation against Iesuites, Seminaries, Priests, and Friers.

For as much as by this time the King hauing made many tryals touching the discouery of the late treason, with the plotters, aydors, and animators thereunto, and finding diuers Iesuites not only to be aydors and abettors of the same, but very great fautors of any false seeds or course of beuice, against his Crowne and dignity, and obtaining therewithall that notwithstanding many of them had priuate knowledge of the foresaid treason, yet none would discouer it, vpon consideration whereof, and his tender care of peace, proclamation was made the 10. of June, against all Iesuites, Seminaries, Priests, and Friers, regular, or irregular, commanding them to depart the Land before the first of August next, and neuer to returne vpon paine of death, according to the tenour of diuers Statutes in that behalfe prouided.

Read the Proclamation against Pirates.

And whereas the King by his seuerall Proclamations, very carefully published, to recall and reclaime sundry his subiects from their life of all Pyracies, robbing at Sea, vnder pretext of serueing forraigne States: the premises notwithstanding, such and so great was the continuing offence of many English Pyrates vpon many the Kings friends, who found themselues and their subiects highly offended therewith, vpon certaine knowledge whereof, the King at this time made strict proclamation against diuers persons by name, hauing committed many pyracies, murthers, and depredations, as well within the Straights, as without.

A monstrous murther.

Tuesday the 15. of July 1606. the wife of Richard Homewood, of East Grinsted in Sussex, most vnnaturally murthered her owne three children, first cut their throats, and then threw them into a pitte, and presently cut her owne throat, and leapt into the pit after them, her selfe being quick with childe, as was generally supposed: thee was taken vp and buried in a cruell way, according to Law.

The King of Denmarke arriueth in England.

All this Sommer here was great expectation of the comming of Christianus the fourth of that name, King of Denmarke, brother vnto our Soueraigne Lady the Queene, whose princely purpose was hearty kindnesse, to see his said sister, and royall brother our dread Soueraigne King James, with their children the young Princes of this Land, but through contrary windes he was fire weekes hindred in his expedition, so as it was Thursday the 17. of July, before hee came into the River of London: And that night with eight ships small & great, rid at Anchor before Gaines end, being accompanied and attended with fire of his prime Councell, that is to say, Christian Ruch his Danish Chancelour, Peter Munck Admirall, Henry Ramelius his Germaine Chancelour, Eske Brooke, Gerbrut Rantzow, and Steenbrat, and with all manner Royall estate, and attendance of Officers, Gentlemen Pensers, and such like, hauing a very kingly Traine as well Officers of Honour, and Armes, according to the late custome of his Countrey, euer since the suppression of their whole Nobility, and all manner of Knighthood.

King James vpon long tarrying of the said King, rested very doubtfull of his comming by reason the Summer was so farre spent, yet neuertheless, vpon hope that he would come, kept continuall scoutes at sea, and land, to giue intelligence of their first approach, and vpon the first newes sent instantly to salute the King, and all his traine, with all kindnesse, and kingly welcome: the Duke of Lenox, the Earle of Rutland, with others, but it was past eleuen of the clocke vpon Thursday night, before the Lords could come to Gaines end, where the Danes lay at Anchor; the Lords were desirous to haue gone aboard the Admirall, but the Captaine of the shippe told them, they might not come aboard, for that the Queene was fat, and the King a sleepe, whom now they durst not wake being so late, but prayed their Lordships to haue patience vntill the morning, in the meane space hee would signifie vnto the King his Master, the singular care and kindnesse of the King of great Britaine, and their Honours great paines, and then the Lords returned.

King James and Prince Henry, goeth in person to entertaine the King of Denmarke.

The next morning, King James, with Prince Henry, the Duke of Lenox, the Lord Admirall, the Lord Chamberlaine, the Earles of Rutland, Pembroke, Mountgomery, with others, the Lord Spountagle, the L. Compton, and diuers other Barons, went by Barge from Greenewich to Gaines end: And when the K. of Denmarke beheld them neere vnto his ship, he went to discend to entertaine them, but perceiuing the narrownesse of the staires, would not permit that, but once either to ascend or discend, he stayed in his ship, and with all princely courtesie, entertained the Nobility, as they came aboard, taking euery man by the hand, and kissed the Prince: and when the Kings met they embraced each other: then the King of Denmark led the king of great Britaine into his Cabin, which was very beautifull, and placed him vpon the vpper hand, with his Councell all the while they were aboard, which kindnesse King James requited vnto Christianus in all places, vntill his departing, during his abode in England; both Kings dyed in the Cabin, and the Lords with others were very honorably feasted in another ship. After dinner both Kings tooke Barge, and sight whereof, the Danish ships proclaimed their ioy by the Cannons mouth, and so did the English ordnances all the way they fell, vntill they arriued at Greenewich, where the rest of the great Lords of the Councell, with others, attended to receiue them, and brought them into the Queene, whose mutuall gladnesse to behold each other, I cannot here expresse, and hauing with teares of ioy kissed the young Princes, viz. the Duke of Yorke, the Lady Elizabeth, and the Lady Mary, retired themselues a while, and after supper King James brought his brother of Denmarke vnto his lodging, which was within the Garden on the Eastyard side. The next morning they rode a hunting into Eltham Parke, and the morrow after being Sunday, King James seated King Christianus, and all his traine: the two Kings and the Prince dyned at one Table, and their Councellours at another, placing a Cane still, and then a Bottaine throughout the Table, &c.

By this time King James vnderstood that his brother by reason of his late remouing, as before is mentioned, might not be long soiourning, to visite so many parts of the Kingdome as hee purposed, hee hath full prepared it come see England: gaue forth an order to the Lord Maior of London, to prepare the Citie against Thursday following, and to make such deuices and deuises, as the time would permit, and that the graue Cittizens should sit in their accustomed state, and order, in their liueries as is vsed at coronation of Princes, which they very dutifully performed.

Upon what day the Queene was crowned.

How many Kings were in England.

Thursday the 24. of July, both Kings rode to Theobalds, where the Earle of Salisbury for some dayes space feasted them, and all their traine, according to their estates and dignities, shewing them many ingenious signes of loue, duty, and hearty welcome, &c.

How long both the Kings were in progresse.

On Saturday the last of July, these said mighty Princes, with Prince Henry, after Dinner came by Barge from Greenewich, to the Tower of London, who before they landed, caused the Barge to row neere the Bridge, to obserue the strength and manner thereof. About three of the clocke they set forward, being accompanied and attended with the chiefe of the Clergie, the whole Nobility, and most of the English and Scottish Gentry, and Officers of Honor, and Armes, in as great pompe as when the King and Queene rode through London, two yeres past: And as the King of great Britaine in his princely kindnes, gaue place vnto the King of Denmarke, so likewise did the Nobility and others, according to their place, saue the vpper hand to the English Councellors, and Officers.

Officers. The King of Denmarks Pentioners rode on Bosse-backe, but his Guard went on foote, hauing no ammunition the carrying of their Pusketts, and marched with guilded Halberds, which King James had caused to be giuen them, at their first entrance into London, they were receiued by the Lord Maior, at the East end of Tower Streete, in a robe of Crimsin veluet, bearing a golden Scepter in his hand before the Kings, vntill he came to Temple-barre, as these great Potentates, with their sumptuous traine passed along the Streetes, the King of Denmarke seriously obserued the huge multitudes of common people thronging in euery corner, and the vnimaginable number of gallant Ladies, beauteous virgins, and other delicate Dames, filling the Windowes of euery house with kinde aspect, saluting their worthy mate with health and hearty welcome wheresoeuer they past. Vpon the great Fountaine in Cheapeside, was erected the bower of the Muses, with pleasant Musicke: At the West end of Cheapeside, by the Goldsmiths row neere vnto the Pageant, sate the great Citizens of the Citie in scarlet Robes, where the Recorder after he had made a solemne Oration in Latine, in the behalfe of the Citie, and for testimonie of their loue and zeale vnto their liege Lord, and his louing friends, presented the King of Denmark with a faire cup of gold, who with as great kindnesse accepted it: then the Pageant after it had ceased her melodious harmony, began to expresse the purpose thereof, viz. Diuine concord as sent from Heauen, descended in a cleud from the top vnto the middle Stage, and with a loud voyce, spake an excellent speech in Latine, purporting their hearty welcome, with the heauenly happines of peace, and vnity, amongst Christian Princes, &c. but though the extremperature of the vnruly multitude, the Kings could not well heare it, although they emptied their eares very seriously thereunto. At the faire Fountaine in Fleetstreete was a pleasant Pastorall deuice, with Songs, wherewith the Kings were much delighted: this Fountaine and diuers other rarine deare Time. And after they were come to Whitehall in the euening, they were entertained with fireworkes vpon the water.

The Imbassadours of France, Spaine, and Venice, were placed in Parrall lels to the Kings and the Queene.

Sir Henry Mainwaring Recorder of London.

The next morning King Christianus, and Prince Henry, with others of both Nations, went vnto the Abby of Westminster, and in, to the Chappell royall of Henry the seauenth, to behold the Monuments, against whose coming the Image of Queene Elizabeth, and certaine other images of former Kings and Queenes, were newly beautified, amended, and adorned with royall vestures, but he tooke most notice of Saint Edwards Shrine, and therewithall admired the whole Architecture and fabrication. After dinner the King being accompanied with the Lord Admirall, the Lord Chamberlaine, and others, went by Coach vnto Pauls Church, and into the Quyer, and other Chappels therein. And then the King, and the Lord Chamberlaine, with some others, ascended the steeple of the Steeple, and when hee had surueyed the Cittie, he held his hat still whilest Edward Soper, keeper of the steeple, with his knife cut the length and breadth thereof, in the Lead: And for a lasting remembrance thereof, the said Soper within few dayes after, made the Kings Character in gilded copper, and fixed it in the middest of the print of the Kings foote, which was no sooner done, but some rakehinnies of this yeon age, thinking all gold that glittred, with violent instruments attempted to steale it. From thence the King rod to the Royall Exchange, and walked twice about the vpper Pauane, obseruing the riches, and beauty thereof, and when he had walked twice about below, all the Merchants walke, he sate downe vpon the long Bench at the East end, and beheld the manner of the building. Then tooke Coach, and with the foresaid Lords, went to the Tower of London, and surueyed all the Offices, and Munition, and hauing walked a while vp and downe, hee ascended the white Tower, commonly called Iulius Cæsars Tower, where himselfe discharged a peece of Ordnance, and being descended, Sir William Wade, Lieutenant of the Tower entertayned him, and his chiefe attendants, with a very Royall Banquet, and the rest of their traine were likewise very honorably banqueted in another roome, which kindnesse the king very graciously accepted, and then returned to White-Hall, where King James expected his comming, and vpon Saterday they went both to Greenewich, to the Churching of the Queene, which was solemnized the next day, being the third of August.

The Queene Churched.

From this time the King of Denmarke, during his abode in England, in his daily exercises vsed either to hunt, hawke, play at Tenis, or the manly play of the English Fences, or of the best being selected, and played at those weapons, according to the manner of fight: there was also the like play betweene a Scotish Scot, and a Germane: or running at the Ring, or Tilt; he ran at Tilt against the Duke of Lenox, the Earles of Arundell, and Southampton and the Lord Compton: or else in riding to see the Kings pleasant Parkes, and stately Houses within twenty miles of London: and vpon Thursday the 7 of August, he was installed Knight of the Garter at Windsor, and in his Robes of order he did his beyfance at the Altar, and the next day, all his prime Councellors were very solemnly and honorably feasted by the Earle of Rutland at Detford, where both Kings were expected, but it was late before they returned from Windsor.

Sunday the tenth of August, both the Kings, the Queene, Prince Henry, with all their Councellors, chiefe Officers, and Attendants, were most sumptuously feasted at Chatham, in the Elizabeth Ionas, which gallant ship was wonderously adorned with Cloth of Gold, and in the halfe deck a rich Chayre of Estat. After dinner they went from that ship to the white Beare, vpon a bridge, aboue twelue score yards long, made of fierre masts, rayled in on either side, which which floted vpon the water, and was so broad as foure men might easily walke together: at the middle of this Bridge was a great Hoye, which they called the Kitchin, wherein the diet for that day was dressed, and when the Kings and the rest in ere gone past the vttermost hills, then the Gallies, Ships, and the Castle discharged their ordinance, to the number of almost twelue hundred shot.

The next day being Monday, King Iames, Queene Anne, Prince Henry, with certaine other Britayne Princes, and Peeres about ten a clocke in the forenoone, went aboord the King of Denmarkes greatest shippe, commonly called the Admirall, riding at Anchor before Graues-end, which was a gallant shippe of a very hie and narrow building, the beake-head, the sterne, and her three galleries were fairely gilded, the waste and halfe decke adorned with Arras, and other rich ornaments, wherein the sayd Princes were very royally feasted, and as they sate at Banquet, greeting each other with kindnesse and pledges of continuing amity, and hearts desire of lasting health, the same was straight wayes knowne, by sound of Drumme and Trumpet, and the Cannons lowdest voyce, beginning euer first in the Admirall, seconded by the English block-houses, then followed the vice Admirall and after her, the other fiue Denmarke ships ending alwayes at the smallest.

About foure a clocke when the banquet was ended, and the sayd Princes fully performed all Kingly complements, King Iames began to take his leaue to depart, but his brother being lothe to leaue his royall presence so soone, hauing prepared against that time, for their entertainment, an ingenious deuice of his owne vpon the water floating neere vnto them, and would therefore haue had the King Queen, and Prince with the great assembly, stayd vntill the cunning, to haue seene the rarenesse of his inuention, but when he saw the King of great Britaine and his Traine ready to depart, notwithstanding the brightnesse of the sonne, he caused fire to be put vnto it, and whilest that deuice continued, there were certaine Danes in another barge that blew vp strange and extraordinary lofty rockets into the ayre.

The manner and meaning of the great worke of wild-fire.

This deuice of wild-fire was in Pageant wise, betweene foure round pillars, vpon a Lighter framed, where the seuen deadly sinnes in their liuely colours, shape, and Caracters, sate chained fast, and for their wickednesse bound to endure eternall punishment, and ouer their heads in the middest of them, vpon the toppe of a pinacle, was a fierce Lyon couchaunt, signifying sudden vengeance, holding in his teeth the loose end of his chaine, which compassed them about, and from the Lyons mouth the fire first did issue forth, and from thence without any confusion, or further ayde, by degrees and diuers proportion, descended into all parts, making simply sorts of sounds, with lofty Rockets, and fire-flakes mounting in the ayre, and great number of thunder crackes like peales of ordinance, and for the space of more then a quarter of an houre, the foresaid Images sate burning in Grimes flame resembling hells endlesse torments prepared for such offendors, but in the end they were consumed, and so were the foure great wooden pillars one after another, being in all nigh three yards in square distance from the rest, this nocturnall pastime of pleasant variable fire workes lasted about halfe an houre, and onely was disgraced by too much light, wanting Egypts darkenesse to haue made it bright. The on the wednesday following the King with his eight ships went a little lower, and the next day after being Thursday hee set sayle and with fauourable winds returned home in eight dayes.

There was but only once fire put to the Kings mouth

The 25 of September, they went all by Coach vnto the King at Hampton Court where for fourteene dayes space, they were all very Royally entertained and feasted, and rode a Hawking and hunting, with the King to diuers places, and then returned: the afore named Charles hath two other sonnes, viz. Great flood in England and Wales.

The 20. of January, it pleased God to send a mighty Westwinde, which continued full fifteene houres, and with extreame violence and rage brought in the Sea, by reason whereof, and of the spring tides, both which furiously encountred the Land waters, presently after a great rayne, and caused the riuer of Seauerne, beginning as farre as S. Michaels Mount in Cornewall, to ouerflow the bankes, and bounds, all along on both sides vp into Somersetshire, and Glouc. shire, in some places fiue foote, and in some places the water ouerflowed their bankes three foote, in some places fiue foote and in some places almost eight foote, and ranne into the land in some places almost twenty miles in length, and some miles in breadth, and in all places where euer it ran, it came so fiercely, that it was hard for man or beast to escape by flight, at the very first comming in of the waters, besides the horror of the noyse, and the terrour to the eye, to behold the swift outrage of waters, comming vpon them like great mountaines, which of many were more seene then suspected to approach vpon them, and their habitations so hastily and thereupon stayed and attempted to remoue and set things as they thought in order and more safe in their houses. Others stayed to haue their horses sadled, and then to ride away: others taking the first aduantage of the time, and being onward on their way to escape, some a slight shote, some more, some lesse, would needes returne home, vpon hope to saue their mens, children, friends, iewels, or euidences of their lands, from which space the floods came violently vpon them, and ouerwhelmed many of them, and their beasts, and their cattell, for the waters in diuers Townes and Villages, vpon the suddaine in respect of time, grew higher then the tops of their houses, trees, and Churches, and in many places, many saued themselues by climing into trees, vpon the tops of houses, and Churches, others by swimming, and some by sitting vpon the new ruines of houses floating vpon the water, many heards of cattell perished: in this great extremity, there were some that with shew of pittie, made out Boates pretending to relieue the distressed, but performed no such charitie, for they went onely a boot-halling and made a prey and spoyle of all they could lay hands on: and among other things of note, it happened that vpon the tops of some hilles, diuers Beastes of contrary nature had got vp for their safetie, as Dogs, Cats, Foxes, Hares, Conies, Poales, Mice, and Rats, who remained together very peaceably, without any manner of figne of feare, or violence one towardes another. There were drowned in the parts of Somersetshire, fourescore persons, and damages done vnto the sayes almost of one fifty thousand pound, in twentie Townes, as I was certified a yeere after, vnder the hand of Daniel Seth, Lord Bishop of that diocesse, and vnder the hands and seales of Sir Nicholas Halswell Knight, Iohn Stert, Iohn Adams, Esquires, and Iustices of peace of that shire, considering the generall losse of men, and damage otherwise in other places, I could not obtaine the certaintie, but to certaine it is, that it was very great and greeuous. There was also great damage done in Glocestershire. At this time in Russia, especially towards Colmogro, there happened the like terrible inundation, where it carryed away Churches, and houses, but other images it did not so much damage there, as in England, by reason the Ice brake not, but held fast, wherevpon men and beasts saued themselues, but if the Ice had broke it had bin farre more great and grieuous then in England, for the the ouerflowing was not knowne in those partes, the Ice continued there vntill the eleuenth of May, which was neuer seene before.

Chese fellowes were more inured to pitty then pitty.

Ice great in Russia.

Churches ouerflowed in Russia as in England, by reason the Ice brake not, but held fast.

The Citie of Couentry is seated vpon the mount or rising of a small hill, vpon which place there arose a most strange and dreadfull sodayne inundation, the manner whereof following with the words, as I receiued it vnder the Seale of the Citie, and signed by Henry Sewell, Mayor of Couentrie. I write it as well of mine owne knowledge, as of the credible report of our honest neighbours. Citizens of Couentry, who haue sustayned great losses lately by a sudden flood, which vnexpected and suddenly came first into the Suburbes of the Citie, from whence or where the rayne that caused that sodayne flood came, we know not, but vpon Friday morning being the seauenth of Aprill, 607. about seuen of the clock, no man suspected any such flood to be, and suddainly betweene eight and nine of the clocke that morning, there was a great flood comming towards the Citie, wherevpon some seeing it came halfe a myle of, and made it knowne vnto some Citizens to make present hast to saue some of their goods, but the water came so abundantly, like the surges of the Sea, into the Suburbes and Citie, that it rose within one houre, in some places, three yards, and better in height, more then it was that morning, and ouerflowed diuers Meadowes, and grounds, and entred through the streetes and houses of the Inhabitants that dwelt nere the riuer, to the number of two hundreth, fifty, and seauen houses, besides twelue houses, and other houses of offices, Nere the Riuer, to the great hurt of Tanners, Whittawers, Dyers, Bakers, and Brewers, not onely in their household goods, but in carrying away many things to their great losse and damage. In witnesse whereof, we haue hereunto put the common seale of the Citie, for such like causes, ordained the 17. of May 1607. Henry Sewell Maior. Thus much at my request it pleased the Maior & Aldermen to certifie, because this sudaine flood was more strange

A Irondrons strange flood at Couentry.

Ye the first notice hereof, some laughed the messengers to scorn, others began to take to their safety, but few of none did escape, so sudaine and so great an Inundation, &c.

strange and admirable, considering that neither Sea, nor any great riuer commeth neere the Citie, but onely a very small brooke, but halfe a yard deepe at most, ouer which at all times of the yeere a man may either stride or leape ouer it, neither was there euer might any such great raine, as might raise so great and violent waters: onely there happened vpon Thursday at night, great rayne and thunder, being but such as they had often heard and seene, after which there neuer followed any inundation: this fierce and vnheard of flood came with vnwonted fury and violence, and when it was risen to his full height, it stayed so for the space of three houres, and then began all expectation, and with as great admiration, it vanished as it encreased, being in comming and going of equall wonder, for it stayed there as long time when it was risen, as it did in rising and falling, being in the growing, staying and decreasing about foure houres and a halfe, if this had happened in the night, most of the Citty had perished, but at this time there was no liuing soule drowned: there were abundance of white Snailes that came downe with the waters, and there were a great number crept vp into Willow trees in clusters like ropes of Onions, and the like were seene in mens houses, and were supposed to be so assembled before the comming of the waters, but not obserued vntill the waters were come.

About the middle of this moneth of May, 1607. a great number of common persons, soddainly assembled themselues in Northamptonshire, and then others of like nature assembled themselues in Warwickshire, and some in Leicestershire, they violently cut and brake downe hedges, filled up ditches, and laid open all such inclosures of Commons, and other grounds as they found inclosed, which of auncient time had beene open, and imployed to tillage, these tumultuous persons in Northamptonshire, Warwicke, and Leicestershire grew very strong, being in some places of men, women, and children, a thousand together, and at Hill Morton in Warwickshire there were three thousand, and at Cottesbich there assembled of men, women, and children to the number of full fiue thousand: these riotous persons bent all their strength to leuell and lay open inclosures, without exercising any manner of theft, or violence vpon any mans person, goods, or cattell, and whersoeuer they came, they were generally relieued by the more inhabitants, who sent them not onely many Carts laden with victuall, but also good store of Spades and Shouells, for speedy performance of their present enterprize, who vntill then, some of them were faine to vse Hills, Pykes, and such like tooles in stead of Pattacke and Spades.

The twenty seauenth of this moneth, there were seuerall Proclamations made, straightly charging them to surcease their disorder, yet neuertheless they ceased not, but rather persisted more eagerly, and thereupon the Sheriffs and Iustices, had authority giuen them to suppresse them by force, by vertue whereof they raised an Army and scattered them, vsing all possible meanes to auoide bloudshed, and after that the king sent Henry Earle of Huntington, Thomas Earle of Excester, Edward Lord Zouch, William Lord Compton, John Lord Harrington, Robert Lord Spencer, George Lord Carew, Sir Edward Coke Lord chiefe Iustice of the Common pleas, with diuers other learned Iudges, assisted by the Maior of Couentry, and the most discreet Iustices of peace, and of Oyer and Determyner in their seuerall Counties, to doe iustice vpon the leauellers, according to the nature of their offences.

And the 28. of Iune, the king made Proclamation, signifying his great vnwillingnesse to haue proceeded against them, either by Martiall law, or ciuill iustice, if leuity or gentle admonition mought any wayes haue preuailed with them, to desist from their turbulent, rebellious, and trayterous practise.

At the first those foresaid multitudes assembled themselues, without any particular head or guide, then start vp a base Fellow called John Reynolds, whom they surnamed Captaine Powch, because of a great leather pouch which he wore by his side, in which purse he affirmed to his company, that there was sufficient matter to defend them against all commers, but afterward when hee was apprehended, his Pouch was searched, and therein was onely a piece of greene cheese. Hee told them also, that hee had Authority from his Maiestie to throw downe enclosures, and that hee was sent of God to satisfie all degrees whatsoeuer, and that in this present worke hee was directed by the Lord of heauen, and thereupon they generally inclined to his direction, so as hee kept them in good order, hee commaunded them not to sweare, nor to offer violence to any person: but to ply their businesse, and to make faire worke, entending to continue this worke, so long as God should put them in mind, at the beginning of these ordered assemblies vntill their suppression, and one examination of many of the offenders, it was generally found throughout the land, that the special cause of their assemblies and discontent was concerning Religion, and the same part currant with many according to their seuerall opinions in religion, some sayd it was the Puritane faction, because they were the strongest, and thereby sought to enforce their pretended reformation, others said it was the practise of the Papists, thereby to obtaine restauration or tolleration, all which reports proued false as appeared plainelie, by the examination of all such as were examined, whose generall pretence of grieuances and cause of stirring in this riotous, and trayterous manner was ouerlay for the laying open of inclosures.

The preuention of further depopulation, the encrease and continuance of tillage to releeue of their wiues and children, and chiefely because it had beene credibly reported vnto them by many, that of very late yeeres, there were three hundred and sixty Townes decayed and depopulated, and that they supplied by this insurrection, and casting downe of inclosures to cause reformation.

Their indictments.

House of them were indicted of high treason, and executed for leauying warre against the King, and opposing themselues against the Kings forces, Captaine Powch was made exemplary.

Others for fellonie in continuing together by the space of an houre, after proclamation to be soone and depart according to the Statute, the rest were indicted for Riots, vnlawfull assemblies and throwing downe of hedges and ditches.

And when the King was ready to depart, the Lord Mayor humbly besought his Maiestie, of his most especiall grace and fauour to the Citie in generall, and to that Society in particular, that he would be pleased to be free of the Cloth-workers, which he also very graciously accepted, then the King descended the lining Chamber, and went into Cloth-workers-hall, the Lord Mayor bearing the Sword as he did before, after hee had presented it vnto his Maiestie at his first coming, and by the King deliuered him backe again, and being entred into the Hall, hee was receiued by the Maister, and Wardens, and Assistants of that company, in very graue and comelie manner, vnto whom the King gaue good respect and kinde speeches, and accepting to their humble generall request, it pleased the King to dignifie the Citie and that Societie, and being in the open Hall, he asked who was Maister of the company: and the Lord Mayor answered, Syr William Stone, vnto whom the King said, Will thou make mee free of the Cloth-workers? presently the Maister, and thinke my selfe a happie man that I liue to see this day:

strange and admirable, considering that neither Sea, nor any great riuer commeth neere the Citie, but onely a very small brooke, but halfe a yard deepe at most, ouer which at all times of the yeare a man may either stride or leape ouer it, neither was there euer-night any such great raine, as might raise so great and violent waters: onely there happened vpon Thursday at night, great rayne and thunder, being but such as they had often heard and seene, after which there neuer followed any inundation: this fierce and boysterous flood came with vnusuall fury and violence, and when it was risen to his full height, it stayed so for the space of three houres, and then began to fall with as great admiration, it vanished as it encreased, being in remaining and going of equall wonder, for it stayed there as long time when it was risen, as it did in rising and falling, being in the growing, staying and decreasing about foure houres and a halfe, if this had happened in the night, most of the Citty had perished, but at this time there was no liuing beast drowned: there were abundance of white Snailes that came downe with the waters, and there were a great number crept vp into Willow trees in clusters like ropes of Onions, and the like were seene in mens houses, and were supposed to be so assembled before the comming of the waters, but not obserued vntill the waters were come.

And the 28. of Iune, the king made Proclamation, signifying his great vnwillingnesse to haue proceeded against them, either by Martiall law, or cruell iustice, if lenity or gentle admonition meight any wayes haue preuailed with them, to desist from their turbulent, rebellious, and trayterous practise.

At the first those foresaid multitudes assembled themselues, without any particular head or guide, then start vp a base Fellow called John Reynoldes, whom they surnamed Captaine Powch, because of a great leather pouch which he wore by his side, in which purse he affirmed to his company, that there was sufficient matter to defend them against all commers, but afterward when hee was apprehended, his Powch was searched, and therein was onely a peece of greene cheese. Hee told them also, that hee had Authority from his Maiestie to throw downe enclosures, and that hee was sent of God to satisfie all degrees whatsoeuer, and that in this present worke hee was directed by the Lord of heauen, and thereupon they generally inclined to his direction, so as hee kept them in good order, hee commaunded them not to sweare, nor to offer violence to any person: but to ply their businesse, and to make faire worke, entending to continue this worke, so long as God should put them in mind, at the beginning of these disordered assemblies vntill their suppression, and one examination of many of the offenders, it was generally bruited throughout the land, that the special cause of their assemblies and offerment was concerning Religion, and the same past currant with many according to their seuerall opinions in religion, some said it was the Puritane faction, because they were the strongest, and thereby sought to enforce their pretended reformation, others said it was the practise of the Papists, thereby to obtaine restauration or tolleration, all which reports proued false as appeared plainelie, by the examination of all such as were examined, whose generall pretence of grieuances and cause of stirring in this riotous, and trayterous manner was onely for the laying open of inclosures. The preuention of further depopulation, the encrease and continuance of tillage to relieue their wiues and children, and chiefely because (as it had beene credibly reported vnto them by many, that of very late yeeres, there were three hundred and forty Tenants decayed and depopulated, depopulated, and that they supplied by this insurrection, and calling downe of inclosures to cause reformation.

Their indictements.

Some of them were indicted of high treason, and executed for leauying warre against the King, and opposing themselues against the Kings forces, Captaine Powch was made exemplary.

Others for follonie in continuing together by the space of an houre, after proclamation to be seaze and depart according to the Statute, the rest were indicted for Riots, vnlawfull assemblies and throwing downe of hedges and ditches.

A Parish Church builded in the North countrey.

Sir Iames Altham Knight, Baron of the Exchequer, told me that in the North Countrey as he rode Circuit, he was shewed a goodly Parish Church, very large and beautifull, newly builded, but by whom, and at whose charge it was builded hee could not directly learne, but willed the Parish Priest to enquire who were the founders, and to send me true instructions, but I neuer heard of him as yet, and as he sayd mee in this, so haue many others in very many things of worthy note, vnto whom I vse all diligence, paines, and expences, all which preuayled little or nothing.

The King dineth with the Lord Mayor of London, and is made free of the Cloth-workers.

Friday the 12. of June, his Maiestie being attended with diuers Lords of the priuy Councell and others, came priuately vnto the Maiors house, and dined with him as hee hadde appointed the day before, and after dinner Sir Iohn Watts Lord Mayor, presented his Highnesse with a Purse of Gold, which he very graciously accepted, and signified therewith, all as hee did in like manner whilest hee sate at dinner, his most especiall loue and care of the City of London, with her Magistrates and Citizens. And when the King was ready to depart, the Lord Maior humbly besought his Maiestie, of his most especiall grace and fauour to the Citie in generall, and to that Society in particular, that he would bee pleased to be free of the Cloth-workers, which hee also very graciously accepted, then the King descended the dining Chamber, and went into Cloth-workers-hall, the Lord Maior bearing the Sword as hee did before, after hee had presented it vnto his Maiestie at his first coming, and by the King deliuered him backe againe, and being entred into the Hall, hee was receiued by the Master, and Wardens, and assistants of that company, in very graue and comelie manner, vnto whom the King gaue good respect and kinde speeches, and according to their humble generall request, it pleased the King to dignifie the Citie and that Societie, and beeing in the open Hall, he asked who was Master of the company: and the Lord Mayor answered, Syr William Stowell, vnto whom the King sayd, Will thou make mee free of the Cloth-workers? Yes (quoth the Master, and thinke my selfe happie man to day: then the King sayd Stowe giue me thy hand and now I am a Cloth-worker, and after that hee walked into the Garden, and into the great Parlour, the Lord Mayor bearing the Sword before him, and whilest hee sate there, the Earles of Shrewsbury, and Cumberland, beeing both free of that company, presented his Maiestie with Bread and wine, the King rose vp and sayd then: now I drinke vnto all my good brethren the Cloth-workers, and I pray God to blesse them all, and all good cloth wearers: and for proofe of our especiall fauour to this fraternitie, and for their encrease of mutuall amitie, I doe here giue vnto this company, two brace of Bucks yearely for euer, against the time of the election, of the Master and Wardens of this Society, then the Lord Mayor, the Master, the Wardens and assistants, humbly thanked his Maiestie, for those high fauours done to that company; and hauing kissed his hand, the King departed: at this time also there were diuers Noble men and Gentlemen made free of the Cloth-workers.

The Kings Maiesty payeth 60 000. pound which was lent vnto Queene Elizabeth.

The third of July, the Kings Maiestie repayed three score thousand pound vnto the Citizens of London, which summe the Londoners hadde lent vnto Queene Elizabeth, the third of February, one thousand fiue hundred ninetie eight.

Sir Thomas Knewet made Baron.

The fourth of July, Sir Thomas Knewet Knight, was called by writ to the Parliament, by the Name and Title of Baron of Estrycke, and sate that day in his Robes among the Barons, beeing the last day of that Parliament, holden vpon Prorogation, and so againe Prorogued vntill the fifteenth of November following.

Sir Iulius Cæsar made a Priuy Counsellor.

Sunday the fifth of July, Sir Iulius Cæsar Knight, Chancellour of the Exchequer, was sworne a Priuie Counsellor of Estate.

Prince Henry made free of the Merchant-taylors.

Thursday the seuenteenth of July, his Maiestie, and Prince Henry being accompanied and attended with very many of the Nobilitie, and other Honourable Personages, came in priuate manner to Merchant-taylors Hall to Dynner, (the Queene beeing also expected) where they were very Royally and ioyfully Feasted and entertained, with great and pleasant variety of Musique, of voyces and Instruments, and ingenious speeches, beeing the Feast day of the Merchant-taylors for the election of the Master and Wardens. Against the comming of the King, the Lord Mayor gaue his attendance there, and at the Hall gate, presented his Maiestie with the Sword, who presently gaue it him againe, who bare it before the King into the vpper large dining roome, anciently called the Kings chamber: and a while after the Lord Maior with license returned to his owne house with his owne Sword borne before him, after he was past the Hall gates, and in the same manner hee retenuous after Dinner, and attended untill the King departed.

Whilest the King sate at Dinner, the Maior, the Wardens, with diuers Aldermen, and the Recorder of London, all of them being free of that Society, came into the King, and in the behalfe of the whole company, humbly thanked his Maiestie, that thus it pleased him to grace their Fraternitie with his Royall presence: and therewithall the Maister presented him with a purse of gold, and the Clearke of the Hall shewed him a Role, wherein was Registred the Names of seuen Kings, one Queene, seauenteene Princes and Dukes, two Dutchesses, one Archbishoppe, one and thirty Earles, fiue Countesses, one Viscount, foureteene Bishoppes, sixtie and sixe Barons, two Ladies, seauen Abbots, seauen Priors, and one Subprior, omitting a great number of Knights, Esquiers, &c. who had beene free of that companie, which his Maiestie very graciously accepted, and sayd that hee himselfe was free of another Companie: yet he would so much grace the Company of Merchant-taylors, that the Prince his eldest Sonne should bee free thereof, and that hee would see and bee a witnesse, when the Garland should bee put on his head. Then they all descended into the great Hall, where the Prince dined, and in like manner when they had saluted him with hearty and chaerefull welcome: Then the Maister presented him also with a purse of Gold, and the Clearke of the Companie deliuered his Highnesse the like Role, which hee also as graciously accepted, and sayd, not onely himselfe would bee free of the Merchant-taylors, but therewithall commaunded one of his Gentlemen, and the Clearke to goe to all the Lords there present, and require all of them that liued him, and were not free of other Companies, to be free of his Companie: whereupon all those Lords, whose names are recorded in my Abridgement, with humble thankes vnto his Highnesse, accepted the freedome.

The King during this and the Election of the new Maister and Wardens, stood in a new Windowe made for that purpose, and with a gracious kingly aspect, beheld all their Ceremonies: and being descended into the Hall to depart, his Maiestie and the Prince were there againe presented with like Musique of voyces and instruments, and speeches, as at their first entrance.

This Musique consisted of twelue Lutes, equally diuided and placed by fire and fire in a Windowe on either side the Hall: And in the Ayre betweene them was a gallant shippe Triumphant, wherein was three men like Saylors, being eminent for voyce and skill, who in their seuerall songs were assisted and seconded by the cunning Lutenists. There was also in the Hall, the Musique of the Citie, and in the vpper chamber the children of his Maiesties Chappell sung a grace at the Kings Table, and also whilest the King sate at Dinner, Iohn Ball Doctor of Musique one of the Gigamites of his Maiesties Chappell Royall, and free of the Merchant-taylors, being in a Citizens Gowne, Cappe, and Hood, played most excellent melodie vpon a small payre of Organes, placed there for that purpose onely. Concerning the bountie of this Feast and plenty of all things as well for pleasant Princely entertainements of the King, the Prince, the Nobilitie, and the rest, where were very many braue Courtiers and other Gallants, as was most rare and excellent.

The Company of Merchant-taylors also after that gaue very kinde reliefe with full and honourable rewards vnto euery man according to their highest measure of desert, that did them any service or kindnesse either by voyce or Instruments, making of Speeches, or setting of Songs or otherwise. The kindnesse and bounty of the Company of Merchant-taylors.

About the beginning of September, there fled out of Irelande, into the parties beyonde the Seas, Hugh Earle of Tyrone, Tercconel, Hugh Baron of Don Gannon, Caffar Oge Oconnell, brother to the Earle of Tercconel, Arto Oge Oncale, Nephewe to the Earle of Tyrone, the Countesse of Tyrone, and two of the younger Sonnes of Tyrone. And the sonne and heire of the Earle of Tercconel, being an Infant scarce a yeere olde, with diuers their seruantes and followers: they embarqued themselues at Lughwilly. The Earle Tyrone and other Irish Lords go out of Ireland.

And the seuenth of Nouember, Proclamation was made concerning the soudaine flight of Tyrone, and the rest, wherein was declared their purpose and practise to extirpe the English Nation out of Irelande, and to conferre and yeelde the Kingdome of Ireland vnto the Pope and the Earle of Tyrones soliciting forraine Princes to attempt the conquest thereof. The Earle Tyrones treason discouered.

The seauenth of September, was borne Duke Charles second sonne to Philip the third King of Spaine. The King of Spaines second sonne borne.

Sir Iervais Clifton, of Layton Bromswold Knight, was called to the Parliament by writte, by the name and Title of Baron of Layton Bromswold, and sate in his Robes with the Barons in the Parliament hous the seuenth of Nouember: at which time the Parliament was againe prorogued vnto February following, and the twenty day of July next following, the Lord Elmie Stewart, Baron of Aubigny in France, Gentleman of the Kings bed-chamber in England, the sole brother of Lodowicus Duke of Lenox, married Katherine, the only daughter and heire of the sayd Clifton.

The fifteenth of September last, died the Lady Mary, daughter to our Soueraigne Lord the King, and was solemnly interred at Westminster. About two yeeres past there were diuers Churches in London, well repayred, and some wholy beautified, the first and chiefe whereof, was Christs Church: by which example within few yeares, most of the Churches within London were likewise repaired and trimmed: and then the Countrey began also to make their Churches handsome and cleanly, and not without good cause, for there was not any Church worke done in fiftie yeeres vntill now, and notwithstanding, the generall repaire of Churches, yet Paules escaped repairing, pauing, and beautifying. The Lady Mary dead. The repairings of Churches.

But aboue all the Churches in London, Saint Stephens in Walbrooke, was trimmed most curiously and Church like, for all the decayed windowes in that Church, were pleasantly repaired with new coloured glasse made onely for that purpose: Doctor Fenton being Parson, and Maister Thomas Langton Fishmonger Church Warden, this was done in the yeere one thousand fiue hundred and thirteene.

The last yeere, the King pulled downe the old rotten, sleight builded Banqueting house at Whitehall, and new builded the same this yeere very strong and stately, being euery way larger then the first, there were also many fayre lodgings new builded and increased. The royall Banqueting house at Whitehall new builded.

Notwithstanding, the late great generall ruine and infirmitie, especially within the Citie and Suburbs of London, yet neuertheles the Citie by this time was wonderfully increased in people, and new buildings, and albeit that in the Queenes time there were diuers straict Proclamations against Inmates, and increase of new buildings, yet they tooke small effect. And vpon the first of March, in the second yeere of his Maiesties raigne Proclamation was made straightly forbidding all increase of new buildings within the Citie of London and one mile thereof: expressely commanding all persons to build their fore-fronts and Windowes of all their new buildings either of Bricke or Stone, by reason all great and well growne woods were spent and much walled, so as timber for shipping waxed scarce, but it tooke small effect: whereupon the twelfe of October this present yeare one thousand fiue hundred and seuen, Proclamation was made againe to the same purpose, wherein they were commanded to build all their vtter walles for fore-fronts and windowes, either of Bricke or Stone, and the fifteenth of October, some were Censured in the Star-chamber for building contrary to the tenor of the first Proclamation. Proclamation for building and preuention of Ipswher. Conteminors punished.

Also Maister George Bishoppe, Citizen and Stationer of London gaue ten pounds a yeere for euer to the same vse, whereupon, the Lord Mayor and court of Aldermen for the due imployment of the foresayd summes and increase of the same, as is fit for so honourable a purpose, haue further promoted for the sayd Preachers, so as euery of them being vnbeneficed shall not onely receiue a gratuitie in money, but also euery one that shall preach there, may at his pleasure bee freely entertained for fiue dayes space, with sweete and conuenient lodgings, fire, candle, and all other necessaries, viz. from Thursday before their appointed day of preaching vntill Tuesday morning following, this promotion tooke good effect. Promotion for such Preachers as shall preach at Paules Crosse.

The eight of December began a hard frost, which continued seuen dayes, and then thawed gently fiue dayes space: and the two and twentieth of the same moneth, the Frost began againe very violently, so as within foure dayes many persons did walke halfe way ouer the Thamis vpon the Ice, and by the thirtieth of December, the multitude at euery ebbe, and halfe flood passed ouer the Thamis in diuers places: and although the violence of the frost abated now and then, yet it held from the third of Ianuary, vnto the fifteenth of the same, so as many set vp booths and standings of sundry things to sell vpon the Ice, and some that at pastimes, and played at bowles with other exercises of pleasure vpon the Ice, whereof I haue spoken sufficiently in my abridgement. From the same and twentieth of Ianuary vnto the thirtieth of the same, the frost was most violent, and the next morning it began to thaw, and the first of February the Ice began to breake by little and little, and the next day in the afternoone all the huge rockes and ouerspreading Ice was either quite dissolued or sanke, so as then there remained no manner of signe of frost. And although this great frost continued of and on, by the space of seuen weeks yet the Ice was not so delicate smooth and euen and pleasant, as was that great frost in the yeere 1564. by reason that frost held firme, from the beginning vnto the ending, but this did not so: this frost brake downe and spoyled many faire bridges and destroyed much wild fowle, especially water foule and small byrds, and much fish perished, as well in the sea, as in freshwaters, and were found dead vpon the shore in diuers parts of this Land: this frost destroyed many Herbage in gardens, especially Hartichokes and Rosemary, this frost was more grieuous in Fraunce, then in England. The Russians, Mosqwayes, and other nations of the North: vpon the certaine knowledge of this frost, laughed the French & English to scorne, saying, how foolishly and shamefully, you complaine of one poore sixe weekes A great frost.

cold, which happeneth not in your countries, but once in fiftie yeeres, when wee in fiftie yeeres space, haue seldome lesse frost then fiue moneths, continually euery yeere, and with more extremity: this frost was also very violent in Ireland.

The Viscoume Haddington married.

The ninth of February, John Viscount Haddington married Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Robert Earle of Suffer.

Aldgate new builded.

The tenth of March, was layd the first stone for the new building of Aldgate, but not finished vntill the end of the next yeere: this gate was new builded at the charges of the Citizens. The last yeere at the taking downe of the olde ruinate gate, there were found in the walls, certaine auncient Romane Coynes, the formes and superscriptions whereof, Master Martin Bond Merchant, being surueyor of the worke, caused to bee carued in Free Stone, as you may now see set ouer the Conduit neere without the gate, viz. Clodius Alonius, Vespasianus, Domitianus, Carausius, Valentinianus, and Traianus.

An. Reg. 6. 1608. A Seminary executed.

The 11. of Aprill, being Monday, the quarter Sessions was holde at Saint Edmondsburie, where by negligence an out Malt house was set on fire, from whence in most strange and suddaine manner through fierce winds the fier was carried to the farther side of the towne, and as it went, left some streetes and houses free and vntouched: the same flue cleane ouer many houses neere vnto it, and did great spoyle vnto many faire buildings further off: This fire ceased not vntill it had destroyed 160. dwelling houses, besides many other, and besides the damage of much wares and goods. Many of the inhabitants when they perceiued the fire to encrease, threw great quantitie of houshold-stuffe and goods into their wells, for their best safetie, by reason whereof in diuers places many wanted water in their great extremitie, which otherwise might haue helped themselues and their neighbours. The King shewed great grace and kindnes to the distressed inhabitants, hee gaue them a new Charter, and preferred their best meanes to raise euery mans decayed estate, and gaue them 500. load of Timber to repaire their buildings: the Knights and Gentlemen of that Country extended their beneuolence: And the City of London gaue more bountifully towards their reliefe, then halfe England besides: and the Towne was forthwith new builded, in farre fairer manner then it was before.

At this time Henry Earle of Northampton, was made the Lord Priuie Seale.

The Earle of Northampton made L. Priuie Seale.

Notwithstanding many Proclamations, and all other publique meanes to giue full knowledge vnto all men of his Princelies most Christian inclination, and League of peace and Amitie with all Christian Princes, for the vniuersall good of Christendome, and the generall tranquilitie, and freedome of all his Kingdomes and Subiects, to all lawfull trades and traffique, both at home and abroad, yet such was, and is the impious, Trayterous, and bloody mindes of many men, hauing of late yeeres beene inured to liue insolently by the spoyls of others: of which sort for these fiue yeeres last past, many Englishmen haue furnished themselues with good ships and became fierce and outragious pirates, and incessantlie committed robberies, spoyles, pyracies, murthers, and depredations, as well vpon English Merchants, as vpon all other Christian nations, but especially vpon the Venetians, and Florentines, with whose complaints the King being much grieued, made sundry Proclamations to restrayne all such offenders, and their abetters, denouncing all such persons to bee

Pyrats and their notorious abuses.

Rebells: and therewithall gaue expresse order for their suppression, and apprehension as trayters, and peace-breakers. But all this preuailed nothing, for they still encreased, waxed worse, and not only persisted in their former villanies, but also diuers of them doubting their offences to bee vnpardonable by law and nature, became Runagates, renouncing their Christian faith, and wilfully submitted themselues vnto Pahometisme, making their chiefe residence in Tunis, and other places of the Turkes Dominions, exercising all manner of besprites, and speaking of blasphemy against God, their King, and Countrey, and taught the Infidels, the knowledge and vse of Nauigation to the great hurt of Europe. With which transgressors, there were some English Merchants, who very cunningly vnder hand, for their priuate gaine, vsed commerce, trucke and traffique, for some goods to the great derrision, and abetting of these haynous malefactors and dishonour to this Nation. For speedie redresse whereof, the King by Proclamation the eight of January, prohibited all English Merchants from any manner of medling or dealing with them, vpon great penalty commaunding the Iudge of the Admiralty to proceed seuerely in Iustice against all such offenders, and that from him there should no appeale bee graunted to any person touching the premises: all which notwithstanding, yet the number of these beastlish pirates still encreased, the chiefe whereof was Ward, Bishoppe, Sir Francis Verney, Glanville, and others: besides these, there were Hollanders and Easterlings, that at this time, and before were bloody Pyrates, and bebs consort with the English robbers, whereupon the King of Spayne to suppresse this deane of Thaues, which had committed many Pyracies vpon his people, sent certaine ships of Warre vnder commaund of Don Lewes Faxardo, who very politiquely came suddenly vpon them, about the middle of July, and at an instant burned about twenty of their shippes lying in harbour, at which time though Captaine Ward escaped in person by being then a shoare, yet his greatest strength with much riches of his, and his confederates, perished in the fire. And the twentie two of December following, there were nineteene Pyrats executed at Wapping, some whereof were of note, and had beene in consort with the forenamed Pyrates.

Though all these pyrates did not turne Turkes, yet they all submitted themselues vnder the protection of the Turkes or Barbarians.

Strange shifting of the Tydes.

Sunday the 19. of February, this yeere 1608. it should haue beene dead low water at London bridge, but quite contrary to course it was then high water, and presently it ebb almost halfe an houre, the quantitie of a foote, and then sodainly it flowed againe almost two foote higher then it did before, and then ebb againe vntill it came neere the right course, so as the next flood began in a manner as it should, and kept his due course in all respects as if there had beene no shifting nor alteration of Tydes, all this happened before twelue of the clocke in the forenoone the Weather being indifferent calme, and the first of February the next yeere following, the Thamis againe shifted Tydes very strangely.

The twentie first of February, Richard Earle of Dorset married the Lady Anne Earle of Clifford, the onely childe of George late Earle of Cumberland.

The younger Earle of Dorset marryed to Earle of Cumberlands daughter.

In this month of March, one thousand fiue hundred and nine, vpon full three yeeres deliberation, and with the aduice and consent of most Christian Princes, was concluded and Proclaimed, a generall and particular truce, and cessation from all manner of hostilitie by Sea and Land for twelue yeeres, betweene Philip the third of that name King of Spaine, and Albertus and Isabella, Archedukes of Austria, on the one part: and the generall States of Holland, Zeland, and Friezland, on the other part.

An. Reg. 7. 1609. Peace treated with Spaine.

In this truce were included all the adiacent Newter Coūnes, Forres and Cities: the intestine Warres betweene the Princes, and Estates before named, began at first about breach of Priuiledges, and raising of Taxes, and Customes, and then by degrees the Cities and Countries vnder the Estates with great willingnesse and eagernes, maintayned fierce Warre, for maintenance of their reformed Religion, and the suppression of the Romane Catholique Religion, hoping thereby vtterly to extirpe the house of Spayne, and Austria from all State and gouernment in the Low Countries, which by the ayde of diuers their neighbour Princes, they very politiquely persisted: so as the Spanish King and Arch-dukes for their owne ease and better proceeding in their ciuill affaires of State, were in a manner constrained to yeelde now vnto diuers Articles, which formerly they would neuer vouchsafe the hearing, and therefore this Truce was not concluded vntill eyther side had tryed their best friendes, and vtmost forcunes, hauing felt the bitter sting and cruell misery of almost fiftie yeeres blody warres, to the great damage and diuision of all Christendome, and aduantage of the vnreconcilable enemie the Turke.

This Warre of the Netherlands continued longer then any of the great Warres of former times, for the Warres of Troy continued not full eleuen yeeres. Alexander the Great dyed a young man, and his Warres continued but seauen yeeres. Pirrhus Warred with the Romanes but foure yeeres. Hanibal Warred with the Romanes seauentene yeeres. Mithridates Warred with the Romanes forty yeeres, and for many ages after, it was called the Mithridatique Warres. And although Cæsar and his Hoste were thrice in great perill of drowning, comming to conquer England, and sustained many damages in his seuerall conquests: yet he conquered France Germany, England, and other countries within nine yeeres: and who so with a free spirit & indifferent eye, shall read the Chronicles written on either five, shall plainely see more slaughter of ciuill people, and more rich Cities wort and lost, then in any of the particular warres aboue mentioned.

The first generall planting of Mulberries, and making of silke in England.

It is not very many yeeres since the Kingdomes of Spayne and Portugall, haue obtayned the perfection of breeding Silke-wormes, and making of silke, neither is it but twenty yeeres since the first generall making of silke, came into France, which knowledge Fraunce had from Spaine and Italie, euery of which Nations, by time and time haue brought thereby, not onely good imployment of their poore and idle people, but also great profite to each Common-wealth: the which his Maiestly well knowing, and being desirous by all laudable meanes to imploy his poorest subiects, and preserre the generall profite of this Kingdome, and hauing made seuerall trialls and experiments, that silke-wormes would liue and breed in England: And that of their silke here was made sundry things as pieces of Taffata, stockings, and Sowing silke, equall to the best that is made in Granado: And as apt to take all fine colloures, whereupon the last yeere, and this spring, according to the Kings expresse order, vpon apparant reason and likelihood of great vtilitie to this Kingdome: there were many hundred thousands of young Mulberrie trees brought out of France, and planted in many Shires of this Land: And many began to breed wormes and make Silke, and albeit this is the first publique notice of keeping wormes, and making Silke in England, yet true it is, that many yeeres past, there were diuers industrious gentlemen that kept worms and made good silke, amongst which of late yeeres, William Stalledge Comptroller of the Custome-house, hath taken ingenious paynes in breeding wormes, and making of fine silke for all sorts: he had a pattent for seauen yeeres, to bring in mulberry seed, and this yeere he and Monsieur Verton, by order from the King planted Mulberry trees in most shires of England.

Whitaines Burle burned.

In the Strand, on the North side of Durham house, stood an olde long stable, the ontward wall whereof, to the streete side, was very rude and ruinate, all which was taken downe, and a stately building substantially erected in that place, by Robert Earle of Salisbury, Lord high Treasurer of England. The first stone of this beautifull building, was layd the tenth of June last past, and was fully finished in Nouember following. And vpon Tuesday the tenth of Aprill this yeere, one thousand fiue hundred and nine, many of the vpper shoppes were richly furnished with Wares, and the next day after that, the King, Queene, and Prince, the Lady Elizabeth, and the Duke of Sozke, with many great Lords, and chiefe Ladies, came thither, and were there entertained with pleasant speeches, giftes, and ingenious deuices, and then the King gaue it a name, and called it Whitaines Burse.

The eight of May, the King by Proclamation prohibites all forraine Nations, that after August next, they should not fish vpon any of the coastes of England, Scotland, or Ireland, nor the Iles adiacent, without the speciall licence from the Commissioners in that behalfe ordayned.

All forraine nations forbidden to fish vpon the coast of England, Scotland, or Ireland, without speciall licence.

The first, second, and third of June, the King in person heard the differences betweene the Ecclesiasticall, and Temporall Iudges, argued touching prohibitions out of the Kings Bench, and common pleas.

The King hearesh the difference betweene the Bishops and Secular Iudges.

The eyght, ninth, and tenth of June, his Maiestie also in proper person accompanied with the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Priuy Seale, the Lord Admirall, the Lord Chamberlaine, and others, heard the manifolde complaynts of the abuses of the victuallers, and other officers of his Houle Royall, all which he heard with great patience.

The King hearetly complaines touching his House.

The 23. of June, the King, Queene, and Prince, the Lady Elizabeth, and the Duke of Sozke, with diuers great Lords, and many others, came to the Tower, to see a tryall of the Lyons single valour, against a great fierce Beare, which had kild a child, that was negligently left in the Beare-house. This fierce Beare was brought into the open yard, behind the Lyons Den, which was the place for fight: then was the great Lyon put forth, who gazed a while, but neuer offred to assault or approach the Beare: then were two mastiffe Dogs put in, who past by the Beare, and boldly seazed vpon the Lyon: then was a stone horse put into the same yard, who suddenly sented, and saw both the Beare and Lyon, and very carefully grazed in the middle of the yard between them both: and then were fiue dogs put in, the most whereof at the first seazed vpon the Lyon, but they suddenly left him, and seazed vpon the Horse, and had wearyed him to death, but that three stout Beare-wards, euen as the King wished, came boldly in, and releeued the horse, by taking off the Dogges one by one, whilest the Lyon and Beare stared vpon them, and so went forth with their Dogs: then was that Lyon suffered to goe into his den againe, which he endeuoured to haue done long before. And then were diuers other Lyons put into that place one after another, but they shewed no more spirit nor valour then the first, and euery of them so soone as they espied the trap-doores open, ran hastily into their dens. Then lastly, there were put forth together the two young lusty Lyons, which were bred in that yard, and were now growne great: these at first began to march proudly towardes the Beare, which the Beare perceiuing, came hastily out of a corner to meete them, and suddenly offered to fight with the Lyon, but both Lyon and Lionesse skipt vp and downe, and fearefully fled from the Beare, and so these like the former Lyons, not willing to endure any fight, sought the next way to their Den. And the fift of July, according to the Kings commandement, this Beare was baited to death vpon a stage: and into the mother of the murthered child, was giuen twenty pounds out of part of that money, which the people gaue to see the Beare kild.

And the 20. of Aprill following, viz. 1610. Prince Henry, with the young Duke of Brunswicke, being accompanied with the Duke of Lenox, the Earle of Arundell, and others, came priuately to the Tower, and caused the great Lyon to be put into the yard, and some dogs sta course to be set vpon him, & they all fought with him instantly, sauing such as at their first coming into the yard in their fury, fell one vpon another, because they saw none else with whom to fight for the Lyon kept close to the trap dooze at the further end of the yard: these were choise dogges, and slew all at the Lyons head, whereat the Lyon became enraged, and furiously bit diuers dogges by the head and throat, holding their heads and neckes in his mouth, as a Cat doth hold a Rat, and with his clawes, he tore their flesh extreamely, all which notwithstanding, many of them would not let goe their hold, vntill they were vtterly spoyled: after diuers courses, and spoyle of diuers dogges, and great likelyhood of spoyle of more, which yet lay tugging with the Lyon, for whose rescue there entred in three stout Beare-wards, and set a lustie dogge vpon the mouth of the Lyon: and the last Dogge got full hold of the Lyons tongue, pulld it out of his mouth, and held it so fast, that the Lyon neither bit him, nor any other: whereupon it was generally imagined that these dogs would instantly spoyle the Lyon, he being now out of breath, and hard from biting: and although there were now but three dogges vpon him, yet they bered him sore, whereupon the aboue mentioned young lusty Lyon and Lionesse, were both put out together, to see if they would rescue the third, but they would not, but fearefully gazed vpon the Dogs, then two or three of the worst dogges, which had left the first Lyon, ranne vpon them, chased them vp and downe the yard, seeking by all meanes to auoyd the Dogges, and so soone as their trap dooze was open, they both ran hastily into their Den, and a Dog that pursued them ran in with them, where they all three like good friends stood very peaceably, without any manner of violence eyther to other, and then the three Beare-wardes came boldly in againe, and tooke off all the Dogges but one from the Lyon, and carried them away, the Lion hauing fought long, and his tongue tone, lay staring and panting a pretty while, so as all the beholders, thought he had beene vtterly spoyled and spent, and vpon a soddaine gazed vpon that dog which remained, and so soone as hee had spoyled him, espying the trappe dooze open, ran hastily into his Den, and there neuer ceast walking vp and downe, to and fro, vntill hee had brought himselfe into his former temperature.

Whilest hee was hot hee would neuer offer to lie downe but walked to and fro.

Kingly paynes beyond all precedents.

The great blessings of God, through encrease of wealth, in the Common subiects of this land, especially vpon the Citizens of London: such within mans memory, and chiefly within these few yeeres of peace, that except there were now one mention in some sort made thereof; it would in time to come bee held incredible, to the great obscuring of the gracious bountie of Almighty God, and disgrace of the King and Common Wealth. For in the fifteenth yeere of Richard the second, the generall weakenesse of wealth in the Cittie of London, was such, as the whole City hazarded the losse of their Charter, which at that time to them was most precious, for refusing to lend the King one thousand pound: since which time though the Citizens haue encreased in riches, yet the loane of ten thousand pound, a good while after was held a great matter, and in tract of time, after that, the lending of twentie thousand ponnd was held a wonderous matter, euen within mans memory: and in the yeere 1587. when the Queene sent to the Citizens to borrow three score thousand pound, I well remember it was made a matter of great admiration, which way and of whom it should be leuied: since which time to the eternall prayses of the Almightie God, such is his boundlesse blessing vpon the whole Kingdome in generall: And London in particular, that certaine priuate Citizens, farmers of the Custome house in December, 1607. lent the King one hundzeth and twentie thousand pound, for one whole yare, whitch sum his Maiestie most graciously and carefully repayd in December, 1608. with full royall confideration for the same, and in May the last yeere 1608. the King borrowed also of certaine other Citizens, three score and three thousand pound, for fifteene meneths, and this Midsommer day, 1609. the King not onely repayed all that summe, but allowed them likewise their full content for that time, viz. seuen thousand and fiue hundzed pound as a Royall recompence: the King sent them word, hee had the money ready for them, and would haue payes them before their day, but they refused it, and touching this Kingdomes wonderous encrease of traffique and Nauigation, I shall somewhat speake thereof (though not so much as I ought) when I come to speake of the East Indya Company.

Many ingenious persons of late yeeres by their diligent endeuors, haue atchieued the perfection of many strange Arts, and found out the invention and making of many excellent things here, very profitable to this Kingdome and Common Wealth, whose paines and industrie deserues publique thankes, and acknowledgement, concerning whom I am oft enforced through ignorance, not knowing the parties to leaue many of them in oblivion, which otherwise to their honour and good encouragement of others, I would duely haue registred: In the 8. yeere of Queene Elizabeth, an Act of Parliament was made for confirmation of certaine Letters Pattents granted two yeers before vnto Cornelius de vos, a Merchant stranger for the sole making of Copperris, and Allom within the Queens dominions for twenty one yeeres: as a reward for his new invention, thereby to encourage others to doe their endeuors in the like actions, for the good of the common wealth, which Letters Pattents were set ouer vnto Iames Lord Mountioy, at whose great Costs the making of Copperris, was then brought to good perfection: and then the making of Allom, after many attempts, was giuen ouer in Deuonshire, where some small quantitie was made: also some was made in Ireland, and the like was attempted in Yorkshire, where there was a farre greater hope to prevaile therein: as indeed it did by the cost and industry of Iohn Bourcher Esquier, who afterward was Knighted, who ioyning with the Lord Sheffield, then Lord President of the North, Sir Thomas Challenor, and Sir David Fowles, and other having land in those parts, obtained Letters Patients, from the Kings Maiestie, for the sole making thereof, for thirty and one yeeres, and then they conioyned with certaine Merchants of London, viz. William Turner, Nicholas Gisp, Eliis Chrispe, and Abraham Chamberlaine, who vsed to lay the Allom Oare, or earth, in the open ayre, and after purification, to take the strength thereof, by the lequo, as it is vsed in making salt Peter, which being found very chargeable caused them to send into Germanie, where Allom had formerly beene made, from whence they fetcht certaine skilfull workemen, who taught them the true working by Calcination, which course they haue followed.

And then in short space Sir Iohn Bourcher, and his associats, brought their worke vnto desired effect, to serue this Kingdome which vntill now was serued from the territories of Rome: whereupon the first of July, the King by Proclamation prohibited the bringing in of any Allom from beyond the seas, into any part of his Dominions, vpon paine of confiscation: the King also assigned fit places of Store-houses of Allom, for the ready vse thereof, to such as would buy the same: the King gaue also very gracious reward, and Princely remuneration, vnto all those whom he know to haue taken paines and beene at expences in the practising, and atchieuing to bring this royall commodity vnto due perfection, and then tooke the whole traffique thereof to himselfe.

In ancient time. This yeare the King had ayde of his Subiects, through the King ome of England, for Knighting his Sonne Prince Henry, according to the law of the Land, in the leuying whereof the Subiects were very fauourably dealt with all, for whereas by the ancient Laws of this Land, the Subiects ought to haue paid twelue pence in the pound, of the yeerely value of their Lands, his Maiestie most graciously ordayned seuerall Commissioners in the seuerall Shires, who according to the purpose of their Commissions, did so moderately demeane themselues, as no man was compelled to pay any more then he would willingly giue, being a very ancient duty due vnto the King, and was now in a manner quite forgotten.

Prince Henry his first feates of armes. The first of January, at the Pallace of White Hall in the presence of the King and Queene, and the Ambassadors of Spaine, and Venice, and of al the Peeres & great Ladies of the land with a multitude of others: in the great banquieting-house, all these were assembled; at the vpper end whereof was the Kings Chayre of State, and on the right hand thereof, was a sumptuous paulien for the Prince and his associats, from whence with great bravery and ingenious deuices, they descended into the middle of the Roome, and there the Prince performed his first feates of armes, that is to say, at Barriers against all commers, having assisted onely with five others, viz. the Duke of Lenox, the Earle of Arundell, the Earle of Southampton, the Lord Haye, Sir Thomas Somerset, and Sir Richard Preston, who was shortly after created Lord Dingwell. Against these Gallant Challengers came five and fiftie brave defendants, consisting of Earles, Barons, Knights, and Esquires, who in the lower end of the Roome, had erected a very delicate and pleasant place, where in priuate manner they and their traine remained, which was so very great, that no man imagined that the place could haue concealed halfe so many, from whence in comely order they issued, and ascended into the middle of the Roome, where then sate the King and the Queen, and Ambassadors to behold the barriers, with the seuerall showes and deuices of each combatant. Every Challenger fought with eight seuerall defendants, five seuerall combats at five seuerall weapons, viz. at push of pike, and with single sword, the Prince performed this challenge with wonderous skill, and courage, to the great ioy and admiration of all the beholders, the Prince not being full fifteene yeares of age vntill the nineteenth of February. These feates of armes with their triumphant shewes began before ten a clocke at night, and continued there vntill the next morning being Sunday: and that day the Prince feasted all the combatants, at Saint Iames, and then gaue rich prizes vnto those of the best deserters defendants, viz. vnto the Castle of Mountgomery, Walter Thomas Darcie, son and heire to the Lord Darcy of Chich, and vnto Sir Robert Gourdon.

The Lord Viscount Fenton made a priuy Councellor. The 31. of January the L. Viscount Fenton was sworne a priuy Councelor at White hall.

The curiosity and presumption of the people of this time. The 26. of March, 1610. the King by Proclamation straightly prohibited the reading or publishing of a pernitious booke lately printed, called the interpreter, made against the honor and prerogative of the King, and the dignitie of the common law of this land. By this edict, all persons that had any of those bookes, were chatged vpon the Kings displeasure, forthwith to deliuer them either to the Lord Mayor of London, or to the Sheriffs of Counties, in this speciall Proclamation his Maiestie declared how grieuously, the people of this latter age and times are fallen into verball profession, as well of religion, as of all commendable morall vertues, but wanting the actions and deeds of so specious a profession, the insatiable and vnmeasurable itching boldnesse of the spirits, tongues and pens of most men: so as nothing was now left vntouched from the top to the bottome, neither in talking nor writing of the highest mysteries of the Godhead and the inscrutable counsells of the trinity, nor of the confused actions of the deuils in the lowest pit of hell, such is the misery of this age, that most men in their extreame impious niceneese and curiositie, spare not to aspire Gods diuine secrets, and audaciously to inuade the deepest mysteries that belong to Kings and Princes, and to all regall gouernment, &c.

The French King Henry the 4. murthered. An. reg. 10. 1610. Thursday the 3. of May 1610. Stilo Angliæ. Henry the fourth of that name, king of France, having beene tenne yeares married vnto Mary de Medecis, daughter to the Duke of Florence, vpon that day with great and solemne tryumphes, caused her to be Crowned in Paris, and was thereby inuested vnto the Crowne and title of Queene of France and Nauarre. And the next day, the King with great solemnity appointed to see his Arsenall, and to visite Duke Sully his Treasurer, who was then ill at ease. And albeit that some skilfull Astronomers and others, forewarned and besought him from going abroad that day, as being an ominous day, foreseene to threaten great danger to his person, yet he Cæsar like, who also was forewarned of the Ides of March thought it not conuenant vnto Christian Religion, to hearken vnto Wizards, take his Coach about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, being accompanied with the Dukes of Espernon, Montchallon, and others, and riding through Laferronerye, which leadeth vnto S. Dionis streete, in a straight passage, his Coach was stopped by reason of Carts and Coaches thereabouts, vpon aduantage whereof Francois Rauillack of Angolesme, who oft and long before had sought opportunitie to kill the King, espying the King sitting in the head end of the Coach, and leaning towards the boote, to speake to Espernon, whereby hee discouered all his left side, thrust a knife of a foote long into the Kings side, but made no mortall wound because it struck against a bone, which the audacious Traytor perceiuing, suddainly stabd the King againe vnder the short ribbes, which second stab bereft the King of speech, and life, that instantly he fell dead into the Coach, and was carried into the Louer. This traytor attempted to haue done this treason in the forenoone, as the King was walking in his new great gallery at the Mwillery, and had performed it then, but that hee was put back amongst the people, by such as attended neere the King, who esteemed him as a rude rascall: this blondie villaine, whose name imports so much, in his youth was of the order of the Feliants, but misliking their order of fasting, eating of beanes, and strictnesse of life, vtterly forsooke their house and order. Then he married a wife, being sometime a kinsse of Lawyer: and lastly, a Schoolemaister. Presently vpon the death of the King, the new crowned Queene, with full consent of the Nobility and Cleargie, was made Regent during her sonnes minority, viz. Lewis the thirteenth, and hauing speedily and peaceably setled the whole Kingdome, in her late tranquility, the aforenamed traytor after many examinations, and promises of life, was fauour to confesse truely, who animated him to do this horrible murther, and for what cause he did it, his vsuall answere was, that he did it onely of himselfe, without the instigation of any man, because the King maintayned two Religions, then they put him to torture but it preuayled not, whereupon at his death, they take the aforenamed knife, which hee had made of purpose to kill the King, and fastened it in his right hand, and forced him to hold it in a burning furnace, vntill the flesh of his hand, and arme was burnt to the bone, after that they pulled off the flesh of his brests, leggs, and Armes, with hot pinchers, and powred burning oyle and brimstone, into his toorne flesh, and yet he would not confesse any thing no; accuse any person to bee guilty, but onely himselfe, in the end he was toorne in pieces with Horses, and the people trampled his flesh to dust, as not worthy of being for burriall. This French traytor may bee compared vnto Iohn Lawryguie the Malloone, that killed William Prince of Orange, of whom I haue formerly made some mention, for this Malloone during the time of his imprisonment, was often told that the Prince was in good health, and free from danger of death, whereunto he would boldly reply saying, if I knew assuredly that my Dagge had misst the Prince, I would cute this hand that misst him, being in prison amongst other tortures, hee had his body pricht full of holes with knives, and had salt vineger and other things put therein to torment him, but it moued him not, then was shoes put on his feete made of a raw hide, and boring layde along with his feete before a great fier, he was there held vntill his feete and anckles were shrunke exceeding small, yet all this mooued him not so much as to require any ease or fauour, and at his death his flesh was toorne from his bones, as was the French Traytors, and so dyed carelesselly vpon assured hope that hee had killed the Prince: the French Court of Parliament at this time, made a Law, that all those that were of this French traytors name should forthwith change their names, or be banisht France for euer. And touching this murthered King, famous by the name of Henry the fourth, whose valour was renowned throughout the world, being as happy in peace as victorious in warre, hauing made three pitcht fields, and encountred thirty fiue strong armies of his enemies, endured a hundred and thirtie combats, and besieged three hundred Cities and Castles, Fortes, and Sconces, was at last thus murthered by a base villains: and as touching the other three Henries, two of them misfortuned, viz. Henry the second was slaine in running at Tilt, and Henry the third was killed by a Frier, in reuenge of the Duke of Guyse, and his brother: and among other Kings of France that came to vntimely death, one was killed as he alighted from his horse, and another was slaine by a Sow as hee rode through Paris, and I doe finde in the French Chronicles, and other histories, that in the yeere 620. Theodobert, King of Lorraine and his children, were despightfully murthered by his Warens, and in the yeare 1347. Lewes the Emperour, the fourth of that name, as hee was hunting in a Wood, fell from his horse, and thereof dyed. In the yeare 1390. Iohn King of Spaine, as he was hunting a Hare, fell from his horse, and brake his necke. And in the yeare 1396. the King of Aragon riding after a Hare, fell from his horse, and brake his necke.

Ceremonies vsed at the Creation of the Prince of Wales.

Prince Henry created prince of Wales, and 24. Knights of the Bath made with many fantzy other things of note.

Wednesday the thirtieth day of May 1610. the Prince being accompanied with diuers young noble men, and also by his owne seruants, rode about twelue of the clocke the same day, from Saint Iames beyond Charing-Crosse to Richmond, where hee supped, and reposed himselfe for that night, and vpon Thursday morning following, being the one and thirtieth day of May, the Lord Maior of London, with his Brethren the Aldermen, and fifty foure of the Companies of London, being in their Barges adorned with diuers faire Banners, and Streamers, passed along the riuer of Thamis, in formerly order, viz. the Lord Maior his Barge first, and the rest of the Companies following, in which order they proceeded to Chelsey, where they attended the comming of the Prince, who's dinner was prepared at the Court of Whitehall, and the Maior and Companies, at their seuerall Halles: but by reason of the low Ebbe, his Highnesse could not come vntill foure of the clock in the afternoone, being first entertained by the way, about Barnelms with a Banquet: and comming to Chelsey where the Lord Maior with his traine attended, there was a Delphin, vpon whom sate Neptune, and vpon a Whale sate a water Goddesse, who made certaine speeches vnto the Prince; which being done, they proceeded towards the Court, the inferiour Companies first, and the Lord Maiors Barge betweene the two Sea monsters next before the Princes Barge, after which followed his owne Seruants, in seuerall Barges, and the Barges of diuers Noblemen that attended his Highnesse on the way: and when they came within the sight of the Court of Whitehall, the Companies of London were commanded to keepe along on London side: and the Princes Barge, with some other of the chiefest Lords to goe on Lambeth side, & so to make ouer to the Bridge at Whitehall, which was done accordingly. His Highnesse taking leaue of the Lord Maior, and the Aldermen, landed: and there was a peale of Chambers, placed directly ouer against the Court on Lambeth side, which were discharged when his Highnesse landed, and there hee was receiued by the Officers of the Kings houshold, in seuerall places according to their Offices, viz. first at the gate where his Highnes landed by the Knight Marshall, and the Seriant Porter: in the Hall by the Treasurer, and Comptroler of the houshold, and in the great Chamber by the Captaine of the Guard, and in the presence, by the Lord Chamberlaine, and so into the privy Chamber, where the King and Queene met him: and the Saturday after the Knights of the Bath, being in number twenty fiue met at Durham house betweene foure and fiue of the clock in the afternoone, and proceeded from the great Chamber round about the hall: not in any robes or habites that night, but in their ordinary apparell, the Heraulds going before them with their coats vpon their armes, and then entred the Chappell of the said house, and there euery Knight took his seat, the eldest first, with solemne reuerence placed, and then heard diuine Seruice: which being ended, they returned directly forth of the Chappell to the Chamber where they supped, sitting all on one side, and attended by Gentlemen Vshers, and the Kings Guard, euery Knights Scutcheon being placed ouer his head, as he sat that night at Supper, and after Supper they withdrew themselues into the next roome, where all their Bathes were prepared, euery one hauing his seuerall tub lined within, and without, with white linnen cloath, and couered on the top with red Say, and a ticket of euery mans name set vpon his Tub very orderly: and when they were bathed, there were beds set vp in the roome where they had supped for euery man: viz. a Pallet with a canopie, with an escutcheon of his armes placed there as he sat at supper, the next morning being Saturday, about leauen of the clocke they were all ready in their Heremeticall weedes, viz. each Knight in his gray Gowne: girded vnto him with a russet silke girdle, and a Handkerchiffe hanging thereat, and a linnen Coyfe vpon his head, and vpon that, his Hood of gray suitable to his Gowne, with a paire of cloath stockings, soaled with white Leather, called Cathambles, and being thus apparelled they went forward, the younger Knights marching first, and went round about the hall of the said house, in like manner as they had done the night before: the Kings Musitians, with their winde Instruments, and the Heraulds inuested in their coats of Armes, going before them, and so came vp againe to the Chappell, and tooke their seates, as they did the night before, with their accustomed reuerences, where diuine Seruice being ended, they tooke their oathes, the which was ministred vnto them by the Lord Chamberlaine, and the Earle of Worcester, the eldest Knights first, and so vnto the last, the manner whereof was thus: first, the two eldest Knights made their reuerence within their Stalles, and being come forth, made the like reuerence againe, and stood before their Stalls, one against another, and so two by two orderly, vntill they were all come forth and stood before their Stalles, then Clarentiaux and Norroy went down, and made their reuerence to the Altar: and brought vp the two first Knights to the Altar, where the Commissioners aforesaid sate to giue them their oathes, which being done, they returned downe as they came, and tooke their places before their Stalles, as they did before, then the two eldest Heraulds conducted the next two Knights Knights in like manner, and so by course and turne vntill they had all receiued their oathes, the forme of which oath followeth.

Right deere brother, great worship be this order vnto you, and the Almighty God giue you the vprising of all Knighthood, you shall honour God aboue all things, you shall be Leofast in the faith of Christ, and the same maintaine and defend to your power, you shall loue your Soueraigne aboue all earthly creatures, and for your Soueraigne, and your Soueraignes right and dignitie, liue and die, you shall defend Widowes, Maydens, and Orphants in their right, you shall suffer no extortion as farre forth as you may, nor sit in any place where any wrongfull Iudgement shall bee giuen to your knowledge, and as great honor be this Noble order vnto you, as euer it was to any of your progenitors.

This oath being giuen, and the Lords departed, the Knights standing still before their Stalles, were presented with a banquet of wine, and diuers delicate sweete meates, and after the same, they resorted to the Chamber where they had bin bathed the night before, and there put of their Heremeticall habits, and inuested themselues in their Crimson Taffaty Robes which was in this manner, first a Surcot of Crimson Taffaty, lined with white sarlenet girt vnto them, and ouer that a long Robe of like Crimson Taffaty, edged with White, hauing Tardoises of White Silke, with tassels of the same, at which Tardoises were tyed a payre of White leather gloues, their hatts bootes and feathers, were white also. and so they tooke their horses in Durham house yard about ten of the clocke, being furnished with blacke Leather Saddles, garnished with white, and white crelles ouer their horses foreheades, and perunells, and so rode vnto the Court, euery one betwixt his two Esquiers, and his Page before him bearing his Sword, the hilt vpwards, with his guilt spurres hanging thereon, the Heraulds riding before them, and the Trumpetters sounding all the way to the Court Gate: where they all alighted, and went on foot in such sort as they came on horsebacke, viz. the eldest Knights first, where they attended the Kings comming. And his Maiesty being come and placed vnder the cloth of Estate, he Knighted them according to their degrees as followeth: the eldest Knight being led vp by his two Esquires, and his Page before him, bearing his Sword and Spurres, deliuered them to the Lord Chamberlaine, and the Lord Chamberlaine presented them to the King, who put the belt about their neckes, and the sword hanging bend wayes, in which manner they were all one after another Knighted, and one of their Spurres was put on their right heele by a great Lord, and the other Spur by their Page, which being ended they Rode backe againe to Durham house in the same order as they came: but that the youngest Knight rode formost, and their Pages came behinde them.

All this time they were entertained with sundry sorts of excellent Musicke.

The dinner was prepared in the Roome where they supped the night before, with euery Knights Armes ouer his head as aforesayd, sitting all vpon one side of the table: yet did they neither eate nor drinke, of that which was there prepared for them, but hauing fate a conuenient time in this gentle abstinence, they all arose, and withdrew themselues into another roome, leauing their well furnished Table to the pleasure of their Esquires and Pages. And after dinner about foure of the clocke they rode againe to the Court in like manner as they returned home in the morning, viz. the youngest Knights first, and his Page behind him, and so came to the chappell where with accustomed reuerences, to God and the King, they entred, and ascended their Stalles as they had formerly done in the morning at Durham house, and presently after the second Lesson, the Musique of the offertory being begun, the Knights with their vsuall reuerences came forth, and stood before their Stalles: where the Earle of Orford (Garter going before him) first offered his Sword at the Alter, the pommell vpwards, and redeemed it againe for an Angell of gold, and receiuing a short exhortation of the Deane, he returned before his Stall againe, then two other of the eldest Knights were brought vp by two of the Kings of armes, who in like manner offered their Swords and redeemed them and returned, and so the rest one after another, offered their Swordes vntill the youngest. The wordes of the Deanes exhortations were these.

By the oath that you haue taken this day, you shall be these Swordes to the honour of God, and his word, to the defence of your King and Country, and to the mantenynance of Iustice and Equitie.

Euening prayer being ended, there stood at the Chappell doore, the Kings maister cooke with his white Apron and sleeues, and chopping knife in his hand guilded about the edge, and challenged their Spurres which they redeemed with a noble a piece: and he sayd to euery Knight as they passed by him these or the like wordes.

Sir Knight looke that you bee true and loyall to the King my maister: or else I must heiw these Spurres from your heeles.

And so they marched through the Hall into the Court yard, and at the Gate tooke their horses and returned to Durham house in the same order as they came, the Trumpets sounding, the Heraulds still attending them till they came there, and then euery Knight alighted and put of his Robes, and then euery one went priuatly to his owne lodging: for that night they had no Supper there prouided. The next morning about eight of the clock they met all in the Queenes closet, where they put on long purple Sattin Robes, lined with white Taffaty without any Tardoises: and about their neckes, a hood like a Batcheller of Law, edged about with Taffaty beeing then ready to

to attend the Prince vnto his creation, but for want of good and true direction, the Prince who should have gone in a Barge by himselfe, and these Knights in another before him, went with the King in his Barge, and the Knights of the Bathes, stayed behind, vntill they were sent for, and being landed at Westminster Pallace Bridge: they were met at the Hall Gate, by the Heraulds only, and so conducted vp to the doore of the Court of Wardes, where the Prince was to proceede to his creation, and they went in next before the Lordes that were employed in seuerall services at the sayd Creation; and the Heraulds before them, and proceeded into the Parliament Chamber, where he was created in this manner following, the Lords performing their seuerall offices here vnder written.

Master Garter, bearing the Letters Patentes.

The Earle of Sussex, the Robes of purple Velvet.

The Earle of Huntington the Traine.
The Earle of Cumberland the Sword.
The Earle of Rutland the King.
The Earle of Darby the Rod.

The Earle of Shrewsbury the Cappe and Coronet.

The Earle of Nottingham and the Lord prime Seale, supported the Prince being in his surcote only, and bare-headed.

And so in this manner, proceeded into the great white chamber, which for that time was prepared and appointed to bee the Parliament house, where the King was already set with all the Lords Spirituall and Temporall of the Realme in their Robes of Estate, and with all the Knights, and Burgesses of the lower house, vpon Stages made for that purpose, and also diuers other Stages, namely one for the Lord Mayor and Aldermenne of London, another for Ambassadours, and another for great Ladies, and such like: and proceeding vp in the same manner as aforesayd, they made three seuerall low reuerences vnto his Maiestie, and when they came vp to the King, Master Garter tooke the Letters patents, and gaue them to the Lord Chamberlaine, who presented them to the King, and the King to the Earle of Salisbury, principall Secretary, who read them, the Prince kneeling all the while before the King, and at the words accustomed the King put on the Robe, the Sword the Cap, and the Coronet, the Robbe and Ring, his Patteut was read, the King kissed him on the cheeke, and the Earle Marshall, with the Lord Chamberlaine, brought him and placed him in his Parliament Seate, viz. on the left hand of the King. All which being ended, they returned downe through Westminster Hall, to the Pallace Bridge, in this manner: first the Masters of the Chancery and other Officers of the Law, viz. the Kings counsell, and others, then the officers of Armes, then the Knights of the Bath, next after them the Judges, and after them the whole Parliament house in order, as the commen proceeding is, the Barons, Viscounts, Earles, and Marquesses, having Coronets on their heads, Master Norroy, and Master Clarenceaux going next before the Lord Treasurer and the Lord Chauncellour, and Master Garter next before the Sword, and so proceeded to the Stayres, where all tooke Water, in seuerall Barges, the Heraulds, and the Trumpets going in the tow Barge next before the Knights, and so landed at White Hall Bridge: where the Officers of Armes, the Knights of the Bathe, and Lords being first landed attended the King. And when the King and Prince were landed, they went all before him into the Hall, and so by into the great Chamber, from whence the Prince came downe to Dinner into the Hall, where were two Tables set longwayes downe the Hall, one of them Roode in the middle, where the Prince himselfe sate at the vpper end, accompanied with the Lords that attended him in his creation, all placed on both sides of the same Table, and at the other Table on the left hand of the Prince, sate the Knights of the Bath in their purple Robes, all vpon one side, where they were all royally feasted, and attended by the Kings seruants.

Ambassadors of Spaine, Venice, and the States.

The Earle of Salisbury was then Lo. Treasurer of England.

At the second course, Master Garter with the Heraulds in very reuerend manner came to the Princes boord, and proclaimed the kings stile, with these Largesses as is accustomed, viz. King of England, Scotland, Fraunce, and Ireland, defender of the faith &c. and also Proclaymed the Princes stile, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornewall, and Rothesey, and Earle of Chester, and Knight of the Garter, with two Largesses.

This is in briefe, the whole state, course, and manner of this most ioyfull creation, which was long wished for: Now followeth a compendium of the precedent Princes of Wales, with other things of worthy note: but first the names of the Knights of the Bath, and then a word or two of the Triumphs and entertainements of time, in honour of his highnesse happy Creation.

In honour of this creation of the Prince, there was the next night at the Court, a most rich, and Royall Maske of Ladies, viz. the Queene, the Lady Elizabeth, daughter to our Soueraigne, the Lady Arbella, the Countesse of Arundell, the Countesse of Darby, the Countesse of Oxford, the Countesse of Dorset the Countesse of Pountgomery, the Viscountesse of Haddington, the Lady Elizabeth Gray, the Lady Elizabeth Gilford, the Lady Katherine Peter, the Lady Winter, and the Lady Windsor, and vpon Wednesday in the afternoone in the Tilt yard, there were diuers Earles, Barons, and others being in rich, and glorious Armour, and hauing costly Capariſons, wonderous curiously Imbroydered with Pearle, Gold, and Siluer, the like rich habiliaments for horses, were neuer seene before, presented their seuerall ingenious deuices, and Trophies, before the King and Prince, and then ran at Tilt, where there was a world of people to behold them: and that night there were other Nauall Triumphs, and pastimes vpon the water, ouer against the Court with Shippes of warre, and Gallies fighting, one against another, and against a great Castle, builded vpon the water. After these Battels then for an houres space, there were many strange and variable fier workes in the Castle, and in all the Shippes, and Gallies without any manner of hurt to any person, the Thamis being in a manner close couered with Boates, and Barges full of people, besides the Shoare on both sides, neere thereunto, was surcharged with people.

Triumphs in honor of the Prince his Coronation.

Before I speake of the Precedent Princes of Wales, I thought good, to insert here a briefe note out of Matthew of Westminster, page foure hundred fifty eight, where he sayth: that King Edward the first, in the feast of Penticost, made his Sonne Edward Knight, at Westminster, at which feast in honor of the Prince, were dubbed three hundred Knights more, but the Prince by the Kings appoyntment, kept his wake with the princi pall, and worthiest men of his company, in Westminster Church, and the King dubbed his Sonne a Knight, in his owne pallace, and therewith gaue him the Dukedome of Aquitaine: the Prince beeing thus created Knight went presently into Westminster Church, for to grace with like dignity his friends, and companions: but the presse of people was so great in the Church thronging to the high Altar, to behold this Ceremony, that two of these Knights were crushed to death, and diuers other in great hazard, notwithstanding that euery one had three Souldiers to lead him and defend him, and the Prince himselfe by reason of the multitude, hauing made a lane amongst them, by meanes of great horses of seruice, was faine to get vp vpon the high Altar, to girt his aforesaid companies with the order of Knighthood.

King Edward the third, in the yeere one thousand three hundred thirty and seuen, and the twelfe yeare of his Raigne, with the full consent of his Parliament then holden at Westminster, made the auncient Earledome of Cornewall, a Dukedome, and then gaue it to his Eldest Sonne, Prince Edward, and gaue him therewithall, the Earledome of Chester, the King in honour of his Sonnes being created Duke of Cornewall, made fiue Earles, and in the eighteenth yeere of his raigne, he also by Parliament, at Westminster created his Sonne Edward Prince of Wales, and in the three thirtieth yeere of his raigne at Windsor vpon Saint Georges day, in the presence of the Kings of Fraunce, and Scotland, and of all the chiefe Nobilitie, with wonderous solemnities, in honour of high Chiualry, Instituted the most noble order of the Garter. And the next yeere after, in the moneth of July his Sonne Iohn Earle of Richmond, maryed the Lady Blanch, Daughter and heire to Henry Duke of Lancaster, and presently after her fathers death, the sayd Iohn in his wiues right, was made Duke of Lancaster. At this Nuptiall was performed in Smithfield at London the greatest Iusts, and Tilting, that euer was in England: for notwithstanding a generall challenge, with free permission for all knights that thither came. The King himselfe primly with foure of his Sonnes, viz. Edward, Prince of Wales, Lyonell, Iohn, and Edmon, and with them 19 great Lords. And the same yeere King Edward gaue direct order, for the making and placing of his tombe, or Sepulcher, in the Abbey Church at Westminster, but hee lined 17. yeeres after, and in the 35. yeere of his raigne, being in France he dubbed 400. Knights at once. The forenamed Prince Edward, surnamed the blacke Prince, dyed vpon Trinity Sunday, one thousand three hundred seauenty and fiue, viz. the yeere before his father dyed, and was buried at Canterbury, and presently after the obsequies, his son Richard borne in Bourdeaux, was by the King created Prince of Wales, at Yauering bing ten yeeres of age.

The Institution of the honorable order of Knights of th Garter. And in the 13 yeere of Rich. the 2. there were also great Iusts and Turnaments in Smithfield 24 dayes together, at this time Smithfields field was a large pleasant place. And from thence with out interruption men might haue fame a great way Eastward, Westward, and Northward, as vnto Shordich, Hygate, Gil sand into the Strand, for then there was no houses to hinder the sight.

The originall of the Prince Dolphin of Fraunce.

Phillip of Vallois, the nine and fortieth King of Fraunce, in the yeere of our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ, one thousand three hundred foztie and nine, bought the Prouince, and Dolphine of Imbertus Dawphin, for a small Summe of Money: vpon condition that for euer after, the eldest Sonnes of the King of Fraunce, should be called the Prince Dawphin: which our English Chronicles call Prince Dolphine, and the French Chronicles call our Prince, the Prince of Wales, Prince of Gaules.

The order and succession of the former Princes of Wales, of English blood

Edward the sonne of King Henry the third, who was afterward King of England, by the name of Edward the first, was the first of English blood that was made Prince of Wales, and after him his sonne Edward, that was borne at Carnarbum, which was afterward called Edward the second, was the second Prince of Wales, this King Edward the second, I haue read did conferre the principalitie of Wales, vpon his sonne Edward, and was created at Bayke, which was afterward called Edward the third, and during his fathers Raigne was also intituled Earle of Chester, and Flint, but this Edward the third, created his sonne Edward the blacke Prince, Prince of Wales, with a solemne inuesture, who being taken away by vntimely death, before his father, Richard the sonne of the sayd blacke Prince, succeeded in all his fathers dignities, and after the death of his Grand-father was King of England, by the name of Richard the second, and was afterwards deposed by King Henry the fourth, whose sonne Henry, was the next Prince of Wales, who was after, King Henry the fift, but his sonne Henry the first, not being a yeere olde when his father dyed, neuer received that dignitie, but the sayd Henry the first, bestowed it vpon his sonne Edward, that was afterward slaine at Tewkesbury. Not long after that, King Edward the fourth hauing obtained the Kingdoome: made his young son Edward, Prince of Wales, who was afterward called Edward the fift, and presently his brother Richard made him away, And being King himselfe, created his son Edward Prince of Wales, who dyed shortly after. Afterward King Henry the seuenth, constituted his eldest son Arthur, Prince of Wales, who dying without issue, his brother Henry succeeded him in that dignitie.

The originall of the compasse of the Merchants of the East Indies with other things of note.

So gracious, mercifull, and bountifull euer were, and are the fauours, and blessings of Almighty God, vpon the Welleene Christian Princes, not onely in giuing them the full knowledge, and free possession, of his diuine Gospell, the most vse, and best practise of all excellent Artes, and Sciences, as well for warre as peace, especially in building of Shippes, and profoundnesse in the Admirable Art of Nauigation.

But also in discouering, Conquering, and conuerting many farre remote Kingdomes and Nations, by which diuers Christian Princes, haue obtayned vnspeakeable riches, whereby they are, and haue beene inabled to resist the bagly rigorous Inuasions, tyrannous oppressions, and dangerous attempts of their common and vnreconcilable enemy the Turke, whose deuoted malice vnto Christendome, neuer sleepeth: against which it hath pleased Almighty God, to make the Christian Princes, not onely the great masters of the Ocean, the Leuant and mid-land Seas, but also commanders of all other the great Seas, and deepest waters, and chiefly within this last hundred yeeres, viz. in the yeere 1492. by the discouery of the West Indies, by the renowned Christopherus Columbus, and in the yeere one thousand fiue hundred and nineteene, when the famous Magellanes, discouered the great Straights, of whom it now rightly beareth the name, consisting in length of one hundred and ten Leagues, where blew snow is vsually seene.

And in the same yeere one thousand fiue hundred and nineteene, Hernando Cortesio, began his prosperous Conquest, of the great West Indian Empire, now called noua Hispania, wherein standeth the great Citty Mexico, since which time this our royall Kingdom, and Noble Nation: partly through necessity, and by diligence and industrie, hath got the expert knowledge of making great Shippes, and by ingenious practise, singular profoundnesse in the Art of Nauigation, hauing made many great and memorable aduentrous Voyages, vnto the farthest Continent, as you may read at large in those excellent volumes, of the reuerend Master Hacklmit, in due consideration whereof, in generall, and for my full discharge in particular, I haue here thought good to record vnto all that are present, and to come, the great and manifold blessings of Almighty God, bestowed vpon England, and the English Nation, being but the halfe of the famous ancient Ile of great Britaine, which Kingdome and people though truely auncient, and right worthily renowned throgh out the whole world, as well for Scituation, as for Martiall prowesse, profoundnesse in learning, perfection of curious Artes, and the liberall Sciences, the which although this Famous Nation was not the first Plantasse of inuentes, nor the first of the West Nations, that attained true perfection in all Arts, and Sciences, because it is an Iland diuided by the Ocean from the maine land, yet by degrees through the prouidence of her Princes, together with the diligence and industry of the people, they are now possest with as full measure of knowledge in all things, as any Kingdome in the World, especially in Nauigation, and discouery of remote Nations, to their euerlasting honor, increase of Wealth and Traffique, to this Kingdome, besides all which such hath beene their publique Estimation that all forrayne Nations, haue euer held themselues greatly beholding vnto the English, endeauouring by all meanes to haue Commerce and Trade for the naturall fruites and Commodities of this Land whereof, they euer stood in in neede the chiefe whereof was Woolll, Tinne, Leather, and Leade, but chiefely Woolll, for which choice commodities the English Merchants obtained many gracious priuiledges, and Immunities both at home and abroad, and became famous by the name of Merchants of the Staple. in such sort that so soone as King Edward the third had wonne Callis, he called them from Gaunt, Burges, and other places, and eskablished the Staple at Callis, where for many yeeres, they payed the Garrison, continued a great trade, builded a fayre Chappell, and maintained a very honorable reputation, yet neuertheleste by time, and time, it was found most necessary, that the common Subiects of this Land, as they encreased, should bee taught the full knowledge of Spinning, Carding, and making of sundry sortes of Cloathes, broade and narrowe. And for that purpose in the dayes of King Edward the second, and King Edward the third, and since their time there were many workemen brought from Fraunce, Flaunders, and Artoys, by whose instructions the English attayned the full knowledge of making Woollen cloath, and in short space excelled their teachers, and so this Kingdome hath continued the making of great store of excellent Cloath, which all Nations hitherto haue alwayes desired for their generall vse.

For Transportation whereof, certaine Merchants vpon very good consideration, obtayned a strong Corporation for themselues and their successors, and grew very famous, whose rising, and encreasing, was the Staplers decreasing, calling themselues the Merchant-aduenturers, of which Name they are now ashamed: for then their vsuall voyages were but to Callis, Selues, or Middleborough, and after that to Antwerpe, their Shippes, or skill in Nauigation, was then but small in comparition of this time, and it is recorded in the Guildhall in London, for a most memorable matter, that in the yeere there was one Citizen that aduentured fifty pounds, which is vnto vs at this present, a sufficient Testimony of the wonderous encrease of trade and Wealth in this Kingdome: when at this day there are a great number of Merchantes, that aduenture particularly fiue thousand pounds, and some twenty Thousand: not onely such as are of the Vnnice Company, otherwise called the Merchantes-Aduenturers, but also Merchantes of other companies, which haue obtained Corporations within mans memory, as the Muscouy, Turkey, Spayne, Barbary, and now lastly, the East Indian company, which company Queene Elizabeth, in the fozty third yeere of her raigne vpon good consideration, granted Letters Pattents, for fifteene yeeres vnto the East Indian Marchantes, Trading to the East Indies, who then and before had discouered many farre Kingdomes, and Nations Eastward, the chiefe whereof were Achine, the chiefe Cittie of the Kingdome of Sumatra, and Pryamam, Hauen Townes in Sumatra, and the Cittie Bantam, in Iaua Maior, whose chiefest wealth consisteth in Cloues, and Pepper. In the Mountaines of Iaua Maior, are many Canyballs, who are at mortall hatred with the other Inhabitants, like as it is with the Inhabitants of Sumatra, yet neuertheleste vpon the three weekely market dayes, which are alwayes kept at Bantam, the Canyballs goe and come peaceably to Bantam market, without any interruption or violence, either to or fro: but at all other times, it is quite contrary, for the cruell people striue to take, and make slaues of the Canyballes and the Canyballes, by all meanes possible, practise to kill, and eate, all other the inhabitants of Iaua Maior. The East India Merchantes haue also recourse vnto many other places as Amboyna, Tarenate, Machean, and Tidore, which are Iles of the Molluccoes, and the Iles of Banda: in all which places aforesayd the people for the most part, are Mahometists, except those vpon the coastes of Cambaya, but amongst the people and Nations aboue named, notwithstanding, that they are for the most part Mahometists, yet are there sundry sortes of Religions amongst them. Whereof none so worthy of note as the Banyany, who erroniously beleeue that there is no greater sinne then to kill, or depriue any liuing creature of life, and in that consideration, they doe absolutely abstaine from killing, or eating of any manner of thing, that hath breath, and liue onely by hearbes, and such like. these people are the subtilest, and haue the readiest memory, and best comprehension, of any people in that part of the world. In some of those Iles aforesayd are sundry beasts, and birdes of strange shape, and qualitie, as in Banda, from whence Captaine William Keeling, hearing generall of the third voyage, brought hither a Foule called Calluare, as bigge as a Turkie, and it hath no wings: it will eate and digest hote burning coales, and also eate wood, and any manner of mettall, being in small peeces. The English shippes in their long voyages, going vnto the Kingdomes and places before named, are constrayned to touch by the way, in diuers places for victuall and fresh water, as in the Ile of Saya, which is one of the Iles of Cape Verde, and at Capo de bona Esperanza, in Ethiopia, where plenty of Cattell so abound, that our English Merchants at their first comming thither to mend their prouision, bought many hundreds of good fat bullockes, and payed for euery Bullocke, but a pound of olde Iron, and for euery fatte Lambe, fower small pinnes, beeing such as are bought here in England for ten pence a thousand, but now of late they haue rayled the prices of their cattell foure fold.

These Ethiopians are generally heathens, the English ships also touch at Madagascar, alias Saint Lavrence, where there is often extreame Chamber, and lightning, continuing many dayes together, and sometimes many weekes, and the lightning burneth as blew as Azure, and is as noysome as Brimstone, the people of the Countrey, although they be Heathens, yet they are very courteous.

The English Shippes touch also at Nycobar, and at other places, and by their painefull and industrious trauaile, haue discouered great Kingdomes, and strange Nations, besides many other Portes, and Prouinces, rich and full of Traffique, to the great honour of this Kingdome and Nation: yet neuertheless for as much as these Indian voyages, were very long and chargeable, consisting of threescore or fourescore thousand pound, the well setting forth of one voyage, besides great wages, and other expenses, with three yeeres vnknowne aduenture in the voyage. They were somewhat discouraged to persist, except their Charter were greater.

Whereupon, at their humble suite, vnto his Maiesty, the King was pleased for their better encouragement, and for the encrease of Trade, Shippes, Mariners, and skilfull Nauigators, for the more enriching, and better strengthning of this Kingdome, and good likelyhood, to preuent both the Turke, and Persians of their richest Trade.

In May one thousand fiue hundred and nine, to graunt vnto them an enlargement of their first Letters Pattents, and gaue them a Charter, to continue for euer, enabling them thereby, to be a Body Corporate and politique. At which time this company, who right worthily deserue the name of Merchant aduenturers, builded a very Stately Shippe, of the burthen of twelue hundred Tunne, being the greatest and fayrest Shippe that euer was made in this Kingdome by Merchants: or was bought in former time, in any of the Hanse Townes, or else where, when the Kings of England vsed to buy forreyne Shippes: vntill this Nation had obtayned the full perfection of building Shippes, which is within mans memory, although at this day, they excell all other Nations therein.

The lesse of Lubeck which sir Iohn Hawkins lost in the West Indies, was the last great Ship which was either builded or bought beyond the Seas.

They also builded a lustie pinnace, of two hundred and fifty Tunne, and sent it with two other to attend the great Ship: for in these East Indian voyages there is more imployment of extraordinary great Shippes, then in any other: this company had formerly set out fiue seuerall voyages, whereof some by this time, had made a prosperous returne, with Spice, and other commodities, but chiefely Cloues and Pepper. Whereupon the King in fauour of that Company, the fourth of December by Proclamation, absolutely prohibited the importation of Pepper, from all forreyne parts, except onely by the society of Merchants, of the East Indies: In this Proclamation it was ordained that no retayler should sell Pepper for aboue two shillings sixpence the pound, at the most: and the thirtieth of December, the King, with Prince, with diuers of the chiefe Nobilitie, went to Debtford to see the great Shippe Launched, and when they had seene euery roome in the Shippe, they were royally Banquetted in the chiefe Cabin: and their followers were Banquetted at a long Table in the halfe decke, plentifully furnished with delicates serued in fine China Dishes, all which were freely permitted to be carried away by all persons.

The King shewed many fauours vnto the Merchants of that company, and gaue vnto Sir Thomas Smith, Gouernour of that societie, a very fayre Chayne of Golde, with a Iewell thereon was the Kings Picture, and commended his sundry good endeauours, for the Company and common wealth: the Chiefe Clerck of the Company, kissed the Kings hand. The King called the great Shippe, the Trades Increase, and the Pinnace, the Pepper Corne, these two Shippes with two other, were sent forth in March following, vnder commaund, of Sir Henry Middleton Knight, Generall in this expedition, being the first voyage, the charge whereof was fourescore thousand pound: and in Nouember one thousand six hundred and ten they sent forth one Shippe, at twelue thousand pound charge.

And the next spring went forth a voyage of three Shippes, the charge whereof in setting forth, amounted vnto fiftie six thousand Poundes, and this was the eight voyage, whereof Captaine Iohn Sayres went Generall.

And for full conclusion of this thirde discourse of the East India Merchants, you shall vnderstand that the Trades Increase, after long and tedious trauaile, and hauing beene in the red Sea, they returned to Bantam, and was there lost, and there dyed the generall and most of his men.

And in the yeere, one thousand fiue hundred and eleuen, the Company sent forth foure other Shippes, the chiefe whereof was the Dragon being a thousand Tunne of burthen, ouer which, Captaine Thomas Best, went Generall: his voyage was for the Coast and Countrey of Cambaya, which is in the Kingdome of the great Maghoore. This Generall with part of his fleete arriued vpon that Coast of Surat, at the end of fiue moneths, which formerly had not beene performed in lesse then or eightene moneths: he was there very honourably entertained, and setled a Factory there vpon very good conditions, to the great aduancement of the Company, and obtained of the great Maghoore, his firma or Letters Pattents, as wee call it, for full establishing of this factory.

And whilest this was in working, the Portugalles, viz. the vice Roy of Goa: secretly prepares, and sets forth foure great well furnished warlicke Galleons, assisted with twenty fire lustie Fryggots or Gallies, being all well appointed with men and munition of purpose to defeat or take Generall Best, and his Company.

The

The Portugales presuming of their great strength, viz. 5000. fresh men, and 130. peeces of great Ordinance, in their foure Galeons, besides the force of their Frigots or Gallyes, in very proud manner set vpon the English Generall being in the Dragon, assisted onely with her lusty Pinnace, making full account to surprise them, and dispose of the English at their pleasure: but by Gods prouidence they found it otherwise, for after fiue seuerall Fights, the Portugales were so sore beaten and spoyled, with losse and slaughter of about 1200. of their men, that from that time they permitted the English quietly to ride in the Rode, and to doe their businesse without any further interruption: and they themselues desired of the heathen people, for their great pride and couardize. This Fight thus ended, and the factory confirmed and established: then Generall Best, who hauing warely obserued the estate of the businesse in generall, and of the condition of the former, and present course vsed in trading to the East Indies, and there with all deeply looking into the mischiefe that dayly happened to the company in sundry places by their seuerall Factors, crossing and preuenting one another: to preserre seuerall voyages wherein they were sent and imployed: did therefore in the yeare 16.2. not onely aduertise the company of all his proceedings, but also very iudiciously aduised them for their future businesse, and sent his letters ouer-land by one of his owne men to the Gouernour and Company. Who hauing well deliberated thereupon, at length they decreed, that from that time forward, there should be a tryal Stock for euer. Generall Best went from Surat to Archin, to the great Iland of Sumatra, where being honourably entertained by the King thereof, and hauing receiued his letters and Present to the King of England, he went thence to Bantam, in the Ile of Iaua Maior, where hee fraughted his ship with Cloues, Pepper, and Beniamine, and with the same returned in safety to London in July, in the yeare 1614. Sir Thomas Smith Knight, being then Gouernour and Master, William Greenewell Deputy gouernour of that Company. At this time Paul Canning was left Lieger and Agent in the Court of the great Maghoore, for the Company of the East India Marchants: and at the end of this Summer, Captaine Sares returned in the Clone, which was very richly fraught: and in January 1614. Sir Thomas Roe was sent Lord Ambassadour to the great Maghoore, of whom I haue written more at large.

Iesuites and Seminaries banished.

The fourth of June, this yeare 1610. the King by Proclamation, commanded all Romane Priests, Iesuites, and Seminaries, to depart this Kingdom by the fourth day of July next, and not to returne, vpon paine of seuerity of the Law, this Proclamation also straightly commanded all Recusants, to returne home to their dwellings, and not to remaine in London, nor to come within ten miles of the Court without especiall licence: but to depart from London and the Court, by the last day of this moneth of June, and to remaine confined according to the tenour of the Statute in that behalfe ordained.

The Oath of Allegeance administred vnto all persons, vpon seuera[illegible] occasions.

Presently after this Proclamation, the oath of Allegeance was minister vnto all Officers, Barresters, Attournies, and Clarkes, belonging vnto any of the Courts of Westminster Hall, the Exchequer, and Court of Requests, and also vnto all Doctors of the Lawes, Auocates, and Proctours of the Spirituall Courts: this Oath was also ministred vnto all other sorts of Lawyers: as Students in the Innes of Court and Chauncery, and vnto all Students and Schollers, in both the Vniuersities: and I should haue told you before, that presently vpon the murther of the French king, all our English Lords and Commons of the Parliament of England, humbly beseeght his Maiestie to haue a more especiall care then formerly had beene, for the preseruation of his Royall person, and likewise to take speedy order for auoyding of imminent danger: and keeping his Subiects in their one obedience, and forthwith the Commons of the Parliament for manifestation of their allegeance, loue, and duty, they voluntarily of their owne accord tooke the Oath of Allegeance: and after them the Lords of the vpper house did so likewise, and they ministred the same Oath vnto all their seruants and followers, and those that refused to take this Oath, were put from their Lords seruices.

And the Bishops in their Conuocation house, ordained that euery Bishop in his seuerall visitation, should administer the same Oath vnto all their Clergie and Officers, which they performed accordingly. After which the Oath was ministred vnto others, as is last before mentioned: and vpon further occasion, the next yeare following, viz the 4. of June 1611. the King by Proclamation straightly commanded the Oath of Allegeance to be then also administred vnto all sorts of people, and a true certificate thereof to be made vnto the great Lords of the Priuy Councell, of the due administration thereof, with the names of such as should refuse to take the Oath, vnder the hands of two Iustices of Peace, according to the meaning of the Statute in that behalfe lately prouided.

Whereas in the yeare 1586. as I haue formerly made mention, there were certaine Merchants, and other Citizens of London, who practised Armes and Martiall discipline in the Artillery Garden without Bishops-gate, which ground was anciently belonging to Saint Maries Spittle there, and was since granted for many yeares, by the last Prior thereof, to the vse and practise of great and small Artillery: which of all others, is most worthy to be commended and exercised, hauing beene discontinued, euer since the yeare, one thousand fiue hundred eighty eight, was this present yeare one thousand fiue hundred and ten, by meanes of Philip Hudson, (now Lieutenant of the Company there) Thomas Lauerocke, Robert Hughes, Samuell Arthois, Robert Greenehurſt, and diuers o-ther Gentlemen, and Cittizens of London, aſſociated in the ſayd Artillery Garden, now newly erected, exerciſed, and ſet on foote a-gaine, with ſufficient warrant, and tollerati-on graunted them, by the Lords of his Maie-ſties moſt Honorable Priuie Councell, vnto whom they became humble ſuitors in the be-ginning, for preuention of all future miſtructi-on of their honeſt intent, and Actions there, and hauing duely conſidered the neceſſitie of the knowledge of Armes in ſo populus a place, and the inconueniences that happened, to Ant-werpe, and other their late populous and flou-riſhing neighbour Cities, principally by reaſon of their negled, of that moſt Noble exerciſe of Armes, and martiall diſcipline, in times of Wealth, and peace. They haue now therefore for preuenting the like miſchiefe in this their nurſing mother, ſo farre as in them lies, like louing ſonnes to ſo glorious a Citty, vnderta-ken at their own priuate and particular charge a weekely exerciſe of Armes, and military diſcipline, after the moderne, and beſt faſhion, and inſtruction now in vſe. And for their bet-ter eaſe, and more conuenience, they haue e-rected a ſtrong and well furniſhed armory in the ſayd ground, in which are Armes of ſeue-rall ſortes, and of ſuch extraordinary beauty, fa-ſhion, and goodneſſe for ſeruice, as are hard to bee matched elſe where. Of which ſayd com-pany Captaine Edward Panton, was their firſt Captaine and Nic. Speering, a Merchant of this City, their firſt elected Ancient or En-ſigne bearer, thoſe that were formerly of the olde Artillerie Garden, did good ſeruice many yeares in their owne perſons, and in teaching others, and theſe now laſt, are more likely to doe much more particular and generall ſeruice, by reaſon their practiſe is greater, and more ſkilfull.

Fulmer, a Towne ſo called in Buckingham-ſhire, hauing their parith Church aboue a myle diſtant from thence, in the open field, hauing now growne very olde and ruinate: in regard whereof, and for the generall eaſe and good of poſterities, it pleaſed Sir Marmaduke Dorrell Knight, maſter of the Kings houſholde, to take downe the ruines of that decayed Church, and at his owne charge, to build a new large fayre Parith Church, with a Font, a Pulpit, and all Church ornaments, with ſeates, and all other neceſſaries, and enuironed it with a fayre Church-yard, and was builded within the Towne of Fulmer, this Knight being Lozd thereof: and from this time the Pa-riſhioners were freed from the offence of Sommers heate, foule wayes, and Win-ters weather, which vntill now were held great impediments in their duteous repayze vnto the houſe of God. This Church thus fully finiſhed and adorned, was conſecrated the firſt day of Nouember, this yeare one thouſand fiue hundzed and tenne, by the right reuerend Father in God, Doctoz Barlow, then Lozd Bi-ſhop of Lincolne: the manner whereof briefely followeth, and the firſt Church-yard was hal-lowed, which the Biſhop and all the aſſembly compaſſed, and as they marched, they ſung the 100. Pſalme: this ceremte finiſhed, the Biſhop made a compendious ſpeech, expreſſing the rea-ſons of this, and the like enclozures about Churches, two whereof were chiefe, the one was to giue due diſtinction, ſtate, and reuerence to the Temple of Almighty God, from all pro-phane wayes and baſe places, and that no other building ſhould bee neere vnto it: and to this purpoſe he cited the 43. chapter of Ezech. The other reaſon is, becauſe the Church-yard is a Dozmitozy, or place of reſt, for Chriſtians to ſleepe in, vntill the reſurrection, for ſo much the woꝛd in Greeke and Latine ſignifieth: in this ſpeech he diſtinguiſhed all differences of places and perſons, &c. with the diuine reaſons, cauſe, and holy inſtitution of theſe things in the Primitiue Church, and duly obſerued by all the holy Fathers, &c. This done, the Biſhop ſayd to the Feunder, this parcell of ground which we haue compaſſed for the buriall of the dead within your parith is yet your owne, if it now therefoze your free mind to giue it for euer to this vſe, whereunto hee anſwered, I gins it freely, and with an earnest desire to that purpo e: the Bishoppe likewise askes the Parish Priest, and the Church-Wardens of the same Parish Church, if they all had the same desire, and they all answered affirmatively, humbly beseeching the Bishoppe to perfit in what he had so well begunne: then the Bishop read the instrument of consecration, wherein was contained an interdiction, that the olde Churchyard should not bee layd open to any common or prophane use: then the Priest with due reverence read the 90. Psalme, and the 23. chapter of Genesis. Then the Bishop prayed, saying, O blessed Jesus, our onely Saviour, and Redeemer, who being the Resurrection, and the life, hast of thy mercy promised, and by thy power art able to raise agayne unto life the bodies of the dead, that lye in their graues, whether rotted with corruption, or ren vnred to dust, wee humbly beseech thee of thine especiall favor to vouchsafe that all those thy servants, which shall within this cleuate be buryed, may leade their lives in thy feare, and leaning them in thy faith, may rest in peace within their graues, untill the great day of thy second comming, and may then bee raysed anew in assured hope to raigne with thee in that everlasting glory, which with thy most precious blod thou hast purchased for them, and for all that love thee and looke for thy appearance. heare us O blessed Jesus, for thy passion sake, heare us O loving Father for thy Sonnes sake, to whom with thee and the holy Ghost, three equall persons, and one eternall God, be rendred all thankes prayse, and glory, Amen.

The Church it selfe.

Then the Bishop entred into the Church porch, and turned his face to the Founder that was lead in thither betweene two knights, and said vnto him, now verily this Church yard is exempt and free from any challenge of yon or yours, but this house as yet remaines wholly your owne, say now therefore, if you renounce all your right, clayme, and interrest to the same, he answered affirmatively: then the Bishop asked him if his hearts desire were to haue it dedicated to the Almighty God, and consecrated to his divine service onely: whereunto the Founder answered, saying, most joyfully and willingly: then the Bishop required the Founder to read this Psalme, viz. One thing have I desired of the Lord, which I will require, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord, all the dayes of my life, to beholde the fayre beautie of the Lord, and to visit his Temple, and so read on to the 7. verse: which done, the Bishop tooke him by the hand, and went forward, saying, I was glad when they said vnto me, we will goe into the house of the Lord. And at the second verse of this Psalme, they both kneeled towardes the East, and devoutly said the rest, with glory be to the Father and to the Sonne, and to the holy Ghost, &c. After this the Bishop made a devout prayer, acknowledging Gods omnipotence and divine power, and that heauen is his seat, and the earth his footestoole, so that his Majestie and glorious presence could not bee confined within materiall Temples, &c. and prayed that it would please his Fatherly goodnesse, that his servants might assemble together in that place, to heare divine service, and to make their humble and devout prayers, and supplications, and to heare his will and word revealed vnto them, and that this place consecrated to his service, and severed from all prophane imployments: that it would please his divine Majestie to bless it, and accept it at their hands, as a fit place for the vsuall assembly, a house wherein his sacred word should bee reverently read and truely preached, his holy Sacraments truly administred with feare and reverence, &c. which most excellent prayer, and benediction ended, hee turned to the new Font, and prayed likewise saying. Almighty and everlasting God, whose most dearely beloued Son Jesus Christ, for the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, did shed out of his most precious side both water and blood, and commanded his disciples that they should goe teach all Nations, and baptize them in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, and to that purpose did sanctifie, not onely the flood Iordan, but all other waters also, to the mysticall washing away of sinne, wee beseech thee heare the supplications of thy congregation, and graunt that all thy servants which shall bee baptized in the water of this Font, may receive the fulnesse of thy grace, and may euermore remayne in the number of thy elect Church, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

The Font.

Then the Bishop and the Founder went by the middle Ile, and betweene the chauncell and the bodie of the Church, the Bishoppe turning his face to the people, read the instrument of consecration, and dedicated this Church to God in the memory of Saint Iames the Apostle, for so was the name of the olde Church. After this the Parish Priest layd the divine service and in stead of the Psalmes appointed for that day, he read the 26. the 84. and the 134. Psalmes, and for the appointed chapters, the 2. of Samuel, the 6. chapter, and the 10. chapter of Saint Iohn, verse the 22, and so read to the end: and in place of the collect, was layd this prayer. We beseech thee, O Almighty God, that thou wilt bee pleased continually to dwell in this house, which this day we have dedicated to thee, and vouchsafe to receiue the sacrifices of thy servants, whether of almes, or prayers, or thanksgiuing which shall be offred herein, graunt also a blessing to thy sacred word herein read, or preached, that like seede sowen in good ground, it may fructifie in those that shall bee here assembled, to the instruction of their understanding, the comfort of their consciences, the amendment of their liues, and the saving of their soules, to the glory of thy blessed name, through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour.

This ended, then began a Sermon, his text, Psalme 5. verse 7. the people sang two psalmes viz. the 27. and 113. the Sermon being ended: Then the Bishop celebrated the Communion, where the Founder by the Bishopps direction kneeled kneeled by himselfe in the middle of the Quier right before the Altar, and hauing a collection for the poore, he offered a piece of gold: and towards the end of the celebration, the Bishoppe prayed as followeth: Most gracious God, after the religious example of thos holy Prelats in the Primitive Church, which in celebrating the Communion, remembred the Saints departed, and their benefactors living, wee humblie beseech thee to accept in good part our commemoration of this worthy Gentleman thy servant here present, by whose meanes, and at whose charge in these demolishing and destroying dayes, this house was transla o, reedified, enlarged, and dedicated to thy service, bless him we pray thee with his whole offspring and familie, establish him and his seed vpon earth, and when that house of clay his body shall bee dissolued, clothe him with immortalitie, and give him an everlasting habitation in the heauens, with thee and thy sonne Jesus Christ, to whom with thy holy Ghost, be all glory, honor, prayse, and thankes, now and for euer, Amen. And so the Communion being ended and the benediction pronounced, the Congregation was dismissed. And thus much by way of abstract, I have thought good to set downe, because it is the first new built Church, with a new Churchyard to it, that came to my perfect knowledge.

Churches, Chappels, & Churchyards new built and consecrated.

In Waymouth and Melcombe Regis in the yeare 1605. there was a new Church builded, and was consecrated the next yeare, 1606. by Doctor Zouch, Suffragan to the Lord Bishop of Bristoll, who named it Christ Church: and at this Melcombe Regis, there was a very faire Bridge of Tymber built, over a branch of the Sea consisting of 17. Arches, the best benefactours both towardes the building of this Church and Bridge, were certaine Citizens of London. Sir Iames Altham Knight, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, builded a fayre new Chappell at Orbey, in the parish of Watford in Hertfordshire, and was consecrated the fourteenth of September, one thousand six hundred and twelue, by Doctor King, Lord Bishop of London.

There was also a new Church builded in Surrey, and was likewise consecrated by the said Lord Bishop of London.

Saint Mary Mount-haw, neere silly-streete in London, was all taken downe and new built, and was also consecrated by Doctor King, Lord Bishop of London, and retained still the former name of Saint Mary Mount-haw.

Within the liberties and suburbes of London, there were diuers Churchyards new layd apart, dedicated for reuerend places to bury the dead: some whereof were consecrated by Doctor Abbot, late Lord Bishop of London, and others after him by Doctor King, Lord Bishop of London,

Sir Iulius Cæsar Knight, Chancellor of the Exchequer, builded a Chappell at his house on the North side of the Strand, and it was consecrated vpon Sunday the eight of May, 1614. by Doctor King Lord Bishop of London, and called it, Cecil Chappell.

Thomas Watson of Halsted in Kent Esquire in the yeare 1569. did new build a faire Chappell on the North side of the parish Church of Halsted, of free stone from the ground, and adorned the East end thereof, with a very faire and curious glasse window, wrought in rich colours, he likewise new builded the steeple with stone from the ground: he repayred both the Church and Chancell within, and new tyled them: he also built a porch to the same Church, and gaue to it foure faire new Bells, and two new Pulpits, the one for diuine service, and the other for Sermons, and made a wall from the North side of the Churchyard, to the West side.

The Parliament dissolued by Proclamation the 11 of December.

WHereas the Kings most excellent Majestie hath continued this Parliament together, longer then hath beene vsuall, or might have well stood, either with his important affaires of State, or with the publique businesse of three whole Termes, spent in the two last Sessions, or with the occasions of the Country, where the service and hospitalitie of many persons of qualitie hath beene missing, and diuers Shires, Cities, and Burrough Townes have beene burdened, with allowances made to the Knightes, and Burgesses, whom they imployed, besides the particular expence of the Nobilitie, and others attending that service, And all this in expectation of a good conclusion of some of the weighty causes, which have beene there in deliberation, not onely for the supply of the necessities of his Majesties estate, but for the ease and freedome of his subiects, in many things proposed by his Majestie in Parliament, far differing and surpassing the fauors and graces of former times, both in nature and value: His Majestie hath now resolued, (for preuenting of further trouble, of all those that would prepare themselues to be here against the time limitted by the last prorogation) to declare by these presents, that they shall not needs to giue their attendance at the day appointed, for any seruice to be done, as members of this Parliament, because his Majestie (for many good considerations, knowne to himselfe) hath now determined to dissolue this Parliament, by his commission vnder the great Seale of England: this Proclamation was dated the last day of December, this yeere one thou and five hundred and ten.

Thursday morning the ninth of May, one thousand fiue hundred and eleuen, the King in person came into the Starre Chamber, and hauing viewed it, then went into the Receipts and other Offices, his Maiestie likewise went into Westminster-hall, and into the Court of Orchequer, and into the other Offices, and presently after, came the Prince of Wales, and imparted all those places in like manner: and this morning the King, and the Prince of Wales, being accompanied and attended with the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Priuy Seale, and the Lord Chamberlaine, and fiue other Earles, and fiue Barons, and Syr Iulius Cæsar Chancellor of the Orchequer, being all in the Star-chamber, where his Maiestie was then come of speciall purpose, to see his Moneys of gold and siluer to be taken out of the pire, and to be tryed, as well for their weight as for their finesse, for which purpose, Thomas Lord Knowles, and Edmond Downbie, ay Esquire, Wardens of the Mint, Richard Martin Esquier, maister and worker of the moneys, and Richard Rogers Esquier, comptroller of the Mint, as the King had appointed, caused the pire to be brought from the mint thither, where in the presence of the King they with their seuerall keyes opened the pire, and powred forth the gold and siluer, to be assayed and tryed by their seuerall Standardes, according to the forme of the indentures made betweene the King and the maisters, and workers of his Mayesties moneys: there were also present, Walter Williams, and Andrew Palmer, Esquires, being the Assay-masters of the mint: this kind of tryall though it bee vsuall once euery yeere, for our examination and plaine proofe, whether the moneys bee as they ought to bee, or not, yet is it beyond all memory and mention, for an hundreth yeeres space, that euer any King or Queene, came in proper person to see any of these tryalls yet neuertheless at this time his Maiestie in person gaue a Iurie of fifteene of the most honest skilfullest, and best reputed Goldsmiths their oathes, and charge for tryall of the moneyes, and the Iurie proceeded in all things according to their charge, and then gaue vp their verdict the same day, at the Court of Whitehall, and the King shewed them great grace and fauour.

His Maiestie hauing diligently viewed and examined the Rate of his moneys and mint, as is mentioned, he also with like Kingly care and prudence, searched and examined the abuses of the Common Wealth, practised by very many persons vpon all sorts of moneys, for redresse whereof, his Maiestie made Proclamation the eightteenth of May, as followeth.

A Proclamation for the preseruation of moneys.

VVHereas we are daily informed by the officers of our mint and otherwise, that aswell diuers of our naturall borne Subiects, both Goldsmiths, Merchants, & men of other trades. As also, Strangers inhabiting within this our realme of England, haue presumed for their priuate lucre and gaine, and daylie doe presume to weigh all sorts of moneys current within this our realme of England, to the end to cull out the olde and new moneys, which either by not wearing, or by any other accident in the making thereof are more weightie then the rest, Some part of which moneys so culled out, we haue found (when it pleased our selfe to enter into the examination thereof) to be daily openly sold to goldsmiths, and by them employed for the making of plate, and vessell of all sorts within this our realme of England: And some part to be transported into forraine parts, for priuate mens particular gain, whereby there is a great scarsity of good money likely to ensue, if present remedy be not prouided for the same: Wee therefore in our Princely care intending with all conuenient speed to redresse so great and insufferable a mischiefe, doe by this our Proclamation make known vnto all men, that our will and pleasure is, and wee doe hereby straitly charge and commaund, that no goldsmith, or other person, or persons, of what estate soeuer he or they be, (other then the master and officers of our Mint, for the seruice and imployment thereof) presume or enterprise to melt any moneyes of gold or siluer, being the proper coynes of any our Realmes or Dominions, or current within the same, or any of them, either to make Plate or Vessell thereof, for any other vse whatsoeuer, or doe presume to cull or chuse out from the rest any waighty waighty moneyes, to the intent to conuey the same out of the realme, or to melt, or otherwise to alter it from Coyne, vpon paine of our heauie displeasure, and of such paines and punishments, as vpon the contemners of our Royall commandements, grounded vpon the publique good, may be inflicted.

Proclamation vpon the increase of price and variation of gold.

The King hauing prudently proceeded in the true tryall of his Mint and moneys, as aboue mentioned, his Maiestie with like Royall care and diligence, searches farther into the enormities of this Kingdome, and Common Wealth, wherein his highnesse found, that notwithstanding many excellent Lawes, aswell ancient as moderne, being all yet in force, containing seuere penalties and strict prouisions, and cautions, and very iustly to bee brought within the compas of fellony, all such persons as transport and carry away gold into any forreyne parts, yet such was the presumption of this time, that very great quantities of English gold, were exported by Merchants aswell English French, as Dutch, but chiefely by the Dutch, being all stirred thereunto by the great & present gaines arising thereby, so as English gold was verie plentifull in forraine Nations, and very great payments were there ordinarily made thereof, whereby gold beganne to ware so scant in England, that for the space of almost two yeeres here was not any vsuall payments made in golde, because of the vnmeasurable, subtile, and bold carrying forth of English golde, for priuate gaine, as is aboueſayd, for the piece of golde called the Vnitie, which was heretofore worth but twentie shillings, was valued in forayne partes at two and twentie shillings, and so were all other English Coynes of golde ratably. For redresse whereof, and preuention of any other imputation, seeing that neither penalties, nor diligent searches could keepe gold within this Kingdome: his Maiestie with the aduice of his Priuy Councell, and conference with diuers Gentlemen of qualitie and discretion, and with Merchants of euery trade, officers of the Mint, and goldsmiths of best experience, hauing iudiciously looked into this matter, made Proclamation the twenty three of November following, wherein was published, declared and authorized, that all these seuerall Coynes hereunder mentioned, to bee currant within this Realme, respectiuely at the values following, being full weight, or within the proportion of the accustomed allowances of grains in their seuerall abatements.

Gate.

From the second yeere of his Maiesties raign and for fiue yeares after, here was more plenty of golde then euer was before: and so would haue continued, if it had not beene so much exported. In the 18. yeare of Henry the eight: was the like increase of price and valuation of gold, for the old Noble was raysed to vii.s. vi.d. and the olde Angell was raised to eleuen shillings foure pence, and the old French Crowne was raised six pence aboue the former value: at this time began the first Crownes of the Rose, being then valued at fiue shillings: And at this time also that is to say, in the yeere 1527. and the eighteenth yeare of Henry the eight, began the first George Noble, valued then at six shillings eight pence.

Great Winds and much shipwracke.

In the moneths of October, Nouember, and December, this yeere 1612. there hapned many great Winds, violent Stormes, and Tempests, as well by land as Sea, which did exceeding great damage, with extreame shipwracke throughout the Ocean, chiefely vpon the coast of Spaine and Portugall, where there perished aboue an hundred ships within the space of two houres: and in the Spring time following, yea euen vntill Saint Iames tyde, there fell rayne continually, which caused great floods, which did great damage vpon the earth, and put all men in feare of a present dearth, whereupon there was prayers made in all Churches vnto Almighty God, to send a blessed season able harueste, and that yeere there was far greater plentie of corne and Hay, then in many yeeres before.

Sir Robert Sherley, second sonne to Sir Thomas Sherley of Sussex Knight, about fiue taene yeeres past, betooke himselfe to trauaile, and and serued diuers Christian Princes for the space of fiue yeeres, but chiefely vnder Rodulphus the Romane Emperor, who employed him in Ambassie, wherein he so discreetely and honorably demeaned himselfe, that he was made the Earle of the Empire. After that he went into Persia, and serued the Persian ten yeeres very faithfully and valiantly against the Turke, and was by the Emperor of Persia made generall of the Artillery, who held him in so high estimation, that he gaue him the Lady Teresia in marriage the daughter of Ismy Haven, Prince of the City Hercadia Maior, whose sister is one of the Queenes of Persia. The Persian employed him vnto sundry Princes in Europe, and sent him in especiall Ambassie into England, vnto King Iames: he arriued here in Sommer 1611. And the 2. of October following he has audience at Hampton Court, where he deliuered his letters, and shewed his Commission. All which, purported the Persians great loue & affection vnto his Maiestie, with hearty desire of amity with the K. of great Britanne with franke offer of free commerce vnto all his Highnesse subiects throughout all the Persians dominions, &c. This Earle Sherley was entertained and respected as an honorable ambassador: he brought hither with him Teresia his wife, bigge with child, who was shortly after deliuered of a son, vnto whom the Queene was godmother, and Prince Henry was Godfather. who called the child Henry after his own name: the Ambassador stayed in England aboue a yere after that, & hauing receiued the kings gracious letters to the Persian, by which time as his Spare had appointed there was a well furnished ship prouided to transport him, his wife, & seruants, into the parts of the East Indies, and to land him as neere the Persians dominion as they could, and vpon his departure from the ship that then as the King had ordayned, they should deliuer vnto the Ambassador 500. pounds in money to beare his charge by land, and to doe him what farther kindnes they could: he imbarked at Douer this moneth of January 1612. he left his son Sir. in England. Captain Tho. Powel of Herefordshire whom the King now honoured with Knighthood accompanied the Ambassador both comming & going: he was colonel of 700. horse vnder the Persian: hee at this time married an English woman who went now ouer with him. Captaine Newport was selected Captaine of the ship for transportation of this L. Ambassador & his retinue, and because this voyage is extraordinary from others, I haue here set it down very briefly. They went hence by the Canaries, and in Aprill they came to the Cape of Bono Speranza, where they refreshed themselues with water & victual. From thence they sayled to the great Iland called S. Lawrence, formerly called Madagascar, where they take in freely water againe. From thence they went to an Iland called Mohilla, & there they refreshed themselues with all manner of delicate flesh and pleasant fruits, this is one of the most pleasant and fertile places of the world: and from thence they sailed into Arabia Felix, vnto a city called Dophar, where through extreame foule weather, they remained there 28. dayes: and from thence they sayled into the mouth of the gulfe of Persia, where it was ment the Lord ambassador should haue landed, but finding the place very inconuenient, they sailed thence to Gudel where a reuolted Duke from the Persian, with his forces being there, sought treacherously to surprise the Ambassadour, and to take the ship with the Merchants, their goods and all, but by Gods prouidence, the Duke's Treason was discouered by a Persian Hermit, by which meanes the English were miraculously deliuered from extreame danger. From this place they set saile againe, & went into the riuer Synde, where Captaine Newport very safely landed the L. Ambassador, Sir T. Powell with their wiues, and all their company, that embarked with them from England, where they were most ioyfully & honorably receiued of the gouernor & of the inhabitants of the country, which country is vnder the great Maghoore, vpon the borders of Persia. Captaine Newport returned into England in July the next yeere following viz. 1614. the foresaid great Maghoore whom some very corrupts by call the great Magull, is a very royall and potent Prince of large Territories, very populous & opulent, valiant & warlik, rich in treasure & plentifully furnished with munition. It is written that this great Maghoore is lineally descended from the famous Tamberlain, & is the 9. or 10. in orderly race from Tamberlain, who tooke Suaz the Turkish Emperor prisoner in the yere 1397. whereof I haue made some mention in my Abridgement. The King by his letters Patents dated the 7. of June in the 7. yere of his gracious raign did Enfeoff 15. Knights & Esquires of the county of Middlesex, of a piece of ground being in S. Iohns street in the county of Middlesex, to be for euer vsed and imployed for a session house for the county, & for the keeping of a prison or house of correction for the same countie vpon which piece of ground aforesayd, & according to the extent of the K. Letters Patents, Sir Baptists Hicks Knight one of the Iustices of the County, builded a very stately session house of brick and stone, with all offices thereunto belonging, at his owne proper charges: and vpon wednesday the 13. of Ian. this yere 1612. by which time this house was fully finished, there assembled 26. Iustices of the county being the 1. day of their meeting in that place, where they were all seated by Sir Baptist Hicks & then they all with one consent gaue it a proper name, & called it Hicks Hall, after the name of the founder who then freely gaue the same house to them & their successors for euer. Vntill this time the iustices of Middlesex held their shiall meeting in a common Inne called the Castle.

Hicks Hall founded.

The aboue named Sir Baptist Hicks knight, also founded a very faire hospitall, builded of free stone, at Camden in Glocestershire, for 6. men, & 6. women, allowing euery of the for the present yeerely a gowne, and 2.s. a weak, and each one of them hath 2. rowmes & a garden: the said founder is yet liuing, who meanes to enlarge their pencions. And hath also done reparations to the parish church, and guiuen them a bell of about 11. or 1200. waight, to make them 5. bels in number Apparance of great famine by prayer and prouidence preuented.

The last Sommer through want of raine, both graile and hay waxed very scant in most shires of this kingdome, so as such persons as had not extraordinary meanes of prouision of winters food for their Cattell, were extreamly dismayd and perplexed, lest the ensuing winter, should proue hard like as did this Sommer, by reason whereof they should be constrained to suffer them to perish for want of food, or to sell them to rich farmers and graziers, at vnreasonable low prizes, and such monopolists and greedy engrossers of cattell, as had made their full prouision for that purpose, had so fully assured themselues of their expected excessiue gaines, the nert ensuing winter & spring, that many of them vaunted, that this winter and at Easter, they would sell fat oxen after the rate of 8.d. a pound & all other flesh accordingly. But it pleased Almighty God to send a mild open winter, and a forward spring, which releeued the whole kingdome, and preuented the greedy deuourers of the common wealto, of all their hopes and expectation. Also the king in his prudent care for the better preuention of the great feared famine that might ensue by the dearth or murreyne of cattell to command his subiects in generall that all the time of Lent they should vtterly abstain from eating all manner of butchers flesh, and that no Butcher should be suffered to kill flesh within London nor any the Citie, as had bin vsed in many late yeeres, which restraint being so great & generall the multitude began againe to feare a new scarcity of victualls, and that it would exceedingly enhaunse the prices of all kind of fish) by reason the like restraint of flesh had not bin in the memory of man & therefore they held it impossible to make halfe prouision of fish to serue the common subiects: all which dread and terror of famine or extreame scarcitie was likewise wholy suppressed for it pleased Almighty God, to send great plenty of all kinds of fish, that the most was spent the more came daily in, for Merchants and fishermen seeing there was reason inough for sale for fish, they brought in continually great store of seafish, euen vnto the last day of Lent & was sold at indifferent prices during the whole Lent: by this means all sorts of cattell was preserued & neuer eased, and at Easter all maner of flesh being very plenteous was sold at common rates: and the Merchants, the fishmongers, and fishermen were much encouraged, and the common subiects as much benefited. The Lords of the Priuy Councel inceslantly sent word to the L. Maior & Sheriffs to look and search diligently that no flesh should be kept or sold within London and their liberties: in which seruice they vsed all diligence & strictnes, committing the offenders to the goale, and gaue their meat to prisoners. The Iustices of Surrey and middlesex vsed like care and diligence.

Lent strictly kept in London.

After dinner the Lord Mayor and his brethren in the behalfe of the City and Citizens of London, for testimony of hearty welcome, and their loue, presented the Palsgrave with a very large Bason and Ewre of siluer, richly gilded, & curiously wrought, and two great guilded liuery pots, suitable to the rest, in euery of which was engrauen Ciuitas London.

Prince Henry diseased.

Friday the 6. of Nouember, between 7. and 8. a clocke at night, died the most famous & hopefull Prince, Henry, Prince of Wales, at his Court of S. Iames. He died of a popular malignant Feuer, which raigned that yere in most parts of this land, & tooke away a great number of people of all sorts and ages, and vpon Sonday the 7. of Decemb. with all magnificence and solemnitie, his Corps was drawne in a Chariot vnto the Abby Church at Westminst. being thither accompanied by the young Prince Charles, who was the chiefe mourner, accompanied with the Palsgraue: at this obsequy besides his owne late seruants and officers, there mourned diuers Bishops, the Duke of Lenox, with many Earles and Barons & the Palsgraues councell, with the Earls of his traine, & others, as also the gentlemen of the K. chappell, being all in rich coapes attended the corps to Church, singing very solemnly as they marched: the L. Archbi. of Canterbury preached the funerall Sermon: and the Prince was enterred in the chappell royall. He died at the age of 18. yeres 8. moneths, and 17. dayes, & was endued with all princely gifts and perfections, his death was lamented throughout this kingdom, & in many forraine parts concerning which, the full report of his noble & princely vertues, you may read at large, written by many in his deserued commemoration.

The Palsgrave and Graue Maurice elected Knights of the Garter

Vpon S. Thomas day, the Palsgraue & Graue Maurice, were elected knights of the Garter, and forthwith the order of the Garter was sent to Graue Maurice, by William Seager, alias Garter, principall King of Armes, who receiued it very acceptably, and rewarded the bringer very bountifully. And the 27. of December, the Palsgraue was betrothed to the Lady Elizabeth.

Sunday the 7. of February, the Palsgraue in person was enstalled knight of the Garter at Windsore, viz. the high and mighty Prince Frederick, by the grace of God, Count Palatine of the Rheyne, Arch-Sewer, and Prince Elector of the holy Empire, Duke of Bauyer, and knight of the most noble order of the Garter.

And the same time likewise was Graue Maurice enstalled by his Deputy Count Lodwick of Nassaw, cozen to Graue Maurice: the Graues Titles were there aduanced, viz. The high and mighty Lord Maurice, Prince in Orenge, Earle of Nassaw, Catzelbogen, Diets, Moers, Linghen, Marquesse of Vere, & of Flushing, Baron of the Towne of Grane, and of the Countries of Culick, Leke, and Neyruert, Gouernour and Captaine Generall of Gueldres, Holland, Zeland, West freezland, Zutphen, Vtricht, and Ouerisell, Admirall Generall of the vnited Prouinces of the Low Countries, and knight of the most noble order of the Garter.

Triumphs vpon the enterim, in honor of the ensuing marriage of the Princesse Elizabeth to the Palsgrave.

The appointed day of Parriage of the Lady Elizabeth, with the Palsgraue drew neere. In honour whereof, there were prepared, and that with great speed, diuers kindes of triumphs, pastimes, and fancy deuises vpon the water, the first was vpon the Thursday night before the wedding day, and about 10. of the clock that night was performed many pleasant, strange, and variable sights vpon the Thames ouer against White-hall: these entertainements consisted of fantasticke or enchanted Castles, Rocks, Bowers, Fortells, and other deuises floating vpon the water, being as pleasant to behold by day, as they seemed strange by night, each properly in one course seconded one another.

And vpon the Saturday, though suddainly prepared, yet very well appointed a stately fleet of ships, galeons, argoses, galleys, and bergantines, which all this week in most triumphant manner lay at anchor betweene London bridge and White-hall, being in all warlike manner furnished with skilfull Mariners, and nimble saylers, and with great Artillery and small shot, in as ample manner as if it had bin for the best of service, and in such sight & bauery, as might well haue daunted a daring aduersarie: for amongst these imaginary vessels of warre, there were some that were ships of warre in deed, one whereof was the Kings Pinnace, such as vntill then neuer shot the Bridge, nor thought possible to be brought so high into the riuer: to encounter this Armado, there was also built a faire Castle at Stangate, and was fully furnished with small shot and great artillery, sufficient to haue foild the pollage of a proud enemy. This Castle with the forts, rocks, beacon, and store of warlike Turkish galleys, resembled Argier, to surprise and spoile the Christians ships comming in their way: or to be imagined the battell of Lepanto, betweene the Christians & the Turke, in the yeere 1571. for such was the signification of this dates triumph, which was very well performed: it began about two a clocke in the afternoone, and held on vntill the euening, but the cloud comming in, and the winde being casterly, in preeht some part of their intended pastimes.

Shroue-sunday the 14 of February & S. Valentines day, was this happy marriage of the Palsgrave vnto the Lady Elizabeth in the chappell at Whitehall, the Bridgroome being then accompanied & attended with the nobility, and chiefe gentry of England and Scotland, diuers Bishops, and with his owne nobility & gentry, besides others: the King being also there in person, the earle of Arundel bearing the sword, they proceeded from the Kings presence Chamber, and from thence in state and order marched through the great chamber, and so along the old gallery through the new built rome towards the banqueting house, and then descended a lower new built gallery in the first Court that led them into the great hall, & from thence into the chappell so as many people might well behold them. After them came the faire and chearefull Bride, led by two batchelers, that is to say, her brother Prince Charles, and the Earle of Northampton, Lord privy seale: she was attired all in white, hauing a rich crowne of gold vpon her head, her haire hanging down at length in faire and seemely tresses, plenteously beset with rich pearles & pretious stones: her traine supported by 12 faire young vrains in white garments. All the gallant Ladies of the Court & many others accompanied and attended the Bride. The Duke was also there in person. The king gaue her in marriage. The L. Archbishop of Cant. married them, and the L. Bishop of Bath preached the Nuptiall Sermon, which ended they returned from Church in the same royall state & order as they went: the Bride being then led by two married men, that is to say the duke of Lenox, and the Earle of Nottingham Lord Admirall. The Bride and Bridegroome, prince Charles, count Henrick, with other noblemen strangers. At the great Lords of the priuy counsel: the chiefe Ladies of the Court & others, dined that day in the new large rome builded for that purpose, which rome was adorned with stately hangings, curiously wrought, representing the sea fight betweene the English & Spanish fleets, Anno 1588.

A Maske of Lords and Ladies.

And that night in honor of this ioyful nuptiall, there was a very stately Maske of Lords and Ladies with many ingenious speaches, delicate deuises, melodious musicke, pleasant daunces, with other princely entertainments of time, all which were singularly well performed in the Banqueting house. The foure honorable Inns of Court, aswell the Elders and graue Benchers of each house, as the towardly young actiue gallant Gentlemen of the same houses, being of infinite desire to expresse their singular loue and duteous affection to his Maiestie, and to performe some memorable & acceptable

Vpon Shroue-munday at night, the gentlemen of the middle Temple, and Lincolns Inne, with their Traine for this buſineſſe, aſſembled in Chancery-lane, at the houſe of Sir Edward Phillips, maſter of the Roles and about eight of the clocke, they marched thence through the Strand, to the Court at Whitehall in this manner. Firſt rode fifty choyce Gentlemen richly attyred, and as gallantly mounted, with euery one his footemen to attend him: theſe rode very ſtately like a Vauntgard. Next after with ſit diſtance marched an antique or mockmaſke of Babions, attired like fantaſtique trauailers, in very ſtrange and confuſed manner, riding vpon Aſſes, or dwarfe Iades, ſinging all Aprill and mocking trickes to the people, mouing much laughter as they paſt, with Torches on either ſide to ſhew their ſtate to be as ridiculous as the reſt was Noble: After them came two Chariots triumphal, very pleaſant and full of ſtate, wherein rode the choyce Muſitians of this Kingdome, in robes like to the Virginian Prieſts with ſundry deuices, all pleaſant and ſignificant, with two rankes of Torches: Then came the cheife Maskers with great ſtate in white Indian habite, or like the great Princes of Barbary, richly imbroydered with the golden ſun, with ſuitable ornaments in all pointe, about their necks were ruffs of Feathers, ſpangled and beſet with pearle, and ſiluer and vpon their heads, lofty coronets ſuitable to the reſt: they wore long ſilke ſtockings, curiouſly imbroydred with golde to the midleg: their buſkins were likewiſe imbroydred, and in their hands as they rode, they brandiſhed Cane darts of the fineſt gold: their vizards were of Oliue colour their haire long and black down to their ſhoulders: the hoales for rich ſtiew equalled the Maskers: their capariſons were enchaſt with ſuns of gold, and ornamentall Jewels, with ſiluer ſcaſſing ouer the whole capariſon, and about their heads, which made ſuch a ſtrange and glorious ſhew, that it dazled the eyes of the beholders with great admiration: euery of theſe hoyſe had two Moyres to attend them, attired like Indian Slaues with wreathes of gold, and watchet about their heads, being about an hundreth in number: the Torch-bearers carryed Torches of Virgin ware, the ſtaues whereof were great Canes guilded all ouer, and their habites were likewiſe of the Indian Garb, but more extrauagant then thoſe of the maskers, the maskers rode ſingle, and had euery man his torch-bearer riding before him. All which with the laſt triumphall Chariot, wherein ſate many ſtrang attired perſonages, with their emblems, conceitfull, and variable deuices, made a wondrous pleaſing ſhew. And thus they marched through the Strand to Whitehall, where the King, the Prince, the Bride and Bridegroome, and the cheife Nobility ſtood in the gallery before the Tilt-yard, to behold their approach, and becauſe there ſhould be a full view had of their ſtate & traine, the King cauſed them to march one turne about the liſt, and being diſmounted, they were honorably attended through the gallery to a chamber, in which they were to make them ready for performance of their Scoane in the hall, in which place, were erected their ſundry prop erties and deuices formerly mentioned where they performed all things anſwerable to the beſt of expectation, and received as royall thankes and commendations.

The middle Temple and Lincolns Inne.

The next day being Shroue-tueſday, the gentlemen of he Inner Temple and Grays Inne with their traine, and many other gallant yong gentlemen of both theſe houſes as their conuoy, aſſembled themſelues at Winchester houſe being the appointed place for their Rendeuous: this nights entertainment conſiſted of three ſeuerall maſks, 1. an Antick-maſke of a ſtrange and different faſhion from others, both in habit and manners, very delectable: a rurall or country maſke, conſiſting of many perſons, men and women, being all in ſundry habits, being likewiſe as ſtrange, variable and delightfull. The third, which they called the maine maſke, was a maſke of Knights, attired in arming doblets of carnation ſattin richly imbroyded with ſtars of ſiluer plate, beſet with ſmaller ſtarres, ſpangles, and ſiluer lace, betweene gorgets of ſiluer male, with long Venetian hoſe imbroyded ſuitable to the reſt, like Carnation ſtockings imbroyded all ouer: their Garters and Roſes anſwerable their hats were of the ſame ſtuffe and imbroyded, cut before like a Helmet & the hinder part like a Scollop, anſwering the ſkirts of their doublets, their hatbands were wreathes of ſiluer, in forme of garlands of wild Oliues, their feathers white and carnation, their belts imbroyded, ſiluer ſwords little Italian falling bands, & cuffs imbroyded: their haire, faire and long long, their vizards faire and young, and concerning their ſundry ingenious properties and deuiſes already erected in the Court hall: they were all excellent, fraught with Art, State, and delights, hauing all their Actors correſpondent. Theſe Maskers with their whole traine in all triumphant manner and good order, ſtoke barge at Winchester ſtarres, about 7. of the clock that night, and rowed to White-Hall againſt the tyde: the cheife Maskers went in the Kings Barge royally adorned, and plenteouſly furniſhed with a great number of great wax lights, that they alone made a glorious ſhew: other Gentlemen went in the Princes Barge, and certaine other went in other faire Barges, and were led by two Admiralls: beſides all theſe they had foure luſty warlike Gallies to conuoy and attend them, each Barge and Galley being replenished with ſtore of Torch-lights, made ſo rare and braue a ſhew vpon the water, as the like was neuer ſeene vpon the Thamis: they had three peales of great Ordnance, in three ſeuerall places vpon the ſhore, viz when they imbarked, as they paſt by the Temple, and at Strangate when they arriued at Court, where the King, Prince Charles, the Bride & Bridegroome, ſtood in the vpper Gallery to behold them vpon the water, and to view them in particular at their arriuall, they landed at the private ſtaires, and were receiued by the Lord Chamberlaine, and conducted to the Tilt-yard: for the Hall wherein they ſhould performe their ſcene, was by this time filled with company, who although they were of very good faſhion, yet were there many principall Ladies, and other noble perſonages, beſides Ambaſſadors and other ſtrangers of account not come, ſo as when they ſhould be placed, the roome would be ſo ſcanted, as it would proue very inconuenient, wherevpon his Maieſtie was moſt graciouſly pleaſed with conſent of the Gentlemen Maskers, to put it off vntill the next Saterday, and that then they ſhould performe all their preſent intended entertainments in the great banqueting houſe, adding this ſauour withall, that this deferring ſhould be no impediment vnto the outward ceremony of magnificence vntill that day: and vpon Saterday at 7. of the clocke at night, they came priuately in troopes, and were brought to their places by the Lord of Northampton, and a choyce roome was reſerued for the Gentlemen of both theſe houſes, and that night they braue ly performed their Scene, to the great delight and full ſatisfaction of all the beholders, and from his Maieſtie they receiued as kingly thanks, and gracious acceptation.

given to the High and Mighty Prince, and Princesse, FREDERICK, Count Palatine, Palsgraue of the Rhyne: and ELIZABETH, sole Daughter to the High and Mighty King of England, Iames, our Soueraigne Lord.

Together with a true Relation of all the Gifts, Presentations, Showes, Pageants, Fire-workes, and other sumptuous Triumphes in euery place where the said Princes were lodged, and receiued, after their Landing vpon the Coast of Germany.

NOthing can better set forth the Greatnesse of Princes, nor more expresse the affection of friends, together with the duty, loue, and applause of Subiects, then those solemne and sumptuous Entertainments which are bestowed on great and worthy Persons: the outward face of Cost and Disbursements, being the true and liuely picture of that hearty loue which is locked vp in the bosomes of the Giuers.

Behold here therefore a Dutch-piece drawne to the life; no expences being spared to make expression of noble friends, or to giue content to those Princely receiuers of such loue, (the Palsgraue, and the excellent Lady Elizabeth, Daughter to our Soueraigne.) Who vpon the 28. of Aprill last past, (in the yeare of our Lord 1613.) after a short and prosperous passage ouer the Seas, cast Anchor as happily before Vlushing. The next day passing thorow the Cittie of Wormes, she was ioyfully receiued with an infinite concourse of people into Franckendal, (the Towne which the Palsgraue hath giuen to her for her Ioynter.) The Burgers of this Towne came forth to meete their Prince and Princesse, in a warre-like manner, attiring themselues like Turkes, Poles, and Switzers, and so with a solemne and orderly march conducted them to their Lodgings, being a House belonging to the Princesse.

At night there was a presentation before her of a Regall Throne, in which were lighted 100. Lampes: being a figure of that Throne of Salomon, when he entertained the Queene of Sheba.

The next night following was spent in a Martiall presentation of the Siege of Troy, which was thus performed. A Castle of exceeding greatnesse was strongly builded, representing Troy, and in it were placed 100. Shot; another Army lay before the walls, in the habits of Greekes, who after this manner began the Siege: First, the Horse-men gaue the on-set, and they retyring, the foot-men or the Infantery seconded them with great courage and violence. And at last the Troianes giuing them a repulse, the Greekes subtilly sounded a Retreat, and seeming to retire, lay hidden in Ambush, leauing a Horse of extreame proportion and greatnesse before the walls, which by the Troianes being drawne into the Cittie, the Alarum in the night was giuen, Troy fired, and the Greekes remained Conquerours, and in that Triumph marched away.

The day following, the Princesse removed to Heidelberg, being encountred in her passage by a 1000. And this being done, they marched in martiall order, conducting her to Heidelberge, where the Burgers of the Towne, with all expressions of loue

Loue, Ioy, and Duty, received her with hearty welcomes, the windowes of every house being filled with men, women, and children, of all degrees, and the Streets covered with throngs of people, drawne thither by the fame of such shewes, and Pageants, as were builded to adde honour to this entertainement, but especially, to behold her, upon whom all their eyes were fixed, with Loue and admiration.

After that shee had thus, in great and magnificent state passed through Heidelberg, with the like solemnitie was she conducted into the castle, where the Palsgraues Mother, with other great Ladies, and Gentlewomen, gaue to the Princesse glad, and loving entertainement.

The following day was honoured with many Princes of the Empire, who on Horsebacke gallantly entred the Tiltyard, prepared both for Tilt and Turney. And albeit the night (enuious of such triumphs) had shut vp all the glory of this first day in darkenesse, yet in despight of that and night, the second day shone more glorious, in Courtly Honors, Shewes, and Pastimes then before. And in this magnificall manner came the Combatants into the Lists aforesaid.

The first that entred into the Tilt-yard was the Palsgrave, accompanied with others: before whom in decent and stately order, was this Presentation set forth to the admiration of the beholders, and great content to the Princesse, and the other Ladies, who in fit places stood spectators.

Formost of all came Iupiter, riding in a very rich Chariot, drawne by two Griffons, and those Griffons guided by Mercury, who sat as Coachman. Next followed Iuno in another Chariot, drawne by Peacocks, and driuen by Iris. After her came the God of Husbandry, with three Ploughs. After him entred Neptune, the god of the Sea, in a Chariot fitted to the state and condition of such a Marine Deitie, the Chariot drawne by three Sea Horses: upon Neptune, attended a Merman, sitting on a Rock with a glasse in his hand, and behinde him on another Rocke, sate three Mermaydes, Singing and playing on Instruments.

After these Mermaydes, the next that entered was a Centaure (halfe a man, halfe a Horse) holding in one hand a Booke, and in the other a Mace.

Then followed Arion playing on a Lute, and sitting on a Sea Vnicorne. After all these came in the seuen deadly sinnes, all of them chained, and driuen forward by a Dragon, who continually spet fire. Immediatly after which, entred the Palsgraue, with two more in a Ship, hee himselfe resembling Iason, attended by sixe Squires, bearing shields and Launces: in the ship was to be seene the Golden Fleece which Iason fetcht from Greece: and at the sterne, Enuie was dragged, eating her owne heart.

The next that entred was Mars, drawne in a Chariot, adorned with all the Ensignes of Warre, and attended by three Knights and sixe Squires bearing Launces. After whom, in one Chariot drawne by Swannes, sat Venus, and Cupid: before the Chariot went sixe Virgins, and behinde it followed Hercules, the Sun, artificially gazing on the Chariot, and three Knights following Hercules.

Then came Victorie in an Imperiall Chariot, (betokening Soueraignty) on the top of the Chariot stood a displayed Eagle, vpon this Chariot attended three knights, and sixe Squires bearing Launces. Next vnto Victory entred Diana, in a Chariot made like a Forrest, set out, and adorned with liuing Birds, and Beasts, and thus attended: first came sixe Satyres playing on Musicke wildly: after whom sixe other Satyres, came leaping, and dancing antickly: then twelue more leading Dogges and Deere: then the Wood men, and after them Nymphes with Bowes and Arrowes, and then the Chariot where other Nymphes sate playing, and singing: after whom followed three Knights.

The day after, (being the 11. of Iune,) they repayred againe to the Tilt yard: the Palsgraue, with those other two, came in riding on horsebacke, hee himselfe still resembling Iason, attended by sixe Squires, eight Trumpets, seauen Footemen, and seauen Horses of state, led single. After him came two other, personating, Apollo and Bacchus, and they were in this manner accompanied: First, three Wildemen playing on strange Musicke, sixe Satyres fustiquely dancing to those tunes: these followed three Nymphes on Horse-backe, crowned with Garlands: after them, Musæus, Orpheus, and Emolpus, on horse-backe with Musicke: then Mydas sitting on an Asse, hee himselfe hauing Asses eares for comparing Pan to Apollo: and next him, miserable Marsyas, and a Satyre, fleaing off his skin, because he durst contend with Apollo in Musicke. In a short distance from these came in the nine Muses, placed in seuerall seates vpon the mountaine Pernassus, and and playing vpon seuerall Instruments of Musique: after whom followed closely the three Graces, accompanied with Hercules and Mercury: then Silenus (the Steward of Bacchus) with a Tunne and a Glasse, which as fast as hee filled with Wine, he euer and anon drasike off: and after him entred Bacchus in a Chariot drawn by Dogges, and attended by these sixe: Inuus, Pomona, Hymenæus, Zephirus, Flora, and Vertumnus.

Then followed an other person, wearing an Imperiall Crowne, foure others bound in Scarfes as Prisoners, going before him, and three after him with drawne Swords, besides foure Squires carrying Launces. After whom entred, three being attyred in the habites of Turkes, wayted vpon by sixe Squires, bearing Launces. And last of all, one in compleate Armour came riding in, being followed by three persons, that led Barbed Horses single. This was the honour, Glory, and Tryumph of the second, ending with as great State, Ceremony, and Courtly performance as the day did before.

Vpon the twelfth of Iune, the Princes went on hunting: the Palsgraue, with other Germaine Princes, the Duke of Lenox, the Earle of Arundell, the Lord Viscount Lisle, and many others, hunted the Deere with Launces.

Vpon the 13. of Iune, a merriment was presented to her, of mad fellowes, with Tubs set vpon their heads, apparelled all in straw, and sitting on Horse-back, did in this manner runne at Tilt, one at another with Staues, and made excellent pastime to the Beholders.

Vpon the foureteenth of Iune, the Duke of Lenox, the Earle of Arundell, and his Lady, the Lord Viscount Lisle, Generall Cicill, and his Lady tooke their leaues of the PRINCE and PRINCES.

And thus, in fewe Lines, you haue a true Relation set downe of this Noble and Princely Progresse: the Entertainements in euery place, being all honourable, bounteous, magnificent, and costly, fitting for such a Nation to bestowe vpon a Person, then whom none is more worthy.

A briefe Narration or description of the Countrey of this most Noble Prince Elector Palatine, Prince Frederick the fifth, Duke of Bauaria, &c. with the magnificence, and estate of his Court at Heydelbergh, with other things of worthy memory.

The deſcription of the Palſgraues Country, and Court at Heydelberg, &c.

COnsidering, indifferent Reader, how sinisterly some of Ignorance, and others of malice conceiue of the state, and dignity of the high and mighty Prince, Elector Palatine, Duke of Bauaria, &c. of his Countrey, of his receiuing his most honoured Lady, the Princesse Elizabeth, and entertainement of my Lords the Commissioners, and accordingly make report thereof, as also how desirous others are to be rightly informed of the truth: I could not, in my duty, knowing the place, and hauing certaine aduertisements thence from honourable personages, and others of great worth, and credit, but adde this short and plaine, yet true narration thereof, as well for the easier stopping of intemperate mouthes, as for the better satisfying of all honest mindes, that bee desirous of the truth.

First therefore concerning the Prince Elector Palatines originall & state, though those many pedegrees published here already of his Highnesse discent, sufficiently shew his ancient, and high blood rising from many great Emperours and Kings, yet giue me leaue to fetch it from the very beginning.

The Palatinate, and Bauaria, were once a Kingdome, yet subiect (as other States) vnto alteration and change. The Kingdome continued from Adelgerius the first King vntill Tassilo the last, all in lineall discent, three hundred thirty two yeares, from the yeare of Christ his incarnation, 556. vntill the yeare 788. This Tassilo the last King, for that hee would neither be subiect, nor friend vnto Charlemayne, was at length, after much Warre subdued by him taken prisoner, and both hee and his sonne Dedon depriued of their Kingdome, and kept prisoners in the Monastery of Laureack, neere vnto Heydelberge, where they both ended their dayes in Misery.

Chron. Chaldrian lib. 4. Chronolog. Franc.

After

After this, the posterity of Charles the great held those Countries, vntill the seauenteenth yeare of Otto the first Emperour, not full a hundred yeares: at which time the Bauarians ioyning battell against Otto, were ouercome. The Emperour Otto gaue Bauaria and the Palatinate vnto his brother Henry, whose sonne Henry, and Henry the holy his Nephew enioyed them, which third Henry hauing no child, gaue the lands and honours vnto Henry his wife Gunigundes brother, who also dying issuelesse, it returned vnto Henry the third Emperour, after 96. yeares, in the yeare 1033. who tooke it by force from Conrad the true heire without iust desert, to the great discontent of all the Princes of the Empire, and gaue it the next yeare after vnto his owne sonne Conrad. Yet at last againe in the 32. yeare of the Empire Frederick Barbarosse 1183. Henry then Duke of Bauaria and Saxony, being for his rebellion against the Emperour depriued of lands and honour, the Emperour gaue and restored the Palatinate and Bauaria vnto Otto of Witelsbach, the ancient heire of Conrad afore deposed, and suppressed by Henry the third. In whose issue male these Countries haue euer since continued now the space of 430. yeares, and still doe in this Prince Elector Frederick the fifth, the first and chiefest Prince of the Empire, and is the 26. in the gouernement since the said Otto of Witelsbach: and God grant (if it be his will) the issue of this marriage bed, may in their Highnesses seede still remaine so long as the Sunne and Moone endure.

Now for his Highnesse Country, it is neither so small, vnfruitfull, or meane, as is by some supposed. It is in length about 200 English miles the lower and vpper Country. In the lower the Prince hath 26. walled Townes, besides an infinite number of good and faire Villages, 22. houses; and the land is very fruitfull of wine, corne, and other comfortable fruits for mans vse, hauing the Rheine & Neckar running through it. The vpper Countrey hath not so many walled Townes and Princely houses, but those that are be generally fairer then in the lower, especially Amberg and New market.

For her Highnesse receiuing: After that shee had passed the low Countries, the Dukedomes of Gulick, Cleue, and Mont, the Bishopricks of Collen, and Trier, with a part of the Landgraue of Hessens Country; in all which places she had so great welcome, entertainement, and honourable Presents, as truely expressed the loue and applause of the people, the affection of friends, and greatnesse of those Princes, through whose territories she passed. She came at last happily to Cowlsome, where the Prince Elector Palatine met her Highnesse Post, with a few Horse, and went together to Gauelshemi, another small village of his, the first of Iune 1613. inconuenient for the prouiding for, and lodging of such a traine, being contrary to expectation, encreased to aboue a thousand persons, whereof sixe hundred were horsemen, that flocked thither from all parts to see her Highnesse, which was occasioned by reason Coub, Bacrahe, and all other good Townes of his there-abours were infected.

Here the Princes Elector and Princesse earnestly inuited my Lords the Commissioners, and others his Maiesties Officers, who had attended in the voyage to goe along with them vnto Heidelberg, whereby they might not only haue a better view of some part of the Country, but also finde entertainment, to their more content. The Commissioners condiscended vnto so gracious a ioynt request, and the rather to see her Highnesse well arriue at her owne home. But the other Officers could not by any intreaty be perswaded to goe further, desirous (perhaps) to make speedy report vnto their Maiesties and state of her Highnesse safe arriuall in the Palatinate, and so returned the next day for England. And this is the cause they saw not any memorable thing worthy of praise in the Palatinate, as my Lords the Commissioners did, and will not forbeare to speake honorably thereof, though some haue done otherwise: for answering of whom, and satisfying of others, I haue thought good to touch thus much by the way, and no more then I am informed of.

Thence they rid the next day the second of Iune vnto the Citty of Mentz, whither the Archbishop, and Prince Elector thereof, Chancellour of Germany, had inuited their Highnesses, where they stayed two nights, and were of him royally entertained, with great and bounteous feasting, and sundry excellent Fireworkes, the better to expresse their welcome, and passe out the time in Princely manner.

The fourth of Iune they rod to Oppenheim, an ancient Citty, with a Castle therein of the Prince Electors, and there lodged all night.

The 5. of Iune, their Highnesses hauing passed passed thorow the Citty of Wormes, they approached vnto Frankendale, a fine, and neate new Citty, where the Prince hath a house, which with all the territory about, is part of her Highnesse ioynture. Here the Towns-men came forth, and met their Prince and Princesse in a warlike manner attired like vnto Turkes, Polonians, and Switzers, and so conducted them in an orderly and braue march vnto their lodgings, in her Highnesse owne house.

Here she stayed two nights, hauing sundry goodly and well deuised shewes presented vnto her, as the first night a Regall Throane, representing Salomons Throane, when hee receiued the Queene of Sheba, which had therein a hundred Lamps lighted. The next day the Prince left her Highnesse riding to Heidelberg, 16 English miles off, to welcom the Princes that were come thither to honour him, and fetch her Highnesse in.

The fifth day at night, was presented the martiall siege of Troy, after this manner: there was a strong Castle of exceeding bignesse erected, representing old Troy, wherein were placed a hundred shot. Before the walls whereof, there lay another Army attired like Greekes, who thus began the siege. The horse-men first gaue the on-set, who retiring, were in great furie, seconded by the footmen. But yet the Troians repelling them, the Greekes politiquely sounded the retreat, seemed to retire, but hid themselues in Ambush, leauing a high horse of exceeding bignesse, with men in it before the walls, which the Troians drew into the Citty; in the night the Alarum was giuen, Troy fired, and the Greekes in triumph marched away Conquerours.

The next day, the seauenth of Iune, the Princesse remoued towards Heidelberge, after shee had passed the walled Towne of Ladeberge, was met three miles from Heidelberge, with the Prince Elector, accompanied with twelue other Princes, the rich Coach, thirty Earles, one thousand Gentlemen of the Countrey richly attired, and brauely set out with gallant Horse, Armour, and other habiliments of Warre: the Horsemen attending the Princes, were besides these, two thousand more, so that all the Horse were three thousand, and all great Horse. The Princes alighted, and welcommed her Highnesse, who ascended into her rich Coach. After a while shee was againe encountred in three seuerall places, with three Regiments of Foote, two thousand in a Regiment, who first welcommed their Princesse with vollies of small Shott, and had after, the thunder seconded with twenty peeces of great Ordnance: then they marched all together orderly in good array, conducting her to Heidelberge, where the Cittizens wanted no expressions of ioy, loue, and duty, in hearty welcomming of her, and praying for her, all windowes being replenished with people of all ages and degrees, and the streetes thronged with multitudes of people, drawne thither from all parts, not so much to see the Pageants that were erected to further this Honourable entertainement, as to haue their eyes filled in beholding of her Highnesse, whom all honoured and admired. And thus hauing passed in Magnificent great state thorow the Citty, shee was in like pompe conueyed into the Castle, where the Prince Electors mother, with many other great Princesses, Ladies, and Gentlewomen, receiued her with all fitting honour due to so great a Princesse.

The morning of the day following, being the eighth of Iune, was dedicated vnto God with singing of Psalmes, Prayer, Thankesgiuing, and a Learned Sermon, as was meete for so great mercies receiued from God. The next dayes, the ninth, tenth, and eleauenth, were appointed for Tilting, Tourning, and running at the Ring, the night for Fireworkes, and Dancings, two nights, after the Germane manner, the other times according to the English and French custome. Where let me not omit to shew, that my Lords the Commissioners, and all the Princes were lodged within the Castle, in lodgings well accommodated, and richly furnished with beddings, hangings, and all other necessaries.

The Princesse and other great Ladies, with the Commissioners, being fitly placed at the Tilt-yard in the Princes Garden: the first that entred the Tilt-yard the ninth day, was the Prince Elector himselfe, accompanied with other Princes of the Empire, gallantly mounted, but were interrupted for that time from their martiall sports by night: but the next day being the tenth, recompenced the same, for there came before the Prince Elector sundry stately shewes, pleasant triumphes, and Princely entertainements, as are formerly expresst.

Thus nothing being omitted, in Royall feasting, Princely entertainement, and honourable triumphes, which might serue either either now to set forth the magnificence of so great a Prince, or to please the eyes and content the mindes of all that illustrious presence.

Before I conclude, let me yet informe the Reader of one thing not mentioned, and which serueth out the Prince Electors greatnesse not a little: That besides their 6000. trained footmen who stated there at the solemnity, and were fed by the Prince abroade in the fieldes: there were euery meale (during the abode of the Commissioners and the German Princes there) aboue 500. Tables furnished, and about 6000. persons, guests, & seruats fed at them.

But because this was extraordinary, know that Court is euer great: for it hath 1000. persons in ordinary, dayly fed and clothed twise a yere at the Princes charge, and he keepeth 300. great horse. Besides his highnes hath many gouernors, Lieuernants deputies, receiuers, clarks, Captaines, & other officers abroad in seuerall gouernments, who haue all large salary. And is serued in such state, that euery meale a marueilous great Kettle-drum striketh, and 24. Trumpets sound the seruice: 2. & 12.

Wherefore let enuy, malice, and ignorance cease, euer henceforth to carpe at that they cannot paralel, now they may know it: and all honest mindes rest satisfied herewith.

Thus hauing briefly related indifferent Reader, that I promised, concerning the Prince Elector Palatines ancient state, his Country, the receiuing of his most honoured Princesse, and Royall entertainment which all degrees found at his highnesse Court, to their full content, during the whole time of these solemnities, I betake their highnesses, and our selues, and all the Israell of God euery where, vnto the Almighties euer safe protection; who preserue his, and conuert or confound all his aduersaries that wish euill vnto Zion.

1 Iames Boyne

The 17 of April this yere 1613. in the townships of Adlington, in the parish of Standish in Lancashire: there was a mayden childe borne, hauing foure legs, foure armes, two bellies, proportionable ioyned to one backe, one head with two faces, the one before, and the other behind, like to the picture of Janus: the like of this with two seuerall faces vnder one scull, I neuer read of before in any Chronicle, except by way of a Poeticall report. And vpon Saturday the 26. of June this yeere also, in the parish of Chyrks Church in Hamshire Iohn Hichel a Carpenter, a man of honest report, being in bed with his wife hauing a yong child lying with them. About midnight there happened a great and soudaine lightning, which came so fierce that an old woman, mother to this Hichels wife, hauing by vndiscernable meanes received a terrible blow vpon her cheeke, was therewithall awakened, and amazed, and cried out to her daughter and son in law, to come & help her, but they not answering her, she start vp and went into their bed, and awoke her daughter, who was vpon the soudaine very grieuously burned all the one side of her, and her husband & child lay dead close by her, which when she beheld, being soze hurt, and extreamly amazed, yet neuertheless she did her vtmost to haue comforted oz to help her husband and her child as also being wounded, yet shee drew her husband out of the bed, and perceiuing that he still burned inwardly, she brought him into the open street, where through the vehemency of the fire, she was constrained to forsake him, and there he lay burning vpon the earth for the space of almost three dayes: you shall vnderstand that there was no outward appearance of fire about him, but only a kind of smoke and glowing heat ascending from his body, vntill it was quite consumed to ashes, except only some small peeces of his bones, which some of the sad beholders cast into a pit made neere the place.

3 men burned to ashes with lightning.

Dorchester destroyed by fire.

And vpon Friday the 6. of August, the glouriching corpozat town of Dorchester, was quite consumed with fire, which began first in the house of a tallow Chandler, who hauing made a great a fire vnder his caldron, the flame tok hold of the Tallow, set fire on the house vpon an instant, and from thence the fire seized vpon his neighbours, the wind being then great, yet still encreased, and carried the flame ouer the whole towne, in all violence, without ceasing, vntill it had vtterly destroyed all their wares, goods, mony plate, and rich houshold-stuffe, and all their habitations, except onely a few houses standing neere the church, which with the church by Gods especiall prouidence were preserued: the losse of wealth which the inhabitants sustained, was full 200000. p. oz more, besides about 300. houses, yet it pleased Almighty God that neither man noz woman perished in the fire: it began about 2. a clock in the after-noone, when many were ioyfully busy in the field, about their haruest, who although they sodainly returned, and endeuoured to make all possible meanes to saue their goods, and houses, yet it preuailed not, so as many who at midday were men of wealth and great substance, before the sun went downe, were poore and destitute. If I should here set downe the seuerall terrors and damages done this yeare by fire, in very many and sundry places of this Kingdome, it would containe many a sheete of paper, as is euident by the incessant collections throughout all Churches of this Realme, for such as haue bin spoyled by fire.

The globe and Fortune play house burned with other things of note.

Also vpon S. Peters day last, the Play-house oz Theater, called the Globe, vpon the Bankside neere London, by negligent discharging of a peale of Ordnance, close to the South side thereof, the Thatch tooke fire, and the wind sodainly dispersed the flame round about, and in a very short space the whole building was quite consumed, and no man hurt: the house being filled with people, to behold the play, viz. of Henry the eight, And the next spring it was new builded in farre fairer manner then before.

And about foure yeeres after, a fayre strong new built Play-house, neere Goulding lane, called the Fortune, by negligence of a candle, was cleane burnt to the ground, but shortly after, rebuilt farre fairer. In the yeere one thousand six hundred twenty nine, there was builded a new faire Play-house, neere the white Fryers. And this is the seauenteenth Stage, or common Play-house, which hath beene new made within the space of three score yeeres within London and the Suburbs, viz.

Fiue Innes, or common Hosteryes turned to Play-houses, one Cock-pit, S. Paules singing Schoole, one in the Black-fryers, and one in the White-fryers, which was built last of all, in the yeare one thousand six hundred twenty nine, all the rest not named, were erected only for common Play-houses, besides the new built Beare garden, which was built as well for playes, and Fencers prizes, as Bull baytings; besides, one in former time at Newington Buts. Before the space of three score yeares aboue said, I neither knew heard nor read of any such Theaters, set Stages, or Play-houses, as haue beene purposely built within mans memory.

This yeere were also great damages done by extraordinary Inundations of the sea vpon many parts of this Kingdome, and chiefely in Essex, Suffolke, Norfolke, and Lincolneshire, where the Sea ouerflowed so far into the Land, that the neere inhabitants suppose it will neuer bee recouered, for in one place the sea entred into the Land, twelue miles, and the next summer viz. 1614. the towne of Stratford vpon Auon was burned, and in this space many other strange things hapned, not here mentioned, as well in dumbe creatures as otherwise.

Stratford vpon Auon burned.

The plantation of Ireland by the Citizens of London.

The Kings Maiesty in his Princely prouidence, for the present, and future good of his Kingdomes, and chiefely for preuention of rebellion in the Kingdome of Ireland, and of his especiall fauour, and kingly respect vnto the City of London, did in July, 1609. make a liberall offer vnto the Lord Mayor, and Citizens of London, for the instant possession, and plantation of Englishmen, in the Province of Vlster: and when the Lord Mayor, and Citizens had well aduised themselues therein, then in August following viz. 1609. they sent foure discreete expert persons, accompanied and directed by Sir Thomas Philips, as the Lords of the Councell, had appointed to survey that Prouince, and to obserue the Estate, profits, and condition thereof, and to report what ruines were to bee repayred, and what new Cities, Castles, and Townes were presently to bee builded, and when the foure surueyours were returned, they ascertayned the Lord Mayor, and Citizens of the true estate and valuable thereof, and of the seuerall commodities, honour and dignities that would ensue thereby, and then they humbly accepted to the Kings most gracious, and bounteous offer, then the Lord Maior and Citizens, vpon graue aduise, leuied twenty thousand pounds to bee imployed towardes this seruice, and by vertue of their Act of Common Councell, they constituted twenty foure committies, consisting of fiue graue Aldermen and eighteene commoners, the two chiefe whereof, were called the Gouernour and Deputie, all which are to bee new chosen euery yeere, hauing power and authoritie giuen them to order, and dispose of all matters, for plantation, Traffique, Rule, and gouernment in that North part of Ireland, whereupon the fourteenth of February next following, they made publication thereof, signifying vnto all handicrafts men, their present entertainement, and imployment in this expedition, and that they should haue their full wages, with their dwelling houses, and other good meanes for honest maintenance of themselues, and their families, vpon knowledge whereof, there came about three hundred persons, who were presently furnished with all things necessary, and with all speed were sent to Vlster, and thus the foresaid Gouernour Deputie, and committies very industriously ordered, and disposed all matters touching this plantation, as also by their Letters, and messengers with direcions vnto their agents, resident in that Prouince, and so continued vntill the moneth of June this yeare 1613. by which time his Maiestie, being truly informed of many negligences, and abuses touching this entended plantation, the which the King imitated at Greenewich, vnto the gouernour, diuers Aldermen and Citizens, being of the Committies and afterward sent Sir Henry Mountague, his Highnesse Serieant at Law, vnto the Lord Mayor, and Citizens, who in a great Court of common Councell vpon Midsommer day, this yeare 1613. declared vnto them, the errors in the due prosecution of their purposed Plantation, and that it was his Maiesties pleasure, they should forthwith send ouer some of themselues and others a better, and more speedy course in this plantation, as well to plant, fortifie, constitute, gouerne, and build, and to take exact survey of all places, and of all persons, and expences, imployed in this weighty businesse. Whereunto the Lord Mayor, and Citizens, after deliberate consideration, condescended to send ouer one Alderman and one commoner, they nominated three Aldermen, out of which number, by erection of hands, George Smithes, Alderman was selected, and in like manner, Ma. Matthias Springham, Citizen & Merchantaylor, was chosen to be his assistant by act of Common Councell, and for the better effecting of this businesse, the Gouernour and Committies, sent to ayde them in their Negotiation, Captaine Panton, for his direction in fortification, Master William Southes, A skilfull man, Surueyour of Buildings, and Master Clement Mosle, Solicitour of London, was their secretary, these in the moneth of July this yere one thousand six hundred and thirteen, imbarked for Ireland, and after a hard passage arriued at Dublinne, where the Lord Deputie wed them with all kindnesse and respect, and from thence they went vnto the Prouince of Vlster, surueyed the two chiefe Cities belonging to their plantation, viz the Citty of London-Derrie, and Colerayne, with the scituation, fortification, and obserued what Offices and Officers had beene formerly constituted, and which were fit to be continued or changed, as also to settle the best course for commerce, with good gouernment, in Peace and Warre, and hauing diligently spent full three moneths time in those parts, touching the premisses, they returned, hauing established their Townes, Lands, and Buildings, in the best manner the time would permit, and made report by writing vnto the Gouernour, and Committies, very exactly, answering the fourty foure Articles of Instructions, giuen them in charge by the Committies, and also deliuered vnto the common Councell, a Relation in writing of the whole manner of their proceeding in this businesse, & their aduises for the proceedings here after, which they well accepted, and approued, Alderman Cokayne was the first Gouernour.

The 5. of March, which was the day before the Christning, his Highnesse the Prince Palatine met the Prince of Anhalt with 200. great horse, and receiued him as Ambassador from the kings Maiesty of great Britaine, & was in like manner so receiued by the Administrator, the Duke of Den-pons, by another troupe of great horse, and so conducted into the Castle, and lodged in that place which is called the Emperors quarter, and serued by Earles and Barons, subiects to the Prince, and the same day there arriued also Prince Henry, with 80. men in his company, and was also receiued by his Highnesse, and the two young Dukes of Den-pons, and lodged in a place by himselfe according to his quality: also there arriued the same day the Deputies of the Nobility and Knighthood of Sweuia, Franconia, and the Rhine, with 60. great horse. The next day being the 6. of March in the morning, there was sounding of trumpets, Sagbots, and sundry other Instruments of Musick, which attended the comming of the princes vnto the Sermon where the said Musick with Organs & voyces, expelt the ioyfulnes of that happy day: after the great Bell had rung 3. times, then the prince of Anhalt, as his Maiesties Ambassador, came into the Church, hauing before him the high & inner Marshals, with Earls, Barons, & diuers gentlemen, accompanied with the administrator on his right hand, and his Highnesse the Prince Palatine on his left hand, with a very rich Canopie carried ouer him, so as the said Prince as his due, kept his state and place, hauing his Chaire aduanced three foote higher then the others, & was attended by M. Thomas Lewiston Esquire, Cup-bearer to the Princes Palatine. After this the Princes Electrix Dowager, and the Administratrix, mother and sister vnto his Highnesse, came in, conducted between the Prince Henry, with the former ceremony of Marshals, with others, &c. and were placed vnder a Canopy right against the Prince of Anhalt, and Master Scultetus, his Highnesse Chaplaine preached, who hauing ended his Sermon, then the Marshalls and the Nobility conducted the young Prince into the Chappell, and in the meane time there was Musique in the Church, as Organs, Cornets, and Hoyces, besides Trumpets and Sackbots which were without, &c. At this time there was a new Gallery built, euer which was carried the young Prince, conducted by the Marshals Carles, Barons, and Gentlemen aforesaid, being carried by the Princesse Katherine, second sister vnto his Highnesse, conducted by the two yong Dukes of Deuonshire, and the traine of the couering, which was wonderous rich, was borne vp by the two Countesses of Hanow, and ouer him a Canopie, borne by foure Gentlemen, and being come into the Chappell, the Prince of Anhalt alone, presented the childe at the Font, who was named Frederick Henry: the ceremony being ended, the young Prince was presented vnto Madame the Electrix Dowager as Godmother, and whilst she held him, came the Administratrix on the right hand, and Prince Henry on her left hand to stay and beare vp the Infant, and afterward it was deliuered vnto the Administratrix, and by her presented vnto the three Deputies before mentioned who take him, and gaue him vnto the Princesse Madame Katherine: presently after that the Christening was ended, there was a great peale of Ordnance, and the childe with the former state and traine, returned in the same manner as it was brought vnto the Chappell. A true Copie of the contract of Peace, and Friendship, concluded in Ianuary last, Anno one thousand, six hundred, and thirteene, betwixt the two mighty Princes, Christian the fourth King of Denmarke, &c. and Gustauus Adolphus King of Sweden, &c.

A Preface of his Maiestie the King of great Britaine.

IAMES, by the grace of God King of great Britaine, Fraunce, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. by these wee make it knowne, and doe testifie, that vpon a godly and religious respect through our intercession, by sending our Ambassadours from great Britaine, a treaty of Peace, hath beene enterprised, betwixt the most renowned, & most mighty Princes, and Kings, Christian the fourth of that name, King of Denmarke, Norroway, Vandales, and Gotthes: Duke of Sleswich, Holster, Stormarie, and Dithmarsie, Count in Oldenburg, and Delmenhurst, our dearest Cousins allied, our best beloued brother, and Gossip, and his Kingdomes vpon that one part: and the Prince Gustauus Adolphus, chosen King, and Prince by heritage of Sweden, Gotthes, and Vandales, great Duke of Finland, Duke of Estland, and Westmanland, &c. and the Kingdome of Sweden, on the other part, and it hath beene so farre aduanced, that by the fauour of the Grace of God all discords and controuersies being reconciled and taken away, whereupon hath followed the end of Warres, Hostility, and all enmities, practised vnto this time, and a firme, stable, and perfect peace, is renewed and concluded on both sides, which shall perpetually remaine without interruption, and shall be continued faithfully betwixt the said Princes, and their Kingdomes, and Subiects, like as it is contayned in this contract of pacification, hereafter following.

The King of Denmarke his stile and true Titles.

Christian the fourth, by the grace of God King of Denmarke, Norroway, Vandales, and Gotthes: Duke of Slesswick, Holster, Stormarie, and Dithmarsie, Count in Oldenbourg, and Delmenhurst, wee make it knowne to all men, that whereas betwixt Vs and our Kingdomes of Denmarke, and Norroway, &c. on the one part, as also betwixt the most high and mighty Prince, King Charles the ninth, and then after he being departed this life, betwixt Gustauus Adolphus, chosen King, and Prince by heritage of Sweden, Gotthes, and Vandales, great Duke of Finlande, Duke of Eastlande, and Westman-lande, &c. and the Kingdome of Sweden on the other part, by the space of certaine yeares, diuers offences, dissentions, and controuersies haue risen, and fallen out, which from time to time haue beene so farre enlarged, and spread abroad, that at the last they haue burst out in an open warre.

And the most renowned High and Mighty Prince, Iames by the Grace of God, King of great Brittaine, Fraunce, and Ireland, defendour of the Faith, &c. our best beloued Cousin allyed, and neighbour, out of that faithfull affection, and inclination of minde, wherewith his Royall Maiestie doth embrace all Christian Princes, and namely those that make profession of the reformed Religion, and of the vniforme Doctrine of the Churches, amongst whom we on both sides, by the benefit of God are reckoned, with our Subiects of our Kingdomes, of Denmarke, Norroway, and Sweden, and his fore-said Maiestie of great Brittaine; first, by his Letters diligently written, hath very earnestly exhorted vs on both sides, to enter in peace and concord one with another, and at last like a friendly mediatour, and concorder, by meanes of his Royall Ambassadours, being noble and discreete men, to wit, [a] Robert Anstruther Esquire, and Gentleman of his Maiesties Priuie Chamber, and [b] Sir Iames Spens, of Wormestone Knight, hee hath vsed all diligence, and labour, that this Warre which at this time is, and sometime heretofore hath continued betwixt vs, and our Kingdomes, vpon some godly, iust, and equall conditions, and by mediation, and intercession of his Maiestie, might be taken away, and extinguished, and in place therof, a friendly concord, louing neighbourhood, and a firme peace, sure, and constant, to both parties might be renewed, and established. Therefore in regard of such a louing, and faithfull admonition of his Royall Maiestie, it is agreed vpon betwixt vs, and the King Gustauus Adolphus, in this manner as followeth.

First by his Letters. Next by his Ambassadours. And who they were.

a For Denmarke.

b And for Sweden.

The time and place appointed for eight Commissioners of both the kingdoms to meete together.

That vpon the twenty ninth day of Nouember, in the yeare by-past a beginning of a parlee should be graunted vpon the frontiers, which doe lye betwixt Knerod, and Visbeck: where eight Commissioners of both Kingdomes, should assemble themselues with sufficient Commissions, and instructions, to treat vpon, and finish the controuersies which are betwixt the Kingdomes on either side; as also to weigh, and examine, the godly, iust, and honest conditions, by which the fore-said warres and enmities which now are, and vnto this houre haue continued amongst vs, and our Kingdomes may cease and take an end.

These were the foure Commissioners for Denmarke.

We haue dispatched and sent vnto the said parle, or meeting, our well beloued, noble, and honourable men Christian Frys of Borrebij, our Chauncellour: Mandrup Pasberg of Hagisholme, Gouernour of our Castle of Olbourg, Axell Brahe of Ellued, Commander of the Abbey of Dalum, and Eitrie Brech of Eitrup, Gouernour of our Castle of Droningbourg, our faithfull Counsellours.

His Maiesties request drew him to the peace.

And reason why.

And vpon the King Gustauus Adolphus his side, did compere these noble and honourable Lords, Lord Axel Oxenstiern Baron of Fiholm, Chancellour of the Kingdome of Sweden; the Lord Nicol Bielke Baron of Falstade, and the Lord Gustauus Stenbuck Baron of Cronebeche, and Oreiten an inheritour of Thorup, and Lehna, and Henry Horn of Ranhas Marshall, counsellors of the Kingdome of Sweden, which Eyght Councellors and Commissioners aforesayd, of Denmarke, and Sweden, hauing earnestly and heartily; called vpon the name of the eternall and Almighty God whom we do acknowledge to be the fountaine, and cause of all peace, and good policy; after they had surrendred on eyther side their Commissions of full power to examine diligently all causes of controuersies betwixt vs and our Kingdomes.

And these other for Sweden.

All doe meete at the day and place appointed.

And also the foresayd Ambassadours of great Britaine being present with them; who in like manner, in the name and behalfe of their most gracious King, and Master, with a speciall care, and singular diligence did handle, and intreate vpon these points of controuersie: At the last by meanes of the helpe of God they haue ordayned and decreed betwixt vs and the foresaid King Gustavus Adolphus, our Kingdomes and Subiects, a finall and irreuocable peace, in this forme and manner as followeth.

with his Maiesties Ambassadors who at their meeting were present with them.

And first of all, concerning the foure principall controuersies, to wit, first Sonnebourg, secondly, the three Crowns, thirdly, the Laps dwelling on the Sea coast in North land, and the government of Ward-house, & fourthly, the tole or customes: which foure cases although in the assembly, holden at Flachebech in the yere 1603. they were determined with contrary opinions by the Commissioners of both the Kingdomes, and for that reason they were given over to an arbiter, that by him they might bee finally decided: notwithstanding by this present meeting, and pacification they are reconciled and agreed vpon by these meanes hereafter following.

1 The first Sonnebourg Castle given ouer to the Crowne of Denmarke.

First, concerning the controuersie, & discord fallen out, about the Castle of Sonnebourge in the Isle of Oesele, we haue agreed in this manner: That the foresayd King Gustavus Adolphus, in his owne behalfe and in name of the Crowne of Sweden shall give ouer and renounce the sayd controversie, and Castle: so that never, nor at any time hereafter, it may bee renewed or redemanded by any King of Sweden. But that the said Castle of Sonnebourgh, with all things belonging thereto, without all disputation, lette, or hinderance, shall remaine perpetually, vnder our power, and authoritie of the Crowne of Denmarke.

In like manner for asmuch, as both before, and after the contract of Stetine, there hath alwayes beene a dissention betwixt these Kingdomes, concerning the Armes, of the three Crownes: which the Kings of Sweden haue thought to be the proper and peculiar Badges, or Markes of the Armes of Sweden: but wee on the contrary, Iudge them to be a token of vnion (that is, when the Kings of Denmarke, were chosen to bee Kings of Sweden) and therefore it belongeth with equall right, to the vse of both the Kingdomes: where through wee haue agreed concerning this controuersie, vpon this condition: that all dispute, and contention for these three Crownes shall hereafter be abolished, and all vtterly extinguished, and shall neuer be raised againe by the succeding Kings of Denmarke, or Sweden: but both of them shall haue free liberty to vse, and inioy, perpetually, without impediment the foresayd Armes of three Crownes, providing nevertheless, that neither wee, nor our successours Kings of Denmarke, by vsing in our Armes of these three Crowns, shall challenge to vs any right, or Title ouer the Kingdome of Sweden, but that we shall stand to the renunciation, made to that purpose, which is conteined in the Articles of the contract of Stetin.

2 The armes of three Crownes now permitted to both the Kings indifferently.

Moreover seeing by the course of certaine yeeres dissentions, and disputes haue risen concerning the supriority, Regalities, iuridiction, and dominion of the Sea ouer the Laplanders, dwelling on the Sea coast of the North Ocean, betwixt Titisiford, and Weranger, which disputes haue remayned vnreconciled to this houre. Yet neuertheless we by this treaty of peace haue given ouer and tendred to the King Gustavus Adolphus, the strengths, and Castles that we haue ceazed vpon during this Warre (as more largely shall be declared hereafter) therefore touching these dissentions that doe concerne the seacoast, betwixt Titisiford, and Weranger, wee haue agreed and made transaction in this manner following.

3 The Iurisdiction and Dominion ouer the Laplanders, dwelling on the Sea coast of the North Ocean betwixt Titisiford and Weranger.

That the King Gustavus Adolphus, for himselfe, & his highnes successors Kings of Sweden, and for the Crowne of Sweden, shall renounce vnto vs, and the Crowne of Norroway, all the olde revenues, rents, and toles, which the Kings and Crowne of Sweden, were wont to possesse in those former yeeres in Norroway, and the coast of Northland, & government of Wardhouse from Titisiford, vnto Weranger, from the foresayd Laplanders, dwelling in the coast of

of the Ocean. Moreouer, his Highnesse doth renounce, and giue ouer all rights and titles whatsoeuer hath beene by contract purchased to the Crowne of Sweden, from the Ruthenians, or Russes, in the said territory of Wardhouse, vnto Weranger. In like manner the said King Gustavus Adolphus, doth renounce the right, superiority, and dominion, or commaund of the Sea, and other Regalities or Kingly Rights which he did claime to himselfe in NORROWAY, NORTH-LANDE, and the territorie of Wardhouse, vpon the said Ocean Sea, in such fort, that neither the fore-said King Gustavus Adolphus, neyther his Highnesse successours, nor the Crowne of Sweden shall neuer hereafter challenge, or clayme to themselues any title, or right of that which lyeth towards the Norroway Seas, in the fore-said Northland, and territorie of Wardhouse from Titisiford to Weranger: But that the foresaid Rent, Tribute, or Custome of the Crowne of Sweden, the right and soueraignty in matters as well Ecclesiasticall as Temporall, the commaundement of the Sea with the fore-said Russian rent, shall perpetually, generally, and altogether hereafter remaine by proper right to our power, and to the Crowne of Norroway, yet neuertheless, those Villages of Finlanders, and Laplanders, which are placed amongst the hills, aboue the said territories, shall not be comprehended amongst them of our iurisdiction, seeing they doe not belong to these dissentions for the Sea and Sea coast, in the which we pretend to haue the whole right.

4 The Dance in Swethland, and the Swethen in Denmarke free from customes.

As concerning the variance and dissention of the tole, vpon that wee haue agreed in this manner: that the subiects of Denmarke, and Norroway, and other Prouinces subiect to them, shall haue freedome and liberty without impediment to traffique, and vse Marchandise, to buy and sell in Sweden, and in the Prouinces thereto belonging, without imposing any tole, or bording, which either for the present is in vse, or in time comming may be thought vpon, or inuented vpon their persons or goods, whither they be bought or solde. In like manner the Kingdome of Sweden, the Prouinces, Subiects, and Inhabitants, belonging thereto, shall haue freedome and vnforbidden liberty of buying and selling, in the Kingdomes of Denmark and Norroway, and Prouinces to them belonging: And also free passage to goe and come through the Sound with their goods, without imposing of any Customes, or bourding either vpon their persons, or their goods, which neither is in vse, or hereafter may be inuented. Neuertheless we haue reserued this poynt to our selues on both sides, that whatsoeuer kinde of forraigne drinkes shall be brought in our Kingdomes by our subiects on both sides, it shall pay the same Customes, which the rest of the Inhabitants of the Kingdome doe pay to their King.

Except for forraigne drinks broughe in.

5 Concerning the title or title of the Duke of Lapland.

Concerning the title of the Lappes in Northland, we haue concluded in this manner: That if the King Gustavus Adolphus, or his Highnesse succeessours, shall now, or at any time hereafter take it vpon them, notwithstanding the Sea coast dwelling Laps, towards the Ocean betwixt Titisfiord, and Weranger in Northland, and the gouernment of Wardhouse, shall not be reckoned in the number or title of Laps, belonging vnto the Crowne or Kings of Sweden: but onely shall be interpreted of those Laps of Finmarke which dwell farre from the Sea, in the mountaines, which are only subiects to Sweden, as is afore-said vpon the third controuersie.

Concerning the difference for the Towne of Gottenberg, it is concluded and agreed vpon betwixt vs, that if in time of comming, as now being raised, it shall bee repayred againe, and indowed with liberties, and priuiledges, the same shall no wayes be graunted, if in any case they shall be prejudicible to our Royall right of the Sounde.

7 Navigation free to Rie and Churland.

As to the Navigation towards Rie, and Churland, to the end it should not hereafter giue any matter of discord to our Kingdomes on any sides: If from henceforth the Towne of Rie shall begin to bee besieged by his Highnesse of Sweden, during the siege, our Subiects shall altogether abstaine from sayling vnto Rie: and whosoeuer doth the contrary, let them doe it vpon their owne perill. Otherwise the said Navigation shall be free, and without hinderance, both to our Subiects, and to Strangers that shall passe through the Sound: except it may chance to be ordained otherwise betwixt vs, and his Highnesse in respect of the friendship that now is contracted betwixt vs.

Except Rie be besieged by the Swethen.

8 What things are restored by the King of Denmarke to the the King of Sweden.

And for as much as we, Christian King of Denmarke, &c. for the respect of peace and concord, no lesse then in fauour of our welbeloued brother allied, neighbour and friend, the King of great Britaine, doe quit claime, and giue ouer, by this treaty of peace, all right, power, and commaundement which by right of war-fare is due vnto vs, over all the Castles, Fortresses, Provinces, Townes, and Territories, which by the benefit of Almighty God, and strength of Warre, wee haue seazed vpon and possessed, and doe restore the same againe to the foresayd King Gustavus Adolphus, and to the Crowne of Sweden in manner as after followeth.

That Kalmer Castle, Risby Castle, Borckholme and the Ile of Oeland, with all the Townes, strengths, and territories, which are subiect to the sayd fortresses, and Castles, the third day of Easter next, and nothing els but the bare Castles and Landes shall be restored to King Gustavus Adolphus, his assignaries, or deputies: and that they bee hereafter adiudged to pertayne for euer without impediment to his highnesse, and vnder the authoritie of the Crowne of Sweden.

1 Kalmer. 2 Risby. 3 Brockholme. 4 Oeland.

The K of Sweden restoreth to the K. of Denmarke 1 Iemptland. 2 Northland.

And in behalfe and change thereof, the foresaid King Gustavus Adolphus, doeth yeelde, and give ouer vnto vs, and to the Crowne of Norroway, first Iemptland, and all other things that haue beene taken from vs, or our Kingdomes in time of this warr: together with these things which appertaine to Northland, as here before hath beene sayd.

9. And ten hundred thousand Dolors to bee payed at fiue termes within fiue yeares.

Moreover, his Highnesse doth gratifie vs in the payment of ten hundred thousand dolors, within the terme of six yeeres after the date of the Obligation given to vs thereupon: The first three termes of which payment shall bee dispatched, and discharged in the Castle of Elsbourg, and the fourth, and last in our Towne of Halmestade, as more at length is contained in the letters of obligation giuen vnto vs by his highnesse aforesayd, and ratified, confirmed, and sealed by the most illustrious Prince, the Lord Iohn, Prince by birthright of the Kingdome of Sweden, Duke of Ester, Gothland, and the whole Councell of the Kingdome of Sweden.

10. The Townes, Castles, and Lands given in pawne to the King of Denmarke, for the said summe of money.

By the which letters it is made manifest that the Castle of Elsbourg, the fort of Golberry, with the townes of Nyllosse, and Gamellosse, and Gottenburg, together with the strayts and lands vnderwritten, that is to say, Sendall, Athenis, Hissing, Baltebrigd, Alley, Vette, and Flonder, with the customes, setled rents, and casualties which in the forenamed places and straits were in vse and custome to be payed yeerely, shall remaine vnto vs, in stead of a profitable pawne for the foresaid sum of ten hundred thousand dolors.

That is to say, vpon these conditions, If in case the foresayd sum of money, by tenor of the sayd obligation giuen, in neglecting the termes, shall not bee satisfied and fully payed: That then and in that case, the foresayd Castle of Elsbourg, with the Townes, strayts and landes aboue named, shall be iudged to perteine in perpetuall property to vs, and to the Crowne of Denmarke, as more at large is conteyned in the letter Patent of the sayd obligation.

And in case of none paiment at the termes appointed, to remaine forever to the Crowne of Denmarke.

But neuertheleſſe, the administration of Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction, shall remayne in the power of the Bishop of Scare, who shall do right, and give iustice to our commissioners, conforme to the iniunctions of Sweden, whensoeuer they shall desire to call any persons in iudgement. The Nobility, and all others of the dignity of Knighthood, that doe dwell within the iurisdiction of Elsbourg, or haue their farmes or mannors lying there, they shall possesse and enioy the same according to the rule of the Lawes and Priuiledges of Sweden, and shall do their Knightly seruice vnto the King of Sweden, and shall come to their owne publique conuentions, Parliaments, or assemblies. All others dwelling as well in the City as in the Country, shall receiue iustice according to the lawes of Sweden.

The agreement and contract made at the towne of Stetine, in the yeere of God, 1570. & established betwixt the two kingdomes, and shall stand on either side, shall bee kept vnbroken in any manner of the same strength and vigor, as it was before the beginning of this warre, neyther shall any thing bee taken away or derogated from it, by this forme of pacification, except onely in these Articles which are agreed vpon, and specially abolished by this present pacification.

He rode through Ipſwich, and lay one night at Burnt wood, not being knowne to any what he was, no not ſo much as to his guides that came with him. The King of great Britaine, at this time was at Apthan in Bedfordſhire, going in progreſſe towards Ruſſord in Rutlandſhire, and vpon Saterday the 23. of July about 8. a clocke in the morning, King Iames had certaine intelligence of his brothers priuate and vnexpected arriuall at London, returned back to Lond. that ſame day at euening, & by the way was encountred with a very fierce ſtorme of haile & raine, the violence whereof was ſuch, that as they were comming downe a hill, it forced the Kings Coach-horſe, and the reſt of the horſes in their company to turne their heads from the ſtorme.

And vpon Saterday the 30. of July, hee beheld feates of armes performed by the moſt skilfull Fencers about London, who played at ſundry weapons according to the manner of fight.

The next day being Sunday both the Kings were at White-hall, and Doctor Mountaine Deane of Weſtminſter, preached before them in Latine, and that day the King of Denmarke was royally feaſted in the beautifull baqueting houſe, where both the Kings dined together, in great ſtate, from thence they returned to Somerſet houſe, where that night in the Garden by the King of Denmarks deuice and charge, and by his owne men there was performed moſt excellent and ingenious fier-workes.

The next day being Sunday the firſt of Auguſt, the two Kings and Prince Charles tooke Barge early in the morning, and went firſt to Woolwich, where hauing viewed certaine ſhips in the docke, they went thence to Graueſend, and there dined at the ſigne of the ſhippe, after dinner King Iames and Prince Charles accompanied the King of Denmarke aboard vnto his owne ſhippe, where hauing ſtayed about two houres, and performed all kingly complements the King of England tooke Barge and returned to blackwall, and there tooke Coach and rode that night to Theobarides, and ſo went forward againe of his progreſſe.

And the next day the King of Denmark and Prince Charles rode to Rochester, and there beheld the great new ſhip called the Prince, and when they had well obſerued the ſtrength and ſtatelineſſe thereof, they returned to Graueſend to dinner and after dinner the Prince accompanied his vncle aboard his owne ſhip, there ſtayed a while, and hauing taken their leaues either of other, Prince Charles returned that night to London, and the next day Chriſtian King of Denmarke with his three braue ſhippes and kingly traine ſet ſayle for Denmarke, where they all arriued ſafely.

And though he ſtayed in England but a few dayes, yet his Princely kindneſſe and bounty was royall vnto all perſons, according to their degrees that did him any ſeruice or attendance, viz. vnto ſome hee gaue faire chaines of gold, to others, iewells, rings or bouches, beſides his liberall reward in money, &c. The Kings Princely bounty.

The 26. of October, the laſt yeare 1613. there arriued Olexſe Eranowich Ifwzen Lieutenant of Shatſkey, Ambaſſador from Michael Pheodorowich vriouc, the new young Emperor of Ruſſia, vnto the King of great Britaine, to congratulate with his Maieſty, to deſire his continuall loue and amitie, and to make attonement betweene the King of Sweathland and the Ruſſian Emperour, and that it would pleaſe his Maieſtie to ſend an Ambaſſadour to his maiſter the Emperour this ſpring 1614. this Ambaſſador returned, hauing in all reſpects beene very honorably entertained, and his preſents of Furres, which hee gaue to the King Queene and Prince, were very graciouſly accepted. And this moneth of June 1614. the King ſent Sir Iohn Merrick Knight Ambaſſador to Polco, this Knight hauing euer from his youth beene of great and graue experience in thoſe parts, and as well knowne and beloued of the Princes and people of Ruſſia: he went honorably attended. The Emperor of Ruſſia his Ambaſſador.

Wednesday the 13. of July, 1614. Thomas Earle of Suffolke, late Lord Chamberlaine, was ſworne Lord Treaſurer of England, he was accompanied to Weſtminſter-hall with many of the Nobility of the Land and with many other of honourable ranck and quality to the number of three hundred thirtie and ſix, being all well mounted, and at this time, Robert Earle of Somerſet was made Lord Chamberlaine. The Earle of Suffolke made Lord Treaſurer. The Earle of Somerſet made Lord Chamberlaine.

Watterday the firſt of October, Sir Fulke Grevill knight Chauncelor of the exchequer was ſworne a priuie Counceller.

The 20. of October this yeare, 1614. there was a Call of Seariants at Law, being 11. in number, viz. George Wilde; W. Towes, Richard Bawtrey, H ury Finch, Tho. Chamberlaine, Fraunces Moore, Thomas Atthow, Iohn Moore, Fraunces Haruy, Charles Chibborne & Thomas Richardſon, and in Trinity Tearme before therowere 2. Seargeants made viz. Sir Randal Crew of Lincolnes Inne knight, & Sir Robert Hicham, of Greies Inne knight. 3 generall call of Seriants at law.

At this time was new builded, the faire Councell Chamber for the Lord Maior and Aldermen of London, the former Councell chamber being too little, and inconuenient, cauſed them to build this: it ſtandeth at the North end of their old councell Chamber. Sir Thomas Middelton, was now Lord Maior, who much furthered this worke. Councell chamber of London new builded.

This yeare at the end of Haruest the King appointed a generall muſter of horſe and foote throughout England, the which euery ſhire perfourmed, and very many were faine to buy new furniture, by reaſon their old was much decayed and out of faſhion, and greatly ſpoyled for want of vſe. This muſtering and training of Souldiers at this time was done with great chearefulneſſe, and chiefely by the Citizens of London, who were wonderous forward, as well in making new prouiſion of what they wanted, as with all willing dexteritie to practiſe all points o warre & military diſcipline, and for the well managing of this buſineſſe, the Lord Maior and communaltie ordained twentie Captaines to be ſelected of the moſt active and forward Citizens, and vnto euery of them were allotted three hundred ſhot, and pikes, viz. ſix thouſand in all for that time, being for the moſt part all houſholders, brauely furniſhed, theſe 20. captaines perfourmed all things with ſuch expedition, bountie and brauery, as but in the yeare 1588. the like was neuer before, and ſuch of them as were not formerly of the martiall Societie and practiſe of the artillerie Garden, became then admitted of that warlike company, whereof I haue made mention in the yeare 1610. which company at this time was growne great and in good eſtimation, vnto which Garden at the vſuall times of their militarye exerciſe, many countrey gentlemen of all ſhires reſorted, and diligently obſerued their exerciſe of armes, which they ſaw was excellent, and being returned, they practiſed and vſed the ſame vnto their trained bands in their countries. 3 generall muſter throughout England.

Young boyes of London. Alſo at this time the young Schollers, and other youthes, from the age of nine or ten yeares vnto ſeauenteene, of their owne voluntary diſpoſitions, choſe themſelues Captaines and Lieutenants out of their Companies, and with ſound of drum, and their enſignes ſpread, marched into the field, vpon play-dayes, and holy-dayes, and practiſed all points of Warre, which they had ſeene their elders teach, hauing made them pikes and peeces fit for their weake handling.

At this time through the diligent and extraordinary charge and care of the Lord Maior and Citizens of London, dayly perfourmed by the ouerſight and diligence of the Waterbailie, all ſalle nets and vnlawfull engines are now ſuppreſt and reduced to a lawfull and true forme of fiſhing, inſomuch as through the ſayd reſtraint, the riuer of Thames (being the beauty and ornament of all riuers in the world) is now become rich and plentifull, and yeeldeth great ſtore of fiſh of diuers and ſundry kindes, and that at more reaſonable price then hath beene theſe many yeeres paſt, as appeareth by the great abundance, plenty, and ſtore, weekely brought in, into the Markets of the Citie.

The ſayd Lord Maior, hath now lately by his ſayd ſubſtitute the Waterbaylie, vpon a great complaint made, concerning the Timbers, ſtanding in Tilbury hope, below Graueſend, very daungerous for paſſengers, as alſo for the infinite deſtruction of brood and frie of fiſh, which the ſayd Timbers made in Fiſhermens Nets which ſtood continually night and day, in the full courſe and ſwift paſſage of the ſtreame, to the great perudice, and annoyance of the ſayd Riuer: Cauſed them to be pulled vp, and taken away, and brought to the Guild hall in London, to the example of all Malefactors in that kinde, by which courſe and prouidence it is credibly reported, there is ſaued and preſerued aline, foure buſhels of ſmall fiſh and frie, euery Tyde, night and day throughout the whole yeare, which being computated, doth amount to a great matter. The riuer of Thamis cleared of ſtops pyles and weeres.

The ſaid Lord Maior and communalty hath within theſe three yeeres now laſt paſt, cleanſed and cleered the riuer of Thamis Weſtward of 79. ſtops or hatches, which conſiſted of diuers great ſtakes, and pyles, built vp by fiſhermen, and ſtanding very dangerouſly and neere vnto vnto the faire deepe, insomuch as there now remaineth none of them vpon the sayd Riuer, but such only as stand out of the faire way, and out of daunger of passengers, being otherwise a great succour and nourishment to young birds and frie of fish, at the foote, and bottome of the same, and being placed in remote, and by-places vpon the sayd Riuer, it greatly succoureth, and comforteth diuers poore fishermen, dwelling vpon the same, and besides that, makes the water so high in the heate, and drought of Somer, that Barges may passe with all kind of goods to the honorable City of London, which otherwise would lie vpon ground, in great numbers, and could not else passe by reason of the lownesse of the Water, &c.

There bee likewise, a number of Fishermen belonging to the sayd Riuer of Thamis, some called Tankermen, others called Pebbermen, Peter-men, Trawler-men, and such like, who in times past, haue vsed very vnlawfull fishing vpon the same, but now through the sayd former restraint, they are likewise reduced to a better, and a more ciuill gouernment &c.

And least this prouident care for preseruation of passengers, and conseruation of fish, as aforesayd, should be thought needlesse, or not worthy the knowledge or memory, you shall vnderstand, that the like course vnto the same end was performed in the seauenth yeere of Henry the fourth, viz. in the yeere of our Lord God one thousand foure hundred and six, and likewise in the time of Henry the eight as is recorded in former Chronicles.

Walter Hugh Middleton bringeth a new Riuer to the City of London.

The sacred Scriptures, and all ancient Historians, make great mention of Welles, and Riuers, and of their names, and situation: the Annales of Rome, and the Chronicles of other Cities, make due memory of their Aquataries manifesting the vtilitie, obtained by Riuers in their seuerall kindes, and some ancient writers affirme, Riuers to be of such matchlesse vtility as but man himselfe excepted, there is nothing so precious; and all men confesse they are vnualuable.

Which being euery way true, it were monstrous wrong to omit the memory of a worke of wonder, done to that effect, in these our dayes, viz, the bringing of a sweete Riuer to the North side of the Citie of London, for the generall seruice of that Cittie, and her Suburbs, knowing that time and enuie hath destroyed the state and memorie of farre greater Monuments: when Recordes haue fayled the euer-giuing lights of deedes of worth from age to age, in spight of time, enuie, and oblition.

Therefore let not the eye of enuy, nor the heart of malice, taxe me with politritie, for making more large and particular mention of this Riuer, then of some other things, wherevnto they had a greater expectation and affection.

The glorious Citie of London, most famous by that name, being indeede, one of the most auncient flourishing Cities of the whole world, and without wrong to any other Citie, it may iustly bee sayd to bee the onely, auncient Cittie, that since her first founding, hath beene preserued from destruction, and Alteration from her first Seate and foundation: and for these late yeeres so much encreased in people, and building, as no knowne Citie of the Vniuerse, may compare with it, and is euery way the more strange and wonderfull, in beeing but a Cittie in an Iland, lying quite out of all common passage, or thorough fayre to any other Nation, which sayd encrease of beautifull buildings, and inhabitants, as well without the Walles and Liberties, as within the Cittie, consisting now of very ingenious people, as well natiues as of all other, Christian Nations, professours, and practisers of all Arts and Sciences, vsed and knowne vpon the vpper face of the earth, besides great multitudes of other people, of lesse deserning commendations, residing within the Cittie and suburbs, for whose generall and particular vse of Water, the former prouision would no way suffice, notwithstanding fyfteene common Conduits, and the great supply from that most delicate and seruiceable Riuer of Thamis.

Vpon consideration whereof, and to make a plenteous supply, it hath pleased Queene Elizabeth about the tenth yere of her raigne, to grant the Citizens of London, full power, by Act of Parliament, to make, cut and bring a Riuer from any part of Middlesex, or Hartfordshire, to serue the Cittie, prouided alwayes, that they should performe it within ten yeeres after the date of the Acts. In which space, to that purpose many things were propounded, and consulted, but nothing to any purpose concluded or attempted, though diuers well affected and ingenious persons much preferred the necessitie and worthinesse of this worke: most men being ouercome with the daunger, difficultie, and feare of the great charge and endlesse expence in atcheiuing it, and was diuerly holde a thing impossible to bee duely performed, and so this worke ceased, beeing in a manner vtterly reiected, vntill the comming of our Soueraigne Lord King Iames, at which time the great confluence of people was more and more encreased, so as the supply of Water was more and more needed and desired. It then pleased his Maiestie by Act of Parliament to graunt them full power for euer to bring a Riuer as aboue sayd, which Act of Parliament beeing afterwardes by the Citizens more warily considered of, in so weighty a businesse, they found it somewhat defective, and therevpon the next Parliament, they became againe humble suters to make that Act more perfect in their behalfe, which they obtained: yet neuertheless, and notwithstanding all their former surueay of Riuers, Springs, and ground, and due examination of all charges from head to foote, with certaintie that it was feesible and possitable. This worke in all respects remayned in silence as it did before, being hyanded by a generall boyce of impossibilitie, which caused some that formerly affected it, and were very forward to to further this worke, began now, not only to thinke backe themselues, but vtterly discouraged all others, arging the great daunger and extreame difficulty thereof, concluding directly it was insesible, and therefore impossible to be effected. By which generall desperate opinion, it was wholly neglected, and vtterly refused of all, for the space of two or three yeeres, except the cittie or Chamber of London would contribute thereunto, but that could not be obtained.

All which the generalitie too well perceiuing, remained desperate to be supplyed of their great want of water.

After all which, vpon deliberate aduice, and diligent search into the depth of all difficulties, impediments, and charge, touching the premises. Then Walter Hugh Middleton, Cittizen, and Goldsmith of London, borne in Denbigh-shire, with great courage, and resolution, vndertooke to bring a Riuer to the North of London, &c. And then the Cittie conferred vnto him and his heyres, the full right and power of the Act of Parliament, graunted vnto them in that behalfe.

And forthwith the sayd Walter Middleton, with his choyce men of Art, and painefull labourers, sets roundly to this businesse, hauing formerly taken exact Surueay of all Springs and Riuers, in Middlesex, and Hertfordshire that might serue his turne, he made his choyce of Chadwell and Amwell Springs, being two bountifull Spyings, and are described as followeth, by Master Haslall, Vicar of Amwell.

Amwell, a Village in Hartfort shire about twentie miles from London, not to obscure in it selfe (if wee consider eyther aptnesse of the seate, sweetenesse of the ayre, delicacy of the soyle, mixture of pleasant hilles, and fertile valleyes, thicke woods, and seruiceable Riuers, both fully and plentifully enterlaced, all which may yeeld both pleasure and profit to the inhabithants) as by reason that it is ouertopt by feare Townes of note, barring it on either side from the eye of obseruation. (Hartford to the West, Stanstead to the East, Ware to the North, and Hodsdon to the South) hath in these latter times gained both an eminent name, and eternall memorie, by the meritorious and happy aduenture of that man of honourable memory, Hugh Middleton, who like a faithfull and industrious Lapidary, gayning the knowledge of her rich treasures (concealed by long neglect and buried in the bedde of their owne birth) I meane two precious Spyings of liuing water, hath after fiue yeares aduenture (notwithstanding manifolde oppositions and discouragements) by commendable Art, infatigable industrie, and vnlimitted expence brought them from the rockieste walke of their owne woyth, to serue the City of London, the Metropolis of this Kingdome, and wonder of this Welborne world.

Chadwell the remotest of the two Spyings, riseth at the foote of a hill neere vnto Ware, in a meddowe called Chadwell meade (But whether it giues the name to the meddowe, or the meadowe to it, tradition determines not. This spring is not more commendable in respect of the pureness of the water the admirable both in regard of the strangeneslle of her birth issuing out of a hole of an incredible depth, as also in respect of the richnesse of her current, which of her selfe, instantly growes into a riuer of aboue twenty foot in breadth, yet euer heretofore emptied her walled waters into the riuer of Lea, ranning alongst by Ware, vntill now being taught a new course, the runneth along the high way a full mile in length and polyeth her rich spoyles into the bosome of her sister, and so hand in hand comming a long with her to London.

The other spring bubbleth vp in the heart of the Towne of Amwell, at the foote of a double steepy hill, (inferiour to the other for abundance yet superiour to it for the excellency of the water) which heretofore spouting it selfe vpon a playne bed of grauell, was wont wantonly to wash the Pebbles with her christall waters, (not aboue one inch in deepenesse) and so (as carelesse of her owne worth) to bury her pearls in the lappe of Lea: But now being taught to esteeme better of her selfe by him who hath raysed her name to dignitie, hath beene pleased to view her selfe in a faire square poole (at his great charge contrined to that purpose) and there spoutfully to wraste with her sister Chadwell, to try who can outstrippe other in running swiftest to offer their seruice to our mother Cittie, whither they passe a long together in one channell, consisting of about three-score myles in length, in turning and winding to come frō the head to the great Recipient, cut through the byest of the variable earth, vntil at length they happily stoze themselues in a goodly faire Cesterne of an Acre in compasse, from whence they deliuer out their welcom waters.

Master Middleton, began this worke of lasting memory, the twenty of Febyuary, 1608. Thys time after the continuation of her two heads, Chadwell and Amwell, by wonderous paines and industry, hath her passage thyough ground of extreame different quality in some place, Moye and muddy, in other places, extreame hard and rockey, where he was constrained to cut his Trench thirtie foote deepe, and in diuers other low and vncertaine grounds, compelled to adde thereto a second strength by force of Art, and at the end of Enfield great parke, for the length of about a quarter of a mile it is carryed with great Art ouer a valley betweene two high hills thyough an open trough well neere fiue foote wide, and two foote deepe, which trough is suppozted by Arches of wood, fired in the ground: some whereof are foure and twentie foote in heigth. This Riuer runneth thyough diuers parks and Chases, as Chesson Parke, Theobald Parks, Enfield little parke, & Enfield great parke, and crosseth many high wayes, as at Ware ende, Saint Margarets at Worbozne, Hoddesdon, Holloway, King Crosse, and in diuers places at Islington, and so to the new Cesterne, which of former time was an open Idell Poole, commonly called the Ducking pond, being now by the Maior of this great worke, reduced into a comly pleasant shape, and many wayes adorned with buildings, &c. of new Bridges great and small, made to giue particular and generall passage ouer this Riuer, there are about eight hundred, some whereof are of Bricke and Stone, and the rest of Timber: of Workemen in this Businesse, there haue beene 600. imployed at once, and hauing spent much money, endured much despight and derision of the vulgar and ignorant, assuered many causelesse hinderances and complaints of sundry persons, through whose ground he was to cut his water passage, and hauing made deuises to carry land waters, and common Brewers from annoying his riuer, sometime by conueying them ouer his Riuer, and sometimes vnder, hee finished his Riuer to the Cesterne in fiue yeares, and vpon Michaelmas day the last yeare, one thousand six hundred and thirteene, being the first day that this Riuer ranne into that new Cesterne, there came thither with great ioy to behold it, Sir Iohn Swinerton, Lord Maior of London, Sir Thomas Middleton Knight, the Lord Maior elect for the yeare ensuing, brother to this Maister Hugh Middelton, and most of the Aldermen of London, and many of the chiefe Cittizens, besides multitudes of people, and were there entertained with Musique, the chiefe or Maister workemen marching round about in warlike manner. The royall sound of Drum and Trumpets, and with Speeches and Oations. And when the great Sciuse of the Cesterne was lift vp, and the Riuer ran gushing in, they all reioyced, and gaue God praise and thankes for so great a benefit, and as it were with one consent, they wisht the memory thereof might neuer bee forgotten, and went away with great gladnesse.

Since which time vnto this present, all possible diligence hath beene performed, in conueying water from this Cesterne into the Citty, and Suburbs, by pipes of Elme and Lead but for the most part Elme, from which pipes, many high Stretes and Lanes within the Citie are plentifully serued.

M. Sutton his great bounty.

And namely, in the Erecting and founding of a most goodly and royall Hospitall, intituled, the Hospitall of King Iames, founded in Charter-house in the County of Middlesex, at the humble petition, and onely cost and charges of the above named Thomas Sutton Esquire, who endowed the same with aboue three thousand pound of yearely rents.

Master Allen alias Alleyne his bounty.

Edward Allen alias Allein, of Dull-wich Esquire, at this time builded a very faire Hospitall at Dull-wich in Surrey, for six poore men, and six poore women, and for 12. poore Children, from the age of 4. or 6. yeares, to be there kept, maintained, and taught, vntill they come to the age of 14. or 16. yeares: their Schoolemaster to haue his dyet, lodging, and a competent stipend: He intends also to haue a Master to reside in the same Hospitall, whose name shal be Allen or Alleyne, and by that name to bee chosen to that gouernment of his Hospitall for euer, as the place shall grow vacant.

In the meane time thus much deserues thanks and memory, &c.

Greenland discouered by the English.

This yeare 1614. in the moneths of September and October, there returned home the fleete, which in the beginning of the Sommer was set forth, and furnished by the Marchants of the Moscouia Company, towards King Iames his Newland, commonly called Greenland, consisting of 14. Ships and two Pinnaces, employed for the killing of Whales, and further discouery of the North climate.

This worthipfull Company hauing about the yere 1552. first discouered by sea, all the coaste reaching from the North Cape of Norway vnto and through the straights of Vaigars, towards the coast of Cathaya, and established a trade in the dominions of the Emperour of Rufsia, continued to this present with great credite to themselues, and benefit to the common-wealth, obtained for their further encouragement, and towards their excessiue expences, certaine priuiledges, confirmed by act of Parliament, granting to them solely, the vse both of the said trade, and of what places and lands soeuer should afterwards bee found and discouered by them, situate betweene the Northwest and Northeast regions of the earth, within the compasse whereof, they haue since established factories at Saint Nicholas in Rufsia, Cola in Lappia, Pechora, and other places on the coast, and haue pierced within the continent through the Caspian Sea into Persia and Media, and haue certaine yeares past discouered towards the North, the Iland commonly called Cheries Iland, whither they continued their Trade for certaine yeares, for killing of Horses, which is the Sea-horse, or rather the Sea-cowe, the oyle, teeth, and skinnes whereof, haue proued to be of good vse. From which Iland proceeding further they arriued and landed in this vnknowne Iland, which at first was supposed to be a part of the great North Country, called Groniland, but since found to be wholy seperated from it, and imagined to bee the same which Sir Hugh Willoughby discouered, and therefore since called by the name of king Iames his Newland, and by erecting his Maiesties Standards in diuers eminent parts thereof, received as parcell of his Maiesties Dominions.

Here they found the Seas to abound in the Monsters called Whales, for fishing and killing whereof, they procured the yeare following, Biskaines, being expert in that Art, and reladed their Ships with the oyle and finnes of the said Whales, which proued to be very commodious Merchandizes.

The report whereof being spread into our neighboure Countries, of France, Spaine, and Holland, animated them to intrude themselues into the said trade of Whale-fishing, so that the yeare last past there came thither out of these seuerall Nations diuers Shippes: all which to the number of twenty and two sayle, the English Generall M. I. hauing speciall order and authority for the same, with his Fleete of seauen Shippes, did force to depart and returne home, discharging onely some of the Dutch, for their contempt and treachery, of some small quantity of their purchases: whereupon the said Hollanders entruding by force to establish themselues in their said pretended Fishing trade, prepared for this present Sommer a Fleete, consisting of 16. sayle: whereof three Ships of warre of the States, and foure others, and procured a great number of Biskaines to helpe them in their Whale-fishings, of which helpe the English failed this yeare, by reason of suggestions and oppositions made against them both in Fraunce and Spaine, for the former yeares action. All which notwithstanding the said Company for maintenance of his Maiesties prerogatiue, and for defence of their trade and people, set forth to the Sea the aforesaid Fleete, and almost eight hundred men imployed therein, which arriued on that coast before any others, deuided themselues into such seuerall harbours, as the conuenience of their fishing required, and brought the Hollanders, who arriued after them, to conditions, of forbearing any harbour, which the English occupied, and to seeke their trade to the North or South of these parts, which the English vsed, and that for this voyage onely: whereupon our people proceeded in their businesse, and by their owne dexterity and industry without other help, killed fifty and foure Whales, whereof thirty and foure were killed by the Company of the ship Darling, wherein the Generall was: the whole producing about seauen hundred Tunnes of Oyle, and fifty fiue Tunnes of Fins. The Hollanders hauing onely killed twenty and two Whales.

occasion nor purpose is not to speake, but onely of some part, whereof the English, viz. the Londoners and their adherents, haue made plantation: which said country was first discouered in the yeare 1584. as aforesaid, and Queene Elizabeth called it Virginia, and assigned the same vnto Sir Walter Raleigh, as being the chiefe discourer thereof. And in the yeare 1587. there were sent thither aboue an hundred men, women and children, and from that time vntill the third yeare of King Iames, all yearely sending thither for plantation ceased: and then vpon more exact discoueries, there were yearely supplies of men, women and children sent thither with all necessaries, vnder the conduct of Captaine Newport.

And about three yeares after this time, Captaine Samuel Argall discouered a direct passage through the Ocean to Virginia, and not to goe by the West Indies, as they did formerly. Also in the moneth of May the yeare last aboue said, there were sent thither 9. ships with fine hundred men women and children, with all necessary prouision, vnder command of Sir Thomas Gate knight, a graue expert souldier now appointed Lieutenant generall in Virginia, Sir George Somers knight, a man very industrious and forward was now made admirall of Virginia, and Captaine Newport an excellent Na-uigator was made Vice-admirall: with these at this time went other expert Captaines and very resolute gentlemen, these attued at Virginia in the yeare 1609. and likewise at the end of the yeare 1609. there was sent an other supply of 3. ships with 150 men being for the most part artificers, vnder command of the Lord De la Ware, who by free election of the Treasurer and counsell of Virginia, and with the full consent of the generality of that company was constituted and authorized, during his naturall life to bee Lord Gouernor and Captaine Generall of all the English Collonies planted or to be planted in Virginia, according to the tenor of his Maiesties letters patents granted that yeare 1609. vnto that company.
Captaine Argall conducted the Lord De la
Ware by Sea,

The Lord De la Ware being arriued in Virginia ordered all things in the best manner he could, & with his forces marched vp into diuers parts of that country, with full purpose to make further discoueries: built new Townes and forts, and to bring the Saluages vnto his obedience: and sent captaine Argall to the Bermodoes, & to discouer the North parts of Virginia.
The Lord De la Ware shed his best diligence and industrie and therewithall tooke such extraordinary paines that hee fell into extreame sickness, which preuented all his designes, and forced him to goe thence and seeke a bath in the West Indies, but being at Sea, his sickneese so encreased, that he was constrained to beare vp for the Iles of Assoris, where hee recouered some part of his strength, and so from thence hee with Captaine Argall came for England:
the next yeare following Sir George Somers went from Virginia to the Bermodes, to fetch Pork, where he dyed of a surfeit in eating of a pig. Captaine Newport seeing the necessary yearely supplies for this plantation not to proceed as was requisite for so honourable an action: he left the seruice, being chosen one of the 6 masters of the Many royall, and being imployd by the company of the East India Merchants:
he transported Sir Robert Sherley into Persia.

And this yeare 1614. Sir Thomas Gates came from Virginia into England, vsing his best meanes for more supplies to continue their plantation, hauing left behind him not full 400. men of all that were sent thither, ouer whom Sir T. Dale knight, a valiant souldier and discreet gouernour had the full charge and rule.
In this plantation there were builded diuers townes and forts, the first was called Iames towne, builded by Captaine Smith, the 2 other townes were called Henricus & Charles, which the Lord De la Ware builded: At this time their seuerall discoueries vp into the land were no further then to the falls, a place so called, by reason of the fall of waters: of which Captaine Smith, sometime president there made a plaine, and wrote a booke of euery particular place and of all that hapned there.

And amongst other of worthy memory in this plantation, you shall vnderstand that Captaine Gotnoll, a braue souldier and very ingenious, spent much money and aduentured his person, and drew in many others, at the beginning of this plantation. Captaine Argall being an ingenious actiue, forward, young gentleman, amongst other his discoueries and bringing of victuall, from the enemy to the Collony, which at that time was like to haue perished for want of food: hee take a French ship and a pinace which had brought forces to plant within the English limits: hee razed their forts and supplanted them, for their comming was to haue supplanted the English Collony. Hee also the last yeare tooke the daughter of the great Po-howhatan prisoner, who being well entreated became a Christian: and then married Master Iohn Rolfe an English gentleman in Iames towne, by meanes whereof Powhatan discharged and sent home all English prisoners in most kind manner, besides the generall peace which ensued vpon it. Through the singular industrie and policy of Sir Tho. Dale being marshall of Virginia, and principall commander there. And in July this yeare 1614. Captaine Argall brought letters from Sir Tho. Dale and others certifying the Treasurer, and whole company of Virginia, of the present estate of their Collony, and that the English were now become laborious and industrious, & were plenteously stored with food of their owne, and well furnished with good houses in sundry places for their habitation, & most indiciously manifested vnto the company the iust cause of good hope & great profit to ensue in short time by this plantation, if they would speedily and competently supply the Collony, whereupon, there was sent the first weeke of November, this yeare 1614. a ship with 34. men, and 11. women, with apparell and other necessaries, for the reli of the Collony there resident. And thus much at this time, and in this place, touching this Plantation shall suffice, by reason M. Hacklute, Captaine Smith, and others, haue written sundry ample discourses thereof.

The first plantation of the English in New-found-land.

For more then 50. yeares past, the English hauing had recourse to a remote Country, called New found-land, the which was first discouered by Sebastian Gabot, and hath euer since beene yearely frequented by the English in fishing time, as being the most commodious, and best stored place for fishing that is yet knowne, for the great quantity of fish that is there taken, is such as the English transport the same to other Nations, & as this Sea is plenteous with fish, so likewise the land adiacent was found to be fertile, the ayre and clime wholesome, fit for habitation, and so it would proue a great cherishing to the Fishermen, in the time of their yearely fishing, whereupon his Maiesty in the 8.
yeare of his raigne, by his letters Patents vnto the Earle of Northampton, Sir Lawrence Tan-field Knight, Lo. chiefe Baron of the Exchequer, sir John Doderidge Knight, the K. Serieant at Law, sir Francis Bacon knight, the Kings Solicitor generall, sir Daniel Dun sp. of the Arches, with diuers other Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, and Cittizens, whose names are mentioned in the Patent, that they and their successors should be a body corporate, and to be called by the name of Treasurer, and company of Aduenturers, and planters of the Cittie of London and Bristol, for the Collony & plantation of new found land, in the Southerne and Eastern-parts, lying between the degrees of 52.
and 46. by vertue of which Patent, this Company sent Ships, with men, women, and all necessaries thither, and obtained of Iohn Guy a Cittizen of Bristoll, a man very industrious, and of good experience, to be their Generall in this Plantation, who planted a Collony in the Ile of New-found-land, with Englishmen and women, and with them for their vse, and to encrease there: hee also transported Hennes, Duckes, Pigeons, Conies, Goates, kine, and other liue creatures, all which did very well there; this Generall Guy stayd there with the Collony both Winter and Summer, whose natures and conditions in generall agreed well with the soyle and clime, in this Plantation, there were sent none but men of cuill life, and of some honest trade, or profession, by which course they liued and prospered the better, since the date of their Charter, which was the second of May the yeare aboue said, they haue sent yearely supplies thither, vnto this present yeare 1614. Master Iohn Slaney Esquire was the first Treasurer of this Company.

Guyana first discouered.

In the yeare 1595. Sir Walter Raleigh, Knight Captain of her Maiesties Garde, Lieutenant generall of Cornwall, and Lord Warden of the Stannires, went to the seas to discouer the long and rich Kingdomes of Guyana, neere the equinoctiall line, whereto hee was incouraged by the reports of certaine Spanish gentlemen his prisoners, as also by certaine relations printed in the Spanish tongue wherein are set downe the names of diuers noble Spaniards that had formerly attempted the Conquest of that Country but with ill successe.

The whole relation of which enterprise of Sr. Walter Raleigh is written by himselfe, since that time translated almost into all languages, and into Latine copiously by Theodore de Bri, in his three volumes of the Nanigations of latter ages, and therefore I shall not neede to set downe any particular discourse thereof.

This goodly large Country, on the North part is bounded with the Sea, and on the South parts, with the famous River of Amazones, and on the West parts the mountaines of Peru, this pleasant fertile and opulent Country is very lately described, by Robert Harcourt, of Stanton Harcourt Esquire, in a booke of his voyage to Guyana, published the last yeare, one thousand fiue hundred and thir-teene, and this yeare one thousand fiue hundred and fourteene hee was very industrious and forward to plant a Collony of English there, in his booke of the discovery of this Country, hee tells that Captaine Charles Lee, had formerly taken possession of this country at Wyapoco, to the vse of the Kings most excellent Maiestie King Iames.

The North-west passage.

And as touching the discovery of the Northwest passage, there hath bin as great diligence and industry vsed as was possible, by the most skilfull and resolute Navigators of this prege mant age, with promise of good reward to the discoverer: and many braue adventurous spirits haue diuers times attempted it, most whereof in their best opinions, supposed they had plainly discouered a passage through those frozen straights, into the great sea, and consequently a very short cut and speedy passage to the East Indies, &c. as may appeare by sundry Mapps, and as you may read at large in Master Hackluites booke of English voyages.

And for the good effecting of this hard discovery so much desired & endeavoured: It pleased the Kings most excellent Maiestie about two yeres past, to incorporate certaine Knights Gen. and merchants of London, and by letters patents, made them a Society, commonly called the company of Merchants of the North-west passage, since which time they haue sent yerely to make perfect that nice discovery, & by Gods permission they intend to send thither again this next ensuing spring notwithstanding all former expences & difficulties.

The first plantation of the English in the Bermodes, otherwise called the Sommer Ilands.

In the yeare 1609. the aduentrurers and Company of Virginia sent from London, a fleete of eight shippes with people to supplie and make strong the Collonie in Virginia, sir Thomas Gates, being Generall in a shippe of 300. tun in this ship was also sir George Sommers, who was Admirall, and Captaine Newport vice-Admirall, and with them about 160.
persons, this ship was Admirall, and kept com-panie

panie with the reſt of the Fleet to the height of 30 degrees, and being then aſſembled to conſult touching diuers matters, they were ſurpriſed with a moſt extreme violent ſtorme which ſcattered the whole fleet, yet all the reſt of the fleete bent their conſe for Virginia, where by Gods ſpeciall fauour they arriued ſafely, but this great ſhip, though new, and farre ſtronger then any of the reſt, fell into a great leake, ſo as Mariners, and paſſengers were forced for three dayes ſpace, to doe their vtmoſt to ſaue themſelues, from ſudden ſinking: but notwithſtanding their inceſſant pumping, and ſtring out of water by Buckets, and all other meanes, yet the water couered all the goods, within the hold, and all men were vtterly tired, & ſpent in ſtrength, and ouercome with labour, and hopeleſſe of any ſuccour, moſt of them were gone to ſleepe, yeelding themſelues to the mercy of the Sea, being all very deſirous to die vpon any ſhoare, whereſoeuer, Sir George Somers ſitting at the ſtearne, ſaw the ſhip deſperate of reliefe lacking euery minute when the ſhip would ſinke, eſpied land, which according to his, and Captaine Newports opinion, they iudged it ſhould be that dreadfull coaſt of the Bermodes, which Iland were of all Nations, ſaid and ſuppoſed to be inchanted and inhabited with witches, and deuills, which grew by reaſon of accuſtomed monſtrous Thunder, ſtorme, and tempeſt, were vnto thoſe Ilandes, alſo for that the whole coaſt is ſo wonderous dangerous, of Rockes, that few can approach them, but with vnſpeakeable hazard of ſhipwrack. Sir George Somers, Sir Thomas Gates, Captaine Newport, and the reſt, ſuddenly agreed of two euills to chuſe the leaſt, and ſo in a kind of deſperate reſolution, reared the ſhippe mainely for theſe Ilandes, which by Gods diuine prouidence, at a high water ranne right betweene two ſtrong Rockes, where it ſtuck faſt without breaking, which gaue leaſure, and good opportunitie for them to hoyſe out their boat, and to land all their people as well Saylors, as ſouldiers, and others in good ſafety, and being come a ſhoare, they were ſome refreſhed, and cheered the ſoyle and aire being moſt ſweet and delicate: the ſalt Water did eat ſtyple to moſt of the ſhips lading and vnſtuall yet ſome meale was well recouered, with many particular things for their common vſe, and they all humbly thanked God for his great mercy in ſo preſeruing them from deſtruction.

It theſe Ilands the Sea doth not ebbe and flow full foure foot.

Then preſently, they ſought farther into the Iland for foode, which being neuer yet inhabited by any people, was ouergrowne with woods, and the woods replenished with wilde ſwine, which Swine as it is very probable ſwom thither, out of ſome ſhippewracke, they found alſo great multitude of fowle of ſundry kinds, being then in a manner very tame, they found ſome fruit, as mulberies, peares, and palmytoes, with ſtately Ceader Trees, and in the Sea, and in the Rockes, great plenty of moſt pleaſant and wholſome fiſh.

Here of neceſſity they were conſtrayned to ſtay almoſt tenne Moneths, in which ſpace by the ſpeciall mercy, and diuine prouidence of almighty God, to make good the diſcouery of the Ilands vnto them, that they by diligence and induſtry, ſaued ſo much of the timber, tackling and other things out of their great ſhippe which lay wracke, and ſtuck faſt betweene two Rockes, as therewithall, and with ſuch ſupply of fiſhe as they found in thoſe Ilands, they builded their two veſſels, the leſſer whereof is ſome as it was finiſhed, it was manned, and ſent to goe to the Colony in Virginia, to ſignifie vnto them how all things had hapned with their commanders, and their company, and that they would ſhortly ſet ſayle for Virginia, and when the bigger veſſell, was finiſhed, and victualled with ſwines fleſh, and with what elſe that place would afford them, theſe Commanders, with all their company imbarked themſelues, and by Gods great mercy, arriued ſafely at Virginia, when all Engliſhmen deemed them to be vtterly caſt away.

When theſe three worthy Commanders, had ſetled the Colony, then Sir George Somers returned againe to the Bermodies, where he died of a ſurfeit, viz. eating Porke: his ſhip returned, hauing left three men there to keepe poſſeſſion of thoſe Ilands.

Theſe Ilands are within the limits of Virginia, and the company finding land enough to plant vpon the maine in Virginia, ſold theſe Ilands of the Bermodies vnto 120. perſons of the ſame company, who ſince that time they obtayned a Charter and ſo they now hold thoſe Ilands from his Maieſtie. And in April 1612. the ſaid new company ſent thither a ſhip with 60 perſons, who arriued and remayned there very ſafely.

And when the ſaid new company was truely informed of the wholeſomneſſe of the Aire, and pleaſantneſſe of the ſoyle, and the aptneſſe thereof, of it ſelfe in all reſpects to maintaine a Colony, the ground being ſo fertile that it will yeild two harueſts in one yeare: great plentie of woods and lofty Ceaders: well ſtoyed with Fowle, and great plenty of good fiſh: and that beſides the fertilitie of the ſoyle, which they had tryed, would beare with great encreaſe, all kind of Engliſh graine, fruits, trees, hearbes, and vines, beſides the great hope of Amber-greece, and ſome pearle, which is found there; they ſent yearely ſupplies thither of men, and ſome women, with all things neceſſary for ſo worthy a plantation, ſo as at this time there are ſix hundred perſons well fortified, with plenty of great ordnance, beeing now very well able to reſiſt a proud daring Aduerſary, by reaſon there are but two Inlets, and they both ſo narrow, as but one ſhip can come at once into the harbour and the Ilands are inuironed with Rockes inacceſſable, and within there is a moſt excellent harbour, for a Navie of great ships.

The Bermudes are about 500 leagues from Virginia.

The great Iland is diuided into eight Cantons, or Tribes, bearing the name of eight of the chiefe Planters. viz. the Earle of Northamptons Tribe, the Earle of Pembrookes Tribe, the Lord Paget, the Lord Cauendiſh, the Lord Harrington, Sir Thomas Smith, Sir Robert Mawſel, and Sir Edwin Sands Tribe, ſome of the leſſer Iſles are one mile, and ſome two and three miles of groumd, in which if they digge, they find good freſh water. The companie hath by this time ſpent twenty thouſand pound in this plantation and purchaſe. The company named theſe Ilands, by the name of the Sommer Ilands: they lie in thirty two degrees of the North latitude: Richard Moore was ſent thither as deputy gouernor there for the company, Sir Thomas Smith Knight, was then gouernor, and Maſter William Caning the deputie Gouernor of this company.

Lord

Theſe Ilands for diuers yeeres were of many ſuppoſed, and reported to be fleeting and ſhifting Ilands: and at certaine ſeaſons in the yeare, with ſtrong winds and tempeſts, they floated and removed from one place to another, which fooliſh opinion began, by reaſon that diuers ſhips in ſundry voyages by ſeuerall chances, being by tempeſt driuen vpon the danger of the rocks of thoſe Ilands and frighted with terrible long thunder, lightning, and fierce rayne, which happened at their then being, diuers of which Maſters, and Saylers, certaine yeeres after being ſent of purpoſe to make a diſcouery of thoſe Iſles, but could not find them, and being returned, they ſayd they were removed, or elſe they would haue found them, &c.

Amongſt the manifold tokens and ſignes of the infinite bleſſings of Almighty God beſtowed vpon this Kingdome, by the wonderous, and merciefull eſtablishing of peace within ourſelues, and the full benefite of conioyd with all Chriſtian nations, and others: of all which graces let no man dare to preſume bee can ſpeake too much, whereof in truth there can neuer be enough ſayd: neither was there euer any people leſſe conſiderate, or leſſe thankefull then at this time, being not willing to endure the memory of their preſent happineſſe, as well in the vniuerſall encreaſe of Commerce, and traffique throughout the Kingdome, great building of royall ſhips, by priuate merchants, the repeopling of Cities, Townes, and Villages, beſides the vndiſcernable, and ſudden encreaſe of fayre and coſtly buildings, as well within the City of London, as in the ſuburbes thereof: eſpecially within theſe twelue yeeres for pregnant witneſſe whereof, I referre all that are preſent, vnto the vnimagined, and vnthought-of buildings at this day, ſcarcely finiſhed betweene Saint Katherines and Radcliffe with the reſt there adiacent, and vnto the new buildings on the Weſt end of the City, namely the two new ſtreets neere Charing Croſſe, and the Strand, aunciently called Saint Martines lane, and Drury lane, and the innumerable new buildings there adiacent, beſides the world of new buildings at the weſt, and South parts of Weſtminſter, &c. And therewithall, the ſudden encreaſe, and new building of fayre and ſtately pallaces in euery Village. And in all Townes Corpoate within twenty mile compaſſe of the City, as alſo the plantation of Engliſh in Ireland, Virginia, and new found Land, in the Bermodes, and new England, and diuers other Ilands, the diſcouery of the Northweſt paſſage, and the making of new riuers, namely that which is brought to the Northpart of London, of all which, due mention is made in their proper places, beſides the generall repaire of Parith Churches, the amending of ſtreetes, by taking away ſundry the cauſeys, reforming high-wayes, & throughfayres in city, and Countrey, within this laſt ſeauen yeeres, more then in fifty yeeres before, as alſo the plenteous encreaſe of orchards, and gardens, more then in all former times. And laſtly whereof there is a more generall, and particular notice taken by all perſons, reſorting, and reſiding in London, the new and pleaſant walkes on the Northſide of the City, anciently called Moſefield which field (vntill the third yeere of King Iames) was a moſt noyſome and offenſiue place, being a generall laykall, and often moſth ground, whereof it firſt tooke the name. This field for many yeares was enuironed, and croſſed with deep ſtanking ditches, and noyſome common ſhewers, and was of former times euer held impoſſible to be reformed, eſpecially to bee reduced to any part of that fayre, ſweete, and pleaſant condition, as now it is. And likewiſe the two other fields adioyning, which vntill the late time aforeſayd, were infectious, and very grieuous vnto the City, and all paſſengers, who by all meanes endeauoured to ſhun thoſe fields, being loathſome both to ſight and ſent: yet neuertheleſſe vpon the good opportunitie of ſweete peace, whereof theſe three fields, will euer remaine a perfect teſtimony, the firſt of which is, that fayre ſquare, next the City wall, was greatly further-ed, by Sir Leonard Holliday, in the time of his Maioralty, and through the great paynes, and induſtry of maſter Nicholas Leate, reduced from the former vile condition, vnto moſt faire, and royall walkes as now they are, which worke whileſt it was in doing, being very difficult, the people ſpake very bitterly, and rudely againſt thoſe two worthy men, and their good endeauours therein, and in deriſion ſayd it is a holiday worke. All which they patiently endured, and perſiſted, but when the multitude ſaw this worke brought vnto deſired effect, then their vnconſtant mindes changed: and applauded the effect; vnto this worke there were diuers Citizens deſirous to put to their helping hands: amongſt which there was none like to maſter Nicholas Leate, a very graue, wiſe, and well affected Citizen: who tooke very great paines, in the beginning, and finiſhing the firſt field called Moſefield, and diſburſed diuers ſummes of money, as well for mending the high way, as for reducing the two other outward fields, into that comely ſhape, and pleaſant manner as now they are, as well in making the walks, as planting the trees, without whoſe eſpeciall ayde this worthy worke had neuer bin accomplyſhed. He purpoſeth to make the vtmoſt walke, the fayreſt of all the three walkes: all which was done at the generall charge of the Citizens of London, and other

Sir Thomas Roe sent Ambassadour to the great Maghoore.

Toward the end of this present yeare 1614. viz. in the beginning of January, his Maiesty at the request of the East India Company, sent Sir Thomas Roe Knight Ambassadour to the great Maghoore, whom some corruptly call Mogall, a mighty Prince of Asia, hauing all the maine land betweene the famous River, Indus, and Ganges, and the Dominions of Porus, subdued by Alexander the great, he is a mighty, opulent, and ciuill Prince, and is the ninth in descent from the Scithian Tamberlayne, vnto whom this Ambassadour had Commission to make, and contract a league betweene his Maiestie, and his Subiects, for commerce, and Traffique in his Dominions, and to procure and establish a factory for our Nation in sundry parts of his Dominions, as well Sea-ports, as Inland Townes, with other instructions, yet vndiscouered, hee is the first that euer was imployed in this high nature, to any of those so farre remote Eastерne Princes.

In this expedition, there were sent out foure great Ships well furnished, like Ships of so honourable a Company, for defence, and Trade: ouer which Captaine Kelling went Admirall, and Generall, for the said Company, with commission for the charge, and service committed vnto him.

The fore-named worthy young Knight, and right valiant Gentleman, in the yeare 1609. at his, and his friends charge, builded a Ship, and a Pinace, for the discouery of Guyana, hee set sayle from Plimmouth the 24. of Febru. and in the end of Aprill, fell with the great River of the Amazons, which is vnder the Equinoctiall line, and is in breadth at the entrance there of, 100. and 50. miles fresh water, and full of Islands, which River hee first discouered, and entred with his Shippe 200. miles, and then with Boates 100. more, and made diuers incurseyons into the maine among the Indians being well inhabited, and full of good commodities, though not so plentifull as it might be, by reason the natiues prouide no more then for their necessity, from thence he came along the coast into diuers Riuers, and entred the Country by Indian Boates, and went ouer the Chatozants and hills, passed ouer thirty two falles in the River of Wia Poco, from whence hee descended, hauing with great labour and perill, spent 13. moneths in this discouery, viz. from the riuer of Amozones, to the riuer of Oronoque, at the end whereof, not finding all the West Indies to be full of Gold, as some suppose, hee returned by Trenydado, and the Westerne Ilands, and arriued at the Wight, in July, one thousand six hundred and eleuen: and thus much in honour of his forwardnesse, paines, and industry. I thought fit to mention, though not in his proper place, lest vertue should bee forgotten, and others reape the honour of his labours, since which time hee hath twice sent thither to make further discoueries, and maintained 20. men in the River of Amozones, for the good of his Countrey, who are yet remaining there, and supplied.

Monday the 23. of Aprill 1615. George Villiers Esquire, was sworn Gentleman of the Kings Bedchamber, and the next day hee was Knighted.

George

The 29. of June, the Lord Hay was created Baron of Sawley: and about three yeares after he was made Viscount of Doncaster.

Lord

Friday the last of June, Sir Robert Dormer Knight and Baronet, was created Lord Dormer of Wyng.

Dormer.

The King in the second yeare of his Paleftes raigne, vpon good aduice, for preseruation of Timber, preuention of all further excessiue encrease of Buildings in London and the Suburbs, and for the reducing of all their Buildings into a more safe, comely, and vniforme Building, Proclamation was then made, streightly commanding, that from that time forward all their fore-fronts of all their new Buildings, should bee made either of Brick or Stone but neither that, nor diuers other Proclamations wholly to that purpose prenailes: whereupon diuers were censured in the Starchamber: and yet many still persisted contrary to all the Kings Proclamations, which were made from time to time, euen vnto this present, in which was mentioned the tenour of all the former Proclamations, and commanded all Commissioners to proceede with all strictnesse vpon all such wilfull offenders: and from this time began the new reformation of Building: and the first house of note was Collonell Cecills house in the Strand, and after that a house neere Drapers Hall toward Broadstreet, and after that a Goldsmithes house in Cheapside, ouer against Sadlers Hall: and a Leather sellers house in Paules Churchyard neere the North gate, ye was compelled thereunto after his house was set vp being all of Timber.

Proclamation against building in London.

Such was the great encrease of Roagues and Vagabonds, in London and Middlesex, that Bridewell could not containe them, nor implay them, nor willingly receiue any from the Iustices out of the County of Middlesex, because they held it contrary to the Charter of London, and the foundation of Bridewell, whereupon the Iustices of Middlesex by licence from his Maiestie, builded a house of Correction, for the County of Middlesex, neere vnto the East end of Clarkenwell Church, for the punishment and imployment of sturdy Roagues and Vagabonds of the County of Middlesex, and for the furtherance of the said house; the Citty of London gaue vnto it fiue hundred pounds in money, to make a stock, for the employment of their Poore, and the Iustices ordained two Maisters and a Matron to gouerne the house: This was done this yeare 1615.

A new house of Correction for the County of Middlesex.

And this Sommer 1615. the Citty of London reduced the rude vast place of Smithfield, into a faire and comely order, which formerly was neuer held possible to be done, and paued it all ouer, and made diuers shewers to conuay the water, from the new Channells which were made by reason of the new Pauement: they also made strong rayles round about Smithfield, and sequestred the middle part of the said Smithfield, into a very faire and cimill Walke, and rayled it round about with strong Rayles, to defend the place from annoyance and danger, as well from Carts, as all manner of Cattell, because it was intended hereafter, that in time it might proue a faire and peaceable Market-place, by reason that Newgate Market, Cheapside, Leaden-hall, and Gracechurch street, were unmeasurably pestred, with the unmaginable increase, and multiplicity of Market-folkes, as well by Carts as otherwise, to the great vexation of all the Inhabitants, annoyance of the streete, trouble, and danger to all passengers, as well Coaches, Carts, & Horses, as otherwise: so as the Magistrates of the Citty, for diuers late yeares, tooke great care, and deuice, how to make some new conuenient Market-place, for the generall ease of the Citty, and to auoyde danger and offence to all passengers: and at this time the Cittizens began their new Pauement of broad free stone, close to their Shops: and the taking down of all high Causies about London, namely, in the Strand, in Holborne, Saint Johns streete, Barbican, Redcrosse streete, Whitecrosse streete, without Bishops gate, and Aldgate, and at the Hynoones, and other places.

The first paning of London streetes with broad Free stone.

And the generall taking downe of all high Causies

And concerning Smithfield, why it was so called, I read not, though some imagine it to be anciently the habitation of black Smithes and Farriers, for the generall seruice of the Citty: which opinion is easily refelled, by reason there were alwayes many Smiths in all the parts of London yea euen in the North side of Cheapside, betweene the Standard & the Crosse there was a Smiths Forge within this 80. yeares; neither is it yet full threescore yeares past, since a great part of Cheapside was vnpaued: and likewise the South Churchyard of Paules, anciently called the Close: And lest in time to come some capticus Cockbraines should either deme this to be true, or not worthy the Chronicling: you shall vnderstand, that the Citie of Paris in France, was not paued vntill the yeare 1186. nor the Citie of Lubeck in Germany in many yeares after, as appeares by their seuerall Chronicles.

This field commonly called Well-Smithfield, was for many yeares called Ruthans field, by reason it was the vsuall place of Fraye and common fighting, during the time that Sword and Bucklers were in vse.

Ruthans hall.

Sword and Buckler in great vse.

When euery Seruingman, from the base to the best, carried a Buckler at his backe, which hung by the hilt or pomell of his Sword which hung before him.

This manner of Fight was frequent with all men, vntill the fight of Rapier and Dagger tooke place and then suddenly the generall quarrell of fighting abated, which began about the 20. yeare of Queene Elizabeth, for vntill then it was vsuall to haue Frayes, Fights, and Quarrells, vpon the Sundayes and Holidayes, sometimes twenty, thirty, and forty Swords and Bucklers, halfe against halfe, as well by quarrells of appointment as by chance.

Especially from the midst of Aprill, vntill the end of October, by reason, Smithfield was then free from durte, and plashes. And in the Winter season, all the high Streetes, were much annoyed and troubled with heurely frayes, of Sword and buckler men, who take pleasure in that bragging fight; and although, they made great shew of much furie, and fought often, yet seldome any man hurt, for the thing was not then in vse: neither would one of twentie strike beneath the waste, by reason they held it cowardly and beastly. But the ensuing deadly fight of Rapier and Dagger, suddenly suppressed the fighting with Sword and Buckler.

Such hath beene the plenty of wood in England for all vses, that within mans memory, it was held impossible to haue any want of wood in England; But contrary to former imaginations, such hath beene the great expence of timber for Nauigation; with infinite increase of building of houses, with the great expence of wood to make houshould furniture, caskes and other vessels not to be numbred, and of Carts, Wagons, and Coaches besides the extreame waste of wood in making Iron, burning of brick and tile: That whereas in the yeare of our Lord God 1306. King Edward the first by proclamation prohibited the burning of Sea coale, in London, and the Suburbs, to auoid the sulferous smoke and fauour of that firing; and in the same proclamation commanded all persons to make thei fires of wood, which was performed by all, (Smiths only excepted) yet at this present through the great consuming of wood as aforesaid, and the neglect of planting of woods, there is so great scarcitie of wood through out the whole kingdome, that not only the Citie of London, all hauen townes and in very many parts within the Land the inhabitants in generall are constrained to make their fiers of Sea coale or pit coale; euen in the Chambers of honourable personages, and through necessitie which is the mother of all arts, they haue of very late yeares deuised the making of Iron, the making of all sorts of glasse and burning of bricke with Sea coale or pit coale. It is more then fourescore yeares, since that any Lord Maior kept Court at Graueseend and Lee, for as the auncient custome of the Lord Maior was almost forgotten, concerning the visitation of the bounds of the River Eastward within 30. yeares last the riuer of London would not come into any house of diuers when the coales were burned, nor willingly out of the great that vses either for rosted with sea coale fire.

Ambassadors from Russia.

Tuesday the fourth of November here arrived Stephen Euanowich, Lieutenant of Rosco, and Marke Euanozin Poddeoi, one of the three Chancellors of Russia, from the late mentioned Michaell Theodorowich, Emperor of Russia, they had audience the next Sunday, and vpon New yeares day the King feasted them, and their chiefe followers & attendants at Whitehall, being fifty in number, their whole traine was seauenty fiue, with this Ambassador, and in the moneth of November abouesayd, Sir Iohn Merrick Knight, returned into England, who as you may reade, was sent Ambassadour into Russia, in the yeere 1614. by his Maiestie, to mediate a peace betweene the Emperor of Russia, and the King of Sweden, which with great difficultie he performed, the manner whereof here followeth.

The King sendeth a Speciall Ambassador to make peace between the Emperor of Russia and the King of Sweden.

The kings Maiesties of Great Britaine, his Ambassador Sir Iohn Merricke, came to Moſco, the twenty one of December, 1614. was very honorably met and receiued into the Citie by the Nobilitie, Gentry, and others, and so conducted to his appointed Lodgings, within the Citie: The third day after, hee had audience with the Emperor, deliuered his Letters from his Maiestie of Great Britaine; wherein was fully expressed the Emperors request; by his late Ambassadour vnto the Kings Maiesty, he had now giuen full power and Commission vnto Sir Iohn Merricke Knight, to Arbitrate, vnder, and compound, all quarrells and controuersies, as well touching Iustitia, as otherwise, betweene the Emperor and the King of Sweden: According to which Commission and with speciall good liking of both these diuided Princes; The sayd Sir Iohn Merricke went from Moſco towards the King of Sweden, the 22. of March, and by reason it was the breaking vp of the Riuers, the waters high, was forced in diuers places to stay vpon the way, so that it was the 11. of July 1615. before he came to Narue, where he found the King of Sweden, Gustauus Adolphus there, with a prepared Army of about twelue thousand soulders of diuers Nations, with full purpose to beſiege the City of Pleſco, alias Vobleo, and to inuade Russia.

The English Ambassadour before his entry into the City of Narue, was conducted through the whole Army, and had an honourable warlike entertainment, and the second day after, had audience with the King, and agreed for Commissioners to be sent, and place appointed for the Treaty, and the English Ambassadour according to his Commission, to end the difference betweene both Princes. But there was a long time spent in priuate contending, about the titles of the Princes, and the Commissioners, and of their precedence, and place of meetings setting the Seats, and who should first begin the speech, with many other vnimaginable differences, before they could proceed to the maine businesse, all which in the end was reconciled, in the name of his Maiestie of Great Britaine by his Ambassadour. The second of Ianuary, began the first Treaty, which continued till the end of February the same yeere 1615. but the difference betweene them was so great, that at those meetings could nothing bee done: Whereupon the Ambassadour tooke a truce betweene them for three monethes, in which time the English Ambassadour with the Russian Commissioners, repaired to the Moſco, and there continued till May following, who had diuers times accesse to the Emperor, and conferences with his Councell about those businesses, & was earnestly by the Emperor intreated againe to repaire vnto the second Treatie, in hope of ahappy issue: About the 21. of May, the Ambassador tooke his Journey from the Moſco, but it was the 21. of December, 1616. before he could bring both the Commissioners to meet together at the appointed place, called Stolb, where the Ambassador was lodged, before which time, the English Ambassador was with the Sweden Commissioners at Lodiga, twenty miles from Stolba, who with them made an agreement of all the maine points, onely left diuers Ceremonies, which the Ambassador could not end without the Russian Commissioners, was referred til both their meetings, and after many meetings, conferences, and vnparlances, in the end his Maiesties Ambassadour with much difficultie, deuised, ratified, and confirmed, a perpetuall peace: the particulars of all which apparently more at large, by a contract firmed, sealed, and oathes taken on both sides, by the Commissioners: as also the English Ambassadour was intreated as witnesse, to firme, and put his seale to the sayd Contract; to all which conditions and like Contract it was agreed, the Princes themselues should confirme, by hand, seale, and oath, which accordingly since is performed. Thus this happy peace, not without great difficultie, labour, and paines of the English Ambassador, was concluded and finally ended the 27. of February 1616. in Stolbe, through the onely and sole mediation, and authority of the Kings Maiestie of Great Britaine. to his euerlasting honour, the great content of both the Princes, and much reioycing of their Subiects, who acknowledged his Maiestie to be the onely meanes of the auoyding the effusion of much Christian blood, which would otherwise haue ensued: which no lesse hath beene acknowledged by the Princes themselues, by their Ambassadors sent of purpose vnto his Maiestie, and a token of thankefulnesse from the Emperour of Russia, of a large present, sent vnto his Maiestie, deliuered by his said Ambassador.

The last Article of the Contract betweene the Commissioners of both Princes followeth.

AND for more ample and firme assurance, that all the premises of this Contract, bee concluded and agreed betweene vs the Commissioners of their said Royall and Princely Maiestie, fully authorized in the presents, and by the mediation of the Ambassadour of his Royall Maiestie of Great Britaine, often before mentioned, and shall by our great Lord Gustauus Adolphus, King of Sweden, and his Royall Maiesties heires and successours Kings of Sweden, be faithfully, firmely, and inuiolably holden and obserued, in all the points and clauses thereof, without craft or guile. And so we the Ambassadour of our great Lord Gustauus Adolphus King of Sweden, fully authorized Iacobus Delagardy, Earle of Lexe, &c. and one of the Kings Priuy Counsell, and Henry Horne Lord of Rancks and Wonden, &c. likewise Counsellour to his Maiestie, and Aruey Tonnison Lord of Tuisbury, &c. and Mous Martinsin the Kings Secretary, haue established and confirmed this Contract of peace, with our Oathes vpon the holy Gospell, and by vertue of the Authority which wee haue on this behalfe, haue subscribed it with our owne hands, and sealed it with our Signets, and hauing louingly desired and entreated his Royall Maiestie of great Britaine, his Ambassadour fully authorized the Noble and Worthy Sir Iohn Merricke Knight, that he on the behalfe of his Royall Maiestie of Great Britaine as Mediatour, will together with vs subscribe and seale these presents, in witnesse of all that is here agreed. And wee the Commissioners of his Royall Maiestie of Sweden, haue deliuered this Instrument of our present Contract vnto the Ambassadour of his Princely Maiestie of Russia. Yeouen at Stolba the 27. of February 1617.

The like Article word for word is in the Russian Contract, firmed and sealed by them to the Swedens Commissioners.

ahyn Chaws, attended with twelue persons, from the great Turke, viz. Sultan Osman the first, he had audience vpon Tuesday the third of Nouember.

Sir Walter Rawleigh released.

About two yeres past, Sir Walter Rawleigh obtained his liberty, and was discharged out of the Tower, and within a while after, he builded a goodly Shippe of warre, for a voyage to Guyana, to gaine possession of a rich mine, which himselfe and one Captain Keymish had formerly discouered by the information of the Indians inhabitants in that Country, and for the further prosecution of this voyage, diuers Knights and Gentlemen of qualitie, furnished diuers shippes, and went in consort with him. And whereas it was by them generally intended to haue bin at Guyana, in the moneth of April, they lingred so long that it was August before they set sayle cleare from the Coast of England, by which tract of time, all Christian Nations vnderstood the purpose of his voyage, and being come to Guyana, could make no manner of discovery of any mine, but found many new fortifications, which were not formerly: And there they assaulted the new Citie of Saint Thome, and at the taking thereof, his sonne Walter Walter Rawleigh was slaine, and hauing sackt the Cittie, and taken the full spoile thereof, they burnt it, and foure Churches in it. Then Sir Walter Rawleigh with his Shippe returned for England, against whom the Spanish Ambassador had made diuers complaints of damages, slaughters and spoyles, done against the King of Spaine and his people: Whereupon Sir Walter Rawleigh was againe committed to the Tower, for he neuer had his pardon for his former Treason. And from thence he was carried to the Gatehouse, and the next morning about eight a clocke, hee was brought vpon a Scaffold in the Parliament yard, where for more then an houres space, he made sundry speeches, as Apologies to sundry imputations formerly layd vpon him, and about nine of the clocke his head was stucke off. Wednesday the 18. of Nouember, a blazing Starre begon to be seene in the South-east about fiue a clocke in the morning, the flame or streame thereof, enclined towards the West.

A blazing starre.

Doctor Bembridge the worthy Mathematician of Oxford, in his booke to the King saith thus.

Doctor Bembridge touching the Comet.

The motion of the Comet from my first obseruation was on Wednesday morning the 18. of Nouember, 1618. to Wednesday the 16. of December, the which whirled about the earth, euery 24. houres, and declined twelue degrees toward the South, making his diurnall gyre ouer that terrestriall circle, wherein lye New Guinea, the Iles, Timor and Iaua, in the East, the North part of Saint Laurence, Mozambique in Affrica, the middle of Brazil, and Peru in the West. About the 22. of Nouember, it entred the Æquinoctiall, plaine ouer the Molucas, Malaca, Sumatra, Abassia, Saint Thomas, Guyana, euery day ascending higher towards our Pole Arctick, about the 27. entring the Tropick of Cancer, afterward pulling ouer all the Regions of the earth, euen ouer the vtmost limits of the Brittish Empire.

About the 11. of December, his declination was 81. degrees and a halfe, and therefore passed ouer London in the morning, and so hasted more Northwards, euen as farre as the Orcades.

I may not forget that the Comet, in the latter part of his period, was North-west after Sunset, which gaue occasion to some, not skilfull in Astronomie, to affirme a second Comet. But from the beginning I fogetold (which was no great matter to do) that if the Comet continued a while: it would aduance neere to the tayle of Vrsa Maior, and be seene in the morning after the Sun. The ascending length of it was 45. degrees and namely the first of December, ouershaddowing the left hinder knee of Vrsa Maior.

Hee sayd that this Comet, was as farre aboue the Moone, as the Moone is from the earth, and that the Comets distance from the earth, was not lesse then 2300000. English myles, whereas the Moone (when shee is nearest) is little more then 200900.

The Irradiation of this Comets streame, (though in the end it seemed very short) was sometime extended to a wonderfull length, more then 2000000 which is nothing to the Sunns etamulation of his beames vpon the earth, more then 6900000 myles.

The

The Comets bignesse.

The Comets bulke, was at least 3. of the whole earth, and not fully twise greater then the Moone, viz. the Comet compared to the Moone, was scarce 1. to 8000. so littles this great Comet in respect of the glorious Lamp, and yet the Starre but a point to the Imminese Spheare of fixed Starres and all this lesse then nothing in comparison of that infinite circle Cuius centrum est vbique circumferentia nusquam. The Center of whose presence, and perfection, is euery where and his limits no where.

But whatsoeuer was the materiall of this Comet, howsoeuer compact and dissolued, I am enforced in conclusion, to lye prostrate at the Almighties seate, in the Globositie: thereof, to admire his wisedome in the motion, and adore his goodnesse in the present apparition.

Whatsoeuer cunll this new Comet may presage the same he to them that hate vs, and the interpretation thereof to our enemies: But whatsoeuer good it can promise, the God of heauen (who there placed it) conforme them all to his Royall Maiestie, and great Britaines Monarchie. Amen.

Since which time, euen from the next yere after, there began great warres in Germany, betweene the Emperour and some Germane Princes, and the Prince of Transiluania, betweene the King of Denmark and the Emperor, betweene the Swethard and the King of Polonia, betweene the Turke, and the King of Poland, where it pleased Almighty God, to giue the Polonians a great victory vpon the Turke, which caused the Turke to make League with the King of Polone, the French King made a long fierce and terrible warre vpon the Citie of Rochell, diuers yeeres, which at length, through extreame famine and misery, yeelded vnto the King. The Emperour made sharpe warres in Italy, and wonne diuers and assisted diuers other Prouinces, The French King taking part with Mantua, tooke Sauoy, and made great spoyle therein, the young King of Swetland with a great Army, stoutly inuaded the Empire, there followed also in diuers other places sundry attempts, battels, and assaults, in sundry other Prouinces, and Territories, euen to the day of the publication of this Chronicle 1631.

Verses made vpon the Death of King IAMES.

All who have eyes awake and weepe,
He whose waking wrought our sleepe,
Is faine asleepe himselfe, and neuer
Shall wake againe, till wak't for euer:
Death's Iron hand hath clos'd those eyes,
Which were at once three Kingdomes spies;
Both to foresee, and to prevent
Daungers, as soone as they were ment:
That head whose working braine alone,
Wrought all mens quiet, but it's owne,
Now lyes at rest; O let let him have,
The Peace he lent vs in his grave:
If no Naboth all his Raigne,
Was for his fruitfull Vineyard slaine;
If no Vriah, lost his life,
Because he had too faire a wife;
Then let no Shemies curses wound,
His honour, or prophane his grownd;
Let no black-mouth, Ranck-breath Carre, Peacefull Iames, his Ashes stirre:
Princes are Gods; O doe not then,
Rake in their graves to prove them men;
For two and twenty yeares long care,
For providing such an heire;
Who to the Peace, we had before,
May adde twise two and twenty more:
For his dayes travailes, and night watches,
For his Craz'd sleepe stolne by snatches:
For two faire Kingdomes ioyn'd in one,
For all he did, or meant t'have done:
Doe this for him, write on his dust,
Iames the Peacefull, and the Iust.

THE King Iames his Bounty.

The Kings bounty.

THe King at his first comming, made Iames Montague Doctor of Diuinity, Deane of his Highnesse Chappell, which Deanry stood voyd full eight yeares.

The King enlarged the yearely Fee of the Gentlemen of his said Chappell, being thirty three in number, from thirty pound a yeare, vnto forty pound a yeare vnto euery of them.

And in the same manner, hee enlarged the yearely fees of the Sergeants of the Vestrie, and added 4. pence a day vnto the two Yeomen and Groomes of the Vestry.

The King also enlarged the Auncient allowance of six pence a day for euery childe, vnto the Master of the children of his Chappell, vnto tenne pence a day for euery of them, being 12. in number.

The King enlarged the Pension of his Almes Knights, alias poore-Knights in Windsor, being thirteene in number, from 12. pence a day, vnto two shillings a day.

The Auncient office of the Ceremonies, hauing of long time beene voyd and almost forgotten. The King made Sir Lewes Lewkenor Master of the Ceremonies, allowing thereunto all auncient fees.

And whereas for the space of one hundred yeares past, there were but foure Iudges in euery of the three right honourable Courts of Law, that is to say, the Kings Bench, the Common-pleas, and the Exchequer; by reason whereof, and for want of a fifth voyce, when the Iudges were deuided into equall opinions, and therefore could neither decide, nor determine many deepe and difficult matters, wherewith they were often troubled, but onely by a greater meeting of Iudges in the Checquer chamber. Vpon hope of remedy, whereof and for the good of all honest Subiects, his Maiesty re-established a fift Iudge, in euery of the said Courts, viz. Sergeant Williams in the Kings Bench, Sergeant Daniell in the Common-pleas, and Sergeant Snigge in the Exchequor: yet notwithstanding so long vacancie, Master Brewster shewed me the Records, wherein I found, that in the time of Edward the second, there were six Iudges in the honorable Court of Common-pleas: in the first yeare of Edward the fourth, there were seauen Iudges, viz. Iohn Pryset, Nicholas Ashton, Peter Ardern, Robert Danners, Robert Danby, William Moile, and Iohn Needeham: and in the first yeare of Henry the seuenth, there were but fiue, and after that but foure, vntill the comming of our Soueraigne Lord King Iames. Master Ployden in his Commentaries reporteth, that my Lord Cattlin, arguing in Stowells case, reciteth many Fines of Antiquity, whereof some touching the possession of the Abbot of Crowland before the Conquest. It is also to be proued by Records in the Tower: that the Conqueror himselfe tooke acknowledgement of fines, and caused the English Lawes to be written in the Norman tongue, thereby to draw his owne people to the conformity of the auncient English Lawes, which hevpon experience preferred before all other, whereupon it may very well bee gathered, and vnderstood that the common Lawes of England now in vse, were auncient before the comming of William the Conquerour, and not brought in by him, as some affirme.

Antiquity of the common Lawes of England.

And whereas the auncient number of the Guard was but seauen score, his Maiestie hath increased them, and made them full two hundred: whereof six score are to attend by turnes, vpon his owne royall person, and three score to attend the Queenes Maiestie, and the other twenty are to attend vpon the person of our most noble Prince, and whereas the wages of the said Guard at the Kings comming was two shillings a day for three moneths in Summer, and but twenty pence a day for nine moneths in Winter.

At the humble and earnest suite of the right honourable the Lord Erskin, Baron of Dixleton, Captaine of his Maiesties Guard, the King hath giuen them two shillings and foure pence a day, for the Summer six moneths, and two shillings a day for the Winter six moneths.

Hee hath enlarged the wages of the Warders of the Tower, from eight pence a day vnto foureteene pence a day, at the suite of the said Lord Erskin afore-said, and since that increased their number, by adding ten more vnto them, allowing them as much wages as the former.

The Captaines, Lieutenants, Officers, and common Souldiers, of the late Garrison in Barwicke, being all discharged of their seruice and daily attendance, yet neuertheless euery one of them by the Kings appointment and allowance, receiueth the full one halfe of their former pay. The second yeare of this Kings Raigne, all the great Ordnance in Barwicke, was brought from thence vnto the Tower of London.

His Maiestie hath enlarged many other Pensions, and many more things of honour and piety, to his eternall praise and glorious memory, besides his Royall Rewards, and gracious bounty to well deseruers, the particulars whereof I could not attaine at this time by any meanes.

An. Reg 20. 1086. In the Whitson weeke, King William honoured his son Henry with the order of Knighthood at Westminster, where he then held his Court, but how the same was minstred by the King, or by Lanfrancus Archbishop of Canterbury, we can he made William Rufus a Knight, I reade not.

The manner o making Knights in old time. Guilielmus Malmesburiensis fol. 67. Ingulphus fol. 512.

But Ingulphus setteth downe the manner of making of a Knight by the Abbot of Peterborough, in the second yeare of King William the Conqueror, in this sort.

King William distributed the Bishoprickes, Earledomes, and Baronies of this Realme to his Normanes: and one Hereward, a valiant Englishman, being then in Flanders, and hearing that king William had subdued the Realme, and that his Fathers inheritance was given vnto a Norman, commeth with spare into England, and gathering together vnto him a company of his kindred, goeth vnto his Vncle by his Fathers side then Abbot of Peterborough, and first making confession of his sinnes, and absolution received, watcheth all night in the Church, in praying and fasting, and the next day hearing diuine service, offered his Sword vpon the Altar, and after the Gospell, the Abbot put the same hallowed sword about Herewards neck. And communicating the holy Mysteries of Christ, from thence forth remained a lawfull Knight, but afterwards by a Prouincial Counsell holden in the Church of Saint Peter at Westminster, in the yeare of our Lord God one thousand one hundred and two, being the third yeare of King Henry the first, by consent of the Lords spirituall, and temporall, the authority of Abbots, for making of Knights was taken away, notwithstanding afterwards the same King Anno Domini one thousand one hundred twenty fiue, being the fifth and twenty yeare of his raigne, by his Charter made vnto the Abbot of Reading, reciting his prerogatiue, Ecclesiasticall, and Temporall, did graunt vnto the said Abbot, authority to make Knights, as by the words of the same charter, remaining in the custody of Master Ioseph Holland, of the Inner Temple in London Gentleman, doth appeare as followeth.

Tus Elmus Malmesburiensis fol. 130.

That the Abbot should make no Knights, but in the sacred vestures of Christ, in which garment let him be admodum prudent, that he entertaine not young ones, but men of ripe age, or discrete: he may receiue as wel Clerks as Lay men.

Obseruations not altogether vnworthy remembrance.

Carpes, and Pippins, as Walter Leonard Mascall affirmeth, were brought into England by Walter Mascall of Plomked in Sussex, and since that time came in Apricocks, and many other delicate fruites, Turkies, which all other Nations call Guyney Cockes, are generally said to be brought into England betweene the tenth and fiftenth yeare of Henry the eighth: and about the same time came in the planting of Hoppes, brought from Artois, and presently vpon that, and for many yeares after was vsed this Rime.

Read his booke of fishing, fowling, and planting.

Turkeyss, Carps, Hops, Pickarels, and Beere, Came into England all in one yeere.

Apricocks, Mellycatons, Musk-Millions and Tobacco, came into England about the 20. yeare of Queene Elizabeth, and since that time many other strange fruits and flowers.

Sir Walter Raleigh first brought Tobacco in vse, when all men wondred what it meant.

Womens Partes, Kuttes, Puffes, Fanns, Perriwigs and Bodkins, were first deuised, and vsed in Italy by Curtezans, and from thence brought into France, and there receiued of the best sort for gallant ornaments, and from thence they came into England, about the time of the Massacre of Paris.

Richard Mathewes at Flet-bridge, was the first Englishman that attained the perfection of making fine knines, and knive hafts, and in the fift yeare of Queene Elizabeth, hee obtained a prohibition against all Strangers, and others for bringing any knives into England from beyond the seas, which vntill that time were brought into this land by Shippes lading from Flanders and other places. Albeit at that time, and for many hundred yeares before, there were made in diuers parts of this Kingdome, many coarse and vncomely knives, and at this day the best, and fineft knives in the world, are made in London.

Knives.

He attained his skill by trauelling, and reading in diuers nations.

This knives were marked with the halfe moone, according to his Letters patents.

About that time Englishmen began to make all sorts of Pinnes, and at this day they excell all Nations, and it may easily be proued, that Strangers haue sold Pinnes in this land to the value of three score thousand pound a yeare.

Pinnes made in England.

About the 10. yeare of the Queene, Richard Dyar, after he had bin many yeares in Spaine, where he learned the making of earthen furnaces, earthen fire-pots, and earthen Ouens, transportable, he taught his Countrymen the making of the same at London without Moregate, and for a time enioyed the whole profit thereof to himselfe by Patterne.

About the 16. yeare of the Queene, began the making of Cole poking-sticks, and vntill that time all Lawndzelles vsed setting sticks, made of wood or bone.

Tobacco was first brought, & made known in England by Sir John Hawkins, about the yeare 1565. but not vsed by Englishmen in many yeares after, though at this day commonly vsed by most men, and many women: the making of Spanish Needles, was first taught in England, by Elias Crowse a Germane, about the eight yeare of Queene Elizabeth, and in Queen Maries time, there was a Negro made fine Spanish Needles in Cheapside, but would neuer teach his Art to any.

Spanish Needles.

About

About the first yeare of Queene Elizabeth, began the planting and growing of Licorish in England.

The flower de luce of the Royall Exchange furnished with shops, and all sorts of fine wares.

And concerning the Royall Exchange in London, whereof I haue formerly made some discourse: I forgot to set downe that about fiue or sixe yeares after it was furnished with wares, as formerly mentioned, Sir Thomas Gresham constrained all the shoppe-keepers that had shoppes about, to take shoppes below, in the lowest vault vnder ground of the Royall Exchange, where was equall no more of Shops to those aboue. At which time euery man payed foure marks a yeare for euery shop aboue, and he would haue as much rent for euery shop below as aboue, or else they should not haue any shoppes aboue, and after they had kept shoppes below a short season, what with the dampe of the vault, the darkenesse of the place, and the vnwillingnes of Customers to buy their wares there, they were so wearied, that they agreed among themselues, to giue foure pound a yeare for a shoppe aboue, so that they might be freed from keeping shoppes below, and that Sir Thomas Gresham should turne the vault to what other vse he would, either for Merchants goods or otherwise, which offer he accepted, and these Tenants onely furnished the shoppes aboue, as they are at this day, according to the time.

Christenday shewes giuen in deed of peace.

At this time, and for many yeares before, it was not the vse and Custome (as now it is) for Godfathers and Godmothers, generally to giue plate at the Baptisme of children (as Spoones, Cupps, and such like) but onely to giue christening shirts, with little bands, and cuffs, wrought, either with silke or blew thred, the best of them for these persons weare edged with a small lace of black silke and gold, the highest price of which for great mens children, were seldome aboue a noble and the common sort, two, three, or foure, and fiue shillings a piece.

Gardners Sonnes in Gresham Colledge, and Gardners of Hatfield.

And it was then the Custome for maydes, and Gentlewomen, to giue their fauourites as tokens of their loue, little handkercheifs of about three or foure inches square, wrought round about, and with a button, or a tassell at each corner, and a little in the middle, with silke or thred: The best edged with a little small gold lace, or twist, which being doubled vp in foure cross foldes, so as the middle might be seene, Gentlemen and others did vsually weare them in their hatts, as fauores of their Loues, and Mistresses, some cost fiue pence a piece, some twelue pence, and the richest fifteene pence.

Silke buttons.

Likewise at the same time, the making or wearing of silke buttons, was very little, or not at all knowne to the generality, but onely to the very best sort, who at that time, made buttons of the same stuffe, their doublets, coats or Jerkins were made of.

Great cheare and full buttons worne by great personages.

At which time likewise, many very honorable personages, and others, as well women, as men, did weare hoopers of great Tassell buttons about their cappes, or hatbands, as a worthy garment, to distinguish betweene the Gentry and others. But about the tenth yeare of Queene Elizabeth, many young Citizens and others, began to weare Tassell buttons vpon their doublets, coats, and Jerkins and then the former wearing of hoopers, and hatbands, set with Tassell buttons ceased. And within few yeeres after, began the generall wearing of buttons, of thred, silke, haire, and of gold and siluer threed.

And about the same aboue mentioned, and many yeares before many honourable personages, wore their hose with buckles, viz. the common sort wore copper buckles, and the best sort wore buckles of siluer or copper gilded.

But concerning shoe Roses, either of silke, or of what stuffe soeuer they were not then vsed nor haue one, neither any scarffes, aboue the value of foure nobles, or thirtie shillings at the most, by any person whatsoeuer: neither was there any Garters aboue the price of fiue shillings a payre, although at this day men of meane cracke weare Garters, and shoe Roses, of more then fiue pounds price, and some weare scarffes from ten pounds a piece, vnto thirtie pounds or more. The like may be truly sayd, concerning wrought Wastcoates, when no workeman knew how to make a Wastcoate wrought, worth fiue pound, nor no Lord in the Land wore any of that value, although at this day, many millainers shoppes are stored with rich and curious imbroydered Wastcoats, of the full value of tenne pound a piece, twentie pound, and some forty pound.

Wastcoats.

And vntill the tenth or twelfe yeere of Queene Elizabeth, there were but few silke shoppes in London, and those few were onely kept by women, and maide seruants, and not by men, as now they are: At which time all the silke shoppes in London had not so much, nor so many sorts of silke, gold, or siluer thred, nor sorts of silke lace, and gold and siluer lace, as is at this day in diuers particular shoppes in Cheapside, and other places.

At which time last abouesayd, and for three or foure yeares after, all Citizens wiues in generall, were constrayned to weare white knit Caps of woollen yarne, vnlesse their husbands were of good value in the Queenes booke, or could proue themselues Gentlemen by descent, and then ceased the womens wearing of Minevor Caps, otherwise called three corner Caps, which formerly was the vsuall wearing of all graue Matrons. These Minivor Caps were white, and three square, and the peakes thereof, were full three or foure inches from their head, but the Aldermens wiues and such like, made them Bonnets of Velues, after the Minevor Cappe fashion, but larger, which made a great show vpon their heads, all which are already quite forgotten.

In the time of Queene Mary, and the beginning of the Raigne of Queene Elizabeth, and for many yeares before, all Apprentizes in London wore blew Cloakes in the Summer, and in the Winter blew Gownes, but it was not lawfull for any man either seruant or others, to weare their Gownes lower then to the calues of their legges, except they were aboue three score yeares of age, but the length of Cloakes being not limited, they made them Cloakes downe to their Shoes, their Breeches and Stockings were vsually of white broad cloath, viz. round Slops, and their Stockings sowed vp close thereunto, as if they were all but one piece, they also wore flat Caps, both then and many yeares after, as well Apprentizes as Journeymen, and others, both at home and abroad, whom the Pages of the Court in derision called Flat-Caps.

Flat Caps vsually worn.

When Prentizes and Journey-men attended vpon their Maisters and Mistresses in the night, they went before them carrying a Lanthorne and Candle in their hands, and a great long Club on their neckes, and many well growne sturdy Apprentizes vsed to weare long Daggers in the day time at their backes or sides.

Apprentizes vsed to carry Clubs.

At this time, and likewise formerly, and diuers yeares after, it was a very great matter to giue ten pound to binde any youth Apprentize, although at this day it is vsually to giue twenty, fourty, 60. or an 100. pound with an Apprentize; for then it was the generall vse and custome of all Apprentizes of London, Porters onely excepted, to carry the water Tankerd, to serue their Maisters from the Thames, and the common Conduits of London.

At the comming of Queene Elizabeth, and for diuers yeares after, there was very small store of Plate belonging to any of the Halls of London, although at this day they are all generally very plentifully furnished.

Plate in Halls of Companies.

The first making of Venice glasses in England, began at the crotched Fryers in London, about the beginning of the Raigne of Queene Elizabeth, by one Iacob Venalino, an Italian.

The cutting of yron barres in a mill for the ready vse of Smiths, to make long rods, and all sorts of nayles, was brought first into England in the yeare 1590. by Godfrey Box, of the Prouince of Liege: who set vp the first mill for that purpose, neere Dartford in Kent.

Cutting of Iron barres.

He likewise set vp the first mill for the making of Copper plate, called a battery mill.

Copper Plates.

And vpon the same River (called Dartford Riuer) not long before, was set vp a mill to make white Paper, by Maister John Spilman, (a Germane) who was, long after, Knighted by King Iames, this was the first mill in England, wherein fine white Paper was made.

In the raigne of King Iames, course Paper (commonly called browne Paper) was first made in diuers places (as about Windsor and Surrey, this Paper was called white browne Paper, seruing for Grocers and such like.

Bartholomew Faire and others forbidden by Proclamation.

The 5. of August this yeare, 1630. the King by Proclamation forbad Bartholomew Faire, and all other Fayres, within 50 myles of London, and specially Sturbridge Fayre, neere Cambridge, by reason that all this Summer the sickenesse was very great in that Towne, which which caused not only the Scholiers and others to flye their Colledges, but also many chiefe Citizens and others to forsake their dwellings, leaving the Townes very desolate, onely replenished with the poore, and meaner sort, who through want of trade, and their wonted imployments, & heavy visitation, had many wayes perished, but that they were very charitably relieved by their neighbour shires, euen vnto Middlesex, and London, by which their want was much supplyed.

London extreamely frighted with the feare of the sicknesse.

At the first beginning of the Spring this yeere in diuers out Parishes, there dyed diuers of the sicknesse, which wonderfully frighted the Citizens, and also the inhabitants of London, and the Suburbs, so as with more fright and terrour vpon the remembrance of the late great sicknesse, they fledde the Citie, into all parts of the land, where in many places before their comming, as well Villages, as other Townes, were visited with the sicknesse, from whence many of the aforesayd Londoners, in the moneth of August and Septemb' ber, returned to London as to a place of the best refuge, for health and reliefe, for the Country failed in both.

Wednesday the 15. of September 1630. Proclamation was made to adiourne the terme from the 9. of October, vnto the 27 of the same, and that week there dyed in London, Libarties, and the Suburbs, and Out Parishes, two hundred threescore and one, whereof of the plague, threescore and eight.

I peace proclaimed, claime only Spaine.

SIR FRANCIS COTTINGTON

Knight, Chancellour of the Exchequer, and one of his Maiesties most honorable Privie Councel being Ambassador Spain, tooke the Kings Oath for confirmation of the League in manner following.

Madrid the 16. of December 1630.

The King of Spaine by oath confirmeth the league.

On the 15. of this moneth, the peace betweene England and Spaine, was Proclaimed with great Solemnitie, and the manner of it was thus.

Scaffolds were erected in three places of the Towne, one before the Palace, another before the Church of S. Mary, neere the Duke of Vzedas house, and the third in a broad streete called the Puerta de Guadalajara.

In the first place, went two and forty Alquazills, who are certaine Ministeriall Officers of Iustice; Then foure heraulds of armes, after them two Secretaries of the Councell Royall, who I thinke doe somewhat resemble in Office, our Clearkes of the Councell, and last of all foure Alquazills decarte. The two and forty that led the rancke, remained on horseback, while the rest ascended the Scaffold.

The chiefe Secretary deliuered a paper with many ceremonies, curtesies, and basamanos, to the chiefe herauld, who read it aloud. This was done by sound of drumme, and trumpet, and there were fier-workes of all kindes, both for that night, and two nights after.

On the 17. day it was agreed, that the King should sweare the peace, and my Lord Ambassadour intended that day to goe to the Palace in Coach: But the Kings will being to doe greater honour to the day, as also to my Lord, desired that his Lordship with his attendants, would come on horseback, and to that end his Maiestie commanded many choice horses of his owne stable, to be sent to my Lord Ambassadors house for his vse. Don Francisco Zapata, Master of the Ceremonies, came to his Lordship at two of the clocke, and desired his Lordship not to stirre, till he should returne, because that the Kings pleasure was, that his Lordship should bee nobly accompanied to the Palace; some after, the Ambassadors of France, Savoy, and Venice, were so ciuill, as to send diuers of their Gentlemen to attend on his Lordship that day. About foure of the clocke, Don Francisco Zapata returned, and prayed his Lordshippe to take horse, because the Duke of Gandia, Major Domo Major to the Queene, with many other Grandes, were in the streete attending for him: As we passed forward we found the streets on both sides so full of Nobilitie, as we had hardly roome to ride on betweene them; there were no lesse then seuen hundred on horseback, among whom were the Duke of Gandia, the Duke of Medinade las Torres, the Duke of Villa Hermosa, the Duke of Infantado, the Duke of Pastrana, the Duke of Ixar, the Conde of Nielola, sonne and heire to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Conde of Alvade Liste, the Marquesse de la Puerta, the Marquesse of Alcamiza, the Marquesse of Torres, the Marquesse de Valle, the Conde de Villanes, the Marquesse Don Frederick de Toledo, Generall of the Armado of the Ocean, the Marquesse of Trotes, the Conde of Villa Alua, the Count de Montreagnde, with diuers other Titulados whose titles I cannot remember.

There were also diuers of the Kings Chamber, ber; with many principall Officers of the Kings house, and about a hundred Caualleros de Abito. The Duke of Gandia, and the Duke of Medina de las torres were the last, and they receiued the Ambassadour into the middest betweene them. We came to the Pallace halfe an houre before Moone-light, but staied there a good space of time before we could get into the Kings quarter, for the Pallace being thronged with Nobility and Caualleros, striuing to get to see the Ceremony: order was giuen that all passages into the Kings quarter should be shut vp till the Ambassadour had entred. His Lordship was still conducted by those great persons into the Kings quarter. At our entring into the great roome of Presence, wee sawe in the Front thereof, the King seated with great Pastelts. His Grandes had placed themselues round about him, appearing like a circle of glory, but as we drew any thing neere to him, they opened a way in the middest, whereby the Ambassadour might passe, which was conuenient for vs to see the Ceremony (for none might enter within that circle but the Ambassadour) when his Lordship did reuerence, the King vncouered, and when the King had couered, his Lordship also couered, and was entreated to sit downe in a Chaire, placed on the Kings side, with his right hand towards the King; Right against the Ambassadour at a little distant, sate the olde Cardinall zapated in a Chaire, And when the Secretary of State read the Oath to the King, the King kneeled, the booke lying open before him, with a Crucifix standing by it, and the Ambassadour stood vp, and vncouered; As soone as the Secretary had read it, he asked the Ambassadour aloude, whether he liked the forme, to which the Ambassadour answered, that he did; then the Captaine Maior presented the booke to the King, who was still kneeling till the Secretary had done reading the Oath, and his Maiestie answered, Anssi lo iuro, which is (This doe I sweare) to this the Ambassadour made an answere in Spanish, which in English is this, And I accept it on the part of the King of great Brittaine my Lord and Master.

This bee pronounced so loude, as that the Cardinall (who was somewhat thicke of hearing) could vnderstand him, and therefore hee asked the Ambassadour what he said: whereupon the Ambassador repeated the same words againe more loudely.

The King in the meane time returned towards his seate, and drew the Ambassadour neere him, who still doing reuerence to the King, put on his Hat shortly after, and the King said thus to him, I am most cordially glad to haue seene this day, which I haue so much desired, And I haue made as great demonstration of ioy for it as I could and I hope so our Lord that it will proue to the great glory of his diuine Maiesty, and the good of both the Crownes: And the Ambassadour prayed God that the peace might be prosperous and permanent, and so after lowe obeysance made he tooke his leaue.

From thence he was conducted by the Duke of Gandia, and the Master of the Ceremonies to the Queenes quarter, we found the Queene sitting in as great Maiestie as the King. She was richly adorned with Iewels, yet all her riches and glory was not so delightfull as her person, for she is still more and more beautifull since the bearing of her last childe. Her Ladies were standing against the Hangings on both sides of the roome, distant one from the other foure or fiue foote, for their verdugados or hums of their garments being stiffned with so much gold, and siluer, and rich embroidery, did spread so large, as they could not well stand nearer: My Lord as he passed on did thrice reuerence to the Queene, and being come neere to her, he bended downe to kisse her left, and then couered; shee was pleased to hold him a quarter of an houre, for there wanted not matter to speake of for a longer time, shee hauing her sister in England our Queene. With the Queenes leaue his Lordship was conducted by the Master of the Ceremonies to all the Ladies on both sides, And his Lordship passed some complements with the Countesse of Olivares, and some others of the greatest, and saluted all the rest one by one as he passed round; which being done, hee returned againe to the Queene, and shortly after doing low reuerence to her, he tooke his leaue. The Duke of Gandia and the rest accompanied his Lordship home to his house, and then did the Fire-workes begin.

January the 4.

Vpon the first of this moneth there was a mighty feast made to the Ambassadour in the Kings Pallace, at which there were none but Grandes, and men of the golden Key, who are Gentlemen of the Kings Bedchamber. The Ambassadour sate at the boards end, and the English Gentlemen who had leaue went to sit with my Lord Ambassadour at his owne Table, were placed aboue all the Grandes, and both the Feast and the conducting him to the Pallace, was of the greatest state that euer hath beene expressed there to any Ambassadour.

Monday the 25. of April 1631. Meirvin Lord Audley, Earle of Castle haven, was brought from the Tower, and arraigned at Westminster for a Rape and Sodomy, he was tryed by his Peeres, and was found guilty. The Lord Audley Earle of Castle haven arraigned.

Anno Dom. 1631. Anno Reg. 7.

The Lord Audley tryed.

The Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper of the great Seale, was then Lord Steward, who gaue sentence of death against him, viz. to returne to the place from whence hee came, and from thence to the place of Execution, and there to be hanged vntill his body was dead, his Iudgement being past, he bowed himselfe very lowely vnto the Lords, and humbly besought their Lordships to be Intercessours vnto his Maiestie, that he might not dye so base a death, but dye the death of a Noble man, and then returned to the Tower, and was often visited by learned graue Diuines, namely Doctor Wynniffe Deane of Paules, and Doctor Wickham one of his Speciffies Chaplaines, who also accompanied and assisted him to his last end.

The Lord Audley beheaded.

Saterday the 14 of May, about 9. of the clocke, hee was brought to the scaffold upon Tower hill where with great meekenesse hee demeaned himselfe, and with very temperate speeches, he spake to the people and others that were about him, hee very contritely confessed his sinnes, and prayed very deuoutly for Remission: He gaue his Maiestie all humble and hearty thanks, for so honourable a death, hee drew a paper out of his Pocket, and caused a young man with a full voyce to reade it to the assembly. The copie whereof followes word for word: his prayers being ended, he layd his necke upon the blocke, and was beheaded with one blowe.

In the name of God Amen.

The Lord Audley Earle of Castle-hauen, his Confession of his Faith.

I Meruine Earle of Castle-hauen, being in my full strength and memory (thanks be giuen to my Maker) hauing beene brainded, and openly accused for change, alteration, and doubtfulnesse of my faith and religion, I thought fit like a Christian man to giue satisfaction vpon what grounds I stand for my beliefe, and to expresse it vnder my hand for the satisfaction of all charitable people and Christian men.

First, I doe beleeue in the blessed and glorious Trinity, three persons and one eternall and euer liuing God, God my Maker, God my Redeemer, and God my Sanctifier.

I doe rely wholy vpon the Merit, Death, and Passion of our blessed Saviour Christ Iesus, and vpon his mediation for the remission of my sinnes.

I doe beleeue and vse with most humble reuerence the Lords Prayer, the Creede of the Apostles, and the ten Commaundements, as they are set downe, and allowed by the Church of England.

I doe beleeue the Canonicall Scripture, and that it is written by the inspiration of the holy Spirit.

I doe beleeue the Booke of Common Prayer allowed in the Church of England, to be an excellent forme for the seruice of God and for that purpose the same. And for the rest of my beliefe, I doe referre it to the true Orthodox faith of our Church of England, and from the Articles received at this present in the Church of England, and confirmed by authority of Parliament. I differ not in any point (renouncing all the superstitions and errours taught or beleeued in the Church of Rome, or any other Church whatsoeuer. In which faith I will continue (God willing to my liues end) In testimony whereof, I haue hereunto subscribed my hand the 3. of May 1631.

Broadway and Fitz Patrick executed.

Monday the 27. of June 1631. Gyles Broadway Gentleman, and Florence Fitz Patrick Yeoman, were arraigned at the Kings Bench barre at Westminster, and found guilty, as parties offending in the crime whereof the foresaid Earle of Castle-haven was condemned. The Sentence of death being pronounced against them, they were committed to the Sheriffs of Middlesex, and were executed at Tyburne the first of July next following, where they with hearty contrition confessed their owne guiltinesse, desiring the people to pray with them and for them.

They were tryed by a Jury of Wiltshire.

King Iames of most happy memory, who not only for his wisedome, learning, and iudgement, worthily renowned through the whole world, but also his religious paines, care, and diligence, to aduance truth, and establish peace of conscience, new translated the whole Bible as is extant and euident; but with like Sanctimonious Integrity, endeuored to haue repayred and beautified the decayed Cathedrall Church of S. Paul in London, being the most sumptuous Christian Monument in this part of the world, and the most glorious and chiefe ornament of this Cittie; but being preuented by death, that holy worke rested for a season, and within short space after, it pleased God to possesse his sonne King Charles with a like Religious spirit and deuotion in his zealous Resolution, and affection to the aduancement of the Temple of Almighty God, by most profound aduice ordayned most especiall Commission and Commissioners, for the speedy and ample repaire of that Church. In this Commission was the Lord Maior of London, the most Reuerend Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Keeper of the great Seale, the most Reuerend Lord Archbishop of Yorke, the Lord Treasurer of England, the Lord privy Seale, the Earle Marshall of England, the Lord Chamberlaine of England, the Lord Chamberlaine of the Houshold, and with them many other great Lords, and others of his Highnesse privy Counsell, and other right Noble personages, the right Reuerend Lords, Bishops of London, Winchester, Ely, and Norwich, the chiefe Iudges of the Court of Kings Bench, the Court of Common-pleas, and Lord chiefe Barron of the Exchequer, besides Knights, Deanes, the Recorder of London, many of the Aldermen of London, and sundry learned Doctors of Diuinity, and Doctors of the Law and many Esquires of Accompt, as both and may appeare in the Record, and by his Maiesties Booke published to that purpose, dated the 10. of Aprill 1631.

Speciall Commission for the repaire of Paules.

I haue formerly made mention of a great seeming encrease of buildings in London round about the Suburbs, with the skirts and Townes adiacent as you may reade, since which time, there hath beene much increase of Buildings in all parts aforesaid, chiefely whereof, I now speake, is from the West part of Holborne and Bloomesbury, and the parts on that side and on the other side of the way in a place anciently called the Elmes, of Elmes that grew there, where Mortimer was executed, and left hang two dayes and two nights to be scene of the people as you may reade, which place hath now left his name, and is not knowne to any man of a syllian where that place was, and from thence the New faire buildings called Queenes Streete leading into Drury lane, and then on the other side the high way in the great Field,

Late new encrease of buildings, with other things of note.

The Elmes.

Long Acre, Couent Garden.

Field, anciently called Long Acre, with the South side of the Street called Couent Garden, that leadeth into Saint Martins Lane which is newly made a faire Streete, you shall reade that in the Rebellion of Wat Tylor, with his great Army, lay neere Smithfield barres, which was then a voyde open place, and the Kings friends, with their assembled forces, being placed before Saint Bartholomewes gate in Smithfield, espied King Richard with his Nobility comming to their ayde riding ouer long Acre, which they plainely and loyfully beheld, not being any way hindered of that sight in that place by any manner of Buildings, either in Smithfield, Holbourne, Chancery lane, or other places: Let the vnderstanding Reader iudge of the vnspeakeable and incredible encrease of Buildings in those parts within the space of two hundred and forty yeares, the like suddaine and vndiscernable encrease of Buildings vpon the North side of the River of Thames, within these last forty yeares betweene Saint Katherines and Radcliffe, beside the vpper high way and other places, &c. In the fore-named Couent Garden there is a particular parcell of ground layd out, in the which they intend to build a Church or a Chappell of ease; At this time also neere Hammersmith, there was built a new Chappell of Ease, and was consecrated this Spring.

Sir Francis Cottington Knight made a Baron.

Sunday the 10. of July 1631. Sir Francis Cottington Knight, Chancellour of the Exchequer, was created Lord Cottington Baron of Hanworth at Greenwich.

Concerning Greenland, scituate about seauenty seauen degrees toward the North pole, I haue formerly made mention amongst other late discoueries and Plantations: but at this time I am only to speak of a most strange and vnheard of aduenture of eight English men, which by chance were left there, where they remained full nine moneths, & all of them liued there vntill the coming of the next yeares London Fleet, who brought them all alme home.

Eight men left in Greenland, and liued there full nine moneths.

The last Summers voyage 1630. about the 6. of August, eight lusty men were appointed to take a great Boat or Shallop to goe to certaine places to kill Deere, to augment their Ships prouision, who take with them two Dogges, one Snaphance, and some Speares, and hauing sayled and rowed into diuers parts, they killed 14 Deere, which they layd in their Shallop, and then set sayle to returne to their Ship, but mysts, fogges, and contrary windes so resisted them, that for two dayes space they were distracted, not knowing what course to take, nor hauing any Card or Compas being endangered with Ice, & frighted with the sight of great Mountaines, and other places couered with Snowe, with extreame dread and danger, and no lesse labour going to and fro thorow Snowe and tempest, were constrained to cast much of their Venison ouerboord. The 21. day they attayned the place which they sought for, but finding there neither friends nor reliefe, sent two of them ten miles ouerland to another Port or Rode, at which place finding the Ships gone, and no comfort nor hope left.

The 20. day of August, being the very last day limitted to ride in those parts, by reason of great Frost and drifts of Ice was past, they returned this sad newes vnto their Fellowes, who seeing all danger of death and famine to threaten them, most resolutely consulted and agreed to shake off all base feare, and instantly to vse all labour, diligence, and industry for their present and future defence, of Frost, Snowe, Rayne, and tempestious weather hauing hetherto made their Sayles their shelter, supported with their Oares; after which they found a receptacle called the Tent, which was a house made, and couered with boords, which they new boarded within and without with boards, which they found left for the vse of the next yeares Voyage, and filled vp all hollow places, stoes, and ends with sand. They found also a thousand Bricks, and two Hogsheads of Lyme, wherewith they made a Hearth, and a Chimney, and layd in great store of empty Caskes, and other things for firing; they found also some trayne Oyle, and certaine loathsome fragments of Whales, called Graues, which they likewise brought into the Tent to augment their prouision, and eate it till sauoury, for it was not their Venison, nor Beares, nor Sea-horse could haue supplyed them, notwithstanding their care and stint for euery mans eating; they Fasted Wednesdayes and Fridayes, and religiously obserued the Sunday and Christmasse. Their Shoes and apparell wasted, to mend which and whatsoeuer else, they were faine to vse the raueling of ropes, and fish bones, in stead of Awles and Needles, Deere skins serued them for bedding, being lodged by two and two in a Cabin much more was their misery, then may be expressed, for many dayes they neuer saw the glorious Sun, and for many dayes when they wanted water, they were faine to drinke Snow broath, which they melted with hot stones; nay was there euer any to this day but themselues that liued there in Winter, although diuers tryalls had beene formerly made: some whereof were hired, and fully furnished with all necessaries to Winter there, yet they all perished: and some condemned malefactors being sent thither, with assurance of pardon, if they would aduenture one Winters being there, being furnished with lodging, weapons, foode, and rayment, yet when they beheld the terrour of the time, and condition of the place, where no trees, nor hearbs growe, but only Mosse, Sorrell and Scuruie-grasse, they willingly returned to receiue their doome of death in England, rather then to be left one Winter in Greenland.

About the end of May the London Fleete being come thither, found out those eight men aboue layd, and tooke them into their Shippes, where within a few dayes being refreshed with food & apparel they became very serviceable for the killing of Whales, & making of Oyle, & returned back with the Fleet, which safely arriued and cast Anchor in the riuer of Thames this present September 1631.

AN ADVERTISEMENT TO THE READER, CONCERNING THE THREE VNIVERSITIES OF ENGLAND.

IT is not vnknowne to any that haue read the Chronicles, or Annales of this Kingdome, especially written by that auncient Industrious Antiquarie Master Iohn Stow, that hee was accustomed to ioyne to his Historicall worke, the foundations, and descriptions of all the Colledges, and Houses of Learning, erected within the most famous Vniuersities of Cambridge and Oxford: since whose death, I hauing done my true endeauour for the augmentation, and continuation of our English Chronicle, haue thought it fit for worthy memory: not onely to set downe his relation of the said Vniuersities, and also all the supplement, and encrease of other new Colledges in those two Vniuersities since his death: but also to adde thereunto a Treatise of the third Vniuersity of England, to wit London; which Treatise was lately gathered, and written by Sir GEORGE BVCK Knight, Gentleman of the Kings priuie Chamber, and Master of his Maiesties office of the Reuells, and by him giuen and dedicated, to the right honourable Sir EDVVARD COKE Knight, Lord chiefe Iustice of England, and one of his Maiesties priuie Counsell, to be disposed at his Lordships pleasure; whereof I hauing aduertisement, became an humble sutor to his Lordship, that I might haue it to publish with the rest; whereunto his Lordship very fauourably condescended, and forthwith deliuered it vnto mee, with speciall commendation, and approbation, as of a worke worthy the publique Light, and to that purpose gaue his honourable allowance vnder his owne hand. The publication whereof accordingly, I haue with all diligence performed, not doubting but that the Ingenious Reader will kindly accept thereof, and of their loue and paines by whom it is friendly, and freely imparted vnto them.

Your euer well willer,

EDMOND HOWES.

OF THE VNIVERSITIES IN ENGLAND, and Colledges in the same, with the founders and principall Benefactors.

IHaue before time reioyced (saith Erasmus Roterdam) that England was so well furnished with so many men of excellent Learning, but now I begin to enuie her felicity, for that thee so flourisheth with all kinde of litterature, that by taking the commendation thereof from other Regions, thee only as it were mentionally obscure them. And yet this commendation is not as now first one to England, in the which (if it is well knowne) haue beene of long time, men of great learning. The Vniuersities prooue this to be true, which haue for their antiquities, and worthinesse, contended with the most ancient, and worthiest Vniuersities in the world.

Colledges and Halls, in the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, to the number of 21. indowed with lands and possessions for maintainance of Students in all manner of Sciences, strictly accounted according to the time of their beginnings, although at this day by the altering of foundations they are but 16. left.

The common Schooles.

THe common Schooles of the Vniuersitie haue beene of such auncient continuance, as there is no certaine mention how, or when, they began. But the latte new building which now standeth foure square, like unto the fashion of a Colledge, was made by accelle of times vpon the coits of the Vniuersity and diuers Benefactors in order, as hereafter followeth.

First the Physosophie Schoole, aboue, and beneath, sometime called the Schoole of Canon law (that is to say, the West side of the same quadrant) was builded at the charges of the Vniuersity, and other good Benefactors, since the yeere of our Lord God 1136. The Schoole of Diuinity, and ouer that the new Chappell, (that is to say, the South side) was begun by the Vniuersity vpon contributions, and collections of sundry persons: But the same was finished in the yeere of Christ 1400. by the executors of Sir William Thorpe Knight, sometime chiefe Iustice of England. The Schoole of Art, and ouer that the olde Libzarie (that is to say, the South side) was made by the Vniuersity of the ruines of the olde Schooles. The gate of the same Schooles, with the walkes on each side thereof, and the new Library (that is to say all the East side) was builded at the cost of Thomas Rotheram, Archbishop of Yorke, with some contribution of the Vniuersity in the yeare of Christ 1479. And in the yeare 1480. was perfected as now it standeth.

Peter Colledge.

Saint Peters Colledge, commonly called Peter House, was founded in the time of King Henry the third, by Hugh Balsham Bishop of Ely, in the yeere of Christ 1256. Who was after enlarged in the time of King Edward the second by Master Robert Eyrling, who gaue a house with the appurtenances wherein sometime dwelt the religious men called Fratres de sacco or de penitentia Iesu Christi. Likewise another was given by Rybernus de Ayrsham and Iohn of Kemingham. But the indowment was giuen by the said Hugh Balsham, who was after the 15. Bishop of Ely, and finished the Colledge in Anno 1284.

Michaells house.

The Colledge or house of Saint Michaell, was founded by Henricus or Henricus de Stanton, sometime Chancelour of the Exchequer, and a Canon of Yorke and Wels, who obtained lycence of King Edward the second, in the fourteenth yeere of his raigne, to erect the same Colledge for a certaine number of Scholers and Chaplaines, to be governed by a Master, according to his owne ordinances, and rules, granting further by the same lycence to the said Henricus, power to vnite vnto his Colledge the aduowson of St. Michaels Church in Cambridge, which was after more largely indowed with lands, and rents, as well by him as by diuers other good Benefactors of latter time. At this day it is taken into Trinitie Colledge, founded by King Henry the eight.

Vniuersity hall.

The Vniuersity Hall or Colledge was founded by the Chancellor and Masters of the Vniuersity of Cambridge, in the yere 1326. And the 19. yeere of King Edward the second (Master Richard Badew being then Chancellour) vpon a ground, whereupon stood two houses belonging of olde time to the said Chancellour, and Vniuersity, in Milnstreete. King Edward the third in the 20 yeere of his raigne, gaue licence of Mortmaine to the Master and Scholers of the said new erected Colledge, to take Lands and Tenements to the yeerely value of of forty pounds for euer, for their maintainance in Study, at the request of the Chancelour and Masters of the said Vniuersity. Since that, it was much increased by Master Walter Tachsteer, Master of the same Colledge. But now it is vnited into the foundation of the Lady Elizabeth de Burgo, Countesse of Clare.

Kings Hall.

The Kings Hall or Colledge had his first originall of King Edward the second, who of his owne deuotion maintained there for a time 32. Schollers, in Study of learning, and knowledge, who for certaine yeres after were payd, their salaries or Stipends, sometime by the Sheriffe of Cambridge, sometime by the Maior and reuent of Saint Neetes or Needes, and sometime out of the Exchequer. But King Edward the third by his Charter dated the 7. day of October, in the 11. yeere of his raigne erected there a Colledge in the honour of God, and his blessed Mother, S. Mary the Virgin, and all holy Saints, for a Master and 32. Schollers, calling it by the name of the Kings Hall. The ground whereof hee purchased of Master Robert Croiland, and after indowed it with lands and possessions, which so continued a Colledge till the time of King Henry the eight, who united the same to his new foundation of Trinity Colledge.

Clare Hall. Clare Hall was founded by the Lady Elizabeth de Burgo, widdow, sometime the wife of John de Burgo Earle of Vlster in Ireland, daughter of Sir Gilbert of Clare Earle of Gloucester, and one of the heires of Sir Gilbert of Clare her brother, the last Earle of Gloucester, shee was first married to John Burgh Earle of Vlster in Ireland, after to Theobald of Verdon, and thirdly to Sir Roger Damary, and had issue by them all, the taking into her foundation the foresaid vniuersity Hall, by the resignation of Master Walter Thackstead, Master of the said house, and the consent of M. Richard Badew the first founder, called it all vnder the name of Clare Hall: and became the onely founder thereof in the time of King Edward the third, about the yeere of our Lord 1347.

Pembroke Hall. Pembrooke Hall was founded by the Lady Mary of Valentia, Countesse of Pembrooke, wife of Audomare de Valentia Earle of Pembrooke, and daughter of Guido Earle of Saint Paule in Fraunce, shee obtayned lycence of King Edward the third (whose Cosin the was) to found this Colledge of a Master and thirtie Schollers or more, at her pleasure: and to assigne them for their habitation a place in Cambridge of her owne inheritance, with three other messuages which shee purchased, and 100. pound of yeerely rent, in aduowsons of Churches for euer, and called it Aula de Valence Maria, Anno 1347.

Corpus Christi College. The Colledge of Corpus Christi, and our blessed Lady commonly called Benner Colledge, was founded by the Alderman, and brethren of Corpus Christi guilde, and the brethren of our Lady guilde in Cambridge, at the instance of the first Henry Duke of Lancaster, who in the 26. yeere of King Edward the third, obtained a lycence of Mortmaine for the said Alderman and brethren, that vpon a messuage to them belonging in Cambridge, they might erect this Colledge for Schollers, Chaplaines, and others, to be governed by a Master, according to their rules and ordinances. By the same lycence was also appropriated vnto the Colledge for euer the aduowson of Saint Bennets Church, standing before their gate. This Duke of Lancaster, in the 28. yeere of the said King Edward the third, was elected Alderman of the said guildes, who recognized the statutes of the Colledge not by the Dukes Seale, but by the Seale of the Alderman of those guildes.

Trinity Hall. Trinity Hall was of old time an hostell or house of study. And in the time of King Edward the third, John Crendell Prior of Ely, and his conuent procured the same hostell for their Monkes to study in. To this house were added three other dwelling houses by Master Richard Ling, Chancellour of the Vniuersity, and Archibald of Norwich, Master Walter Bluedon, and Master Simon Rokinghale Parson of Rolesby, either of them one house. And in the 28. yeere of the raigne of King Edward the third, Master Robert Stratton, I. Trunch, Walter Bakton, Walter de Aldeby, and Peter de Bitterings, gaue toward the enlargement thereof, one messuage, and seuen peeces of voyd ground. And likewise the said Walter Bakton, and Peter Bitterings, and Thomas Walsingham, gaue one other messuage called Draxes Entry. All which being thus layd together, were after purchased by Master William Bateman Bishop of Norwich, who by the Kings licence builded thereon the Colledge, as now for the most part it standeth, in the worship of the holy Trinity, and indowed it with lands and possessions, and became founder thereof, though since it hath beene increased by diuers good Benefactors: he deceased at Auinion in Fraunce (where hee was sent on the Kings message) the first day of January, in the 11. yeere of his consecration, and of our Lord God 1354.

Gonuile Hall. Gonuile Hall was founded by Edmond Gonuile Parson of Terington in Norffolke, in the 22. yeare of King Edward the third, who for that purpose obtained a licence at the suite of Sir Gualter de Manney, to erect a Colledge for a Master and 20. Schollers to be Students in the Art of Logick and other Sciences, vpon a ground where sometimes stood three houses and a garden in Lurthrowhlane, which he purchased for his money. And in the 26. yeare of the same King, the name of that Colledge was inlarged by the gift of two other houses, the one by the Chancellour and Masters of the Vniuersity, and the other by the Master and Brethren of Saint Johns Hospitall in Cambridge. This Edmond Gonuile at his decease hauing a good summe of money, commended the further finishing of the same Colledge, to Master William Bateman Bishop of Norwich, which hee performed both in the building, and indowment with Lands, and caused it to be named Gonuile Hall. At this day it is united into the Colledge of Iohn Caius, and called by the name of Gonuile and Caius Colledge.

Gods-house. The Colledge of Gods-house was first founded by M. William Bingham, Parson of Saint John Zacharie in London, vpon a Tenement, and three garden plats in Clunstreet, which he bought for his money, and procured lycence of King Henry the first, in the 20. yeare of his raigne, to erect thereon his said Colledge for 25. persons and a Prouost, to be governed by such Rules, and Statutes, as should be assigned vnto them by the said William Bingham, and by William Wimbell, William Millington, and William Gull, Doctors of Diuinity, and John Tilney Doctor of Law, and the longest liuer of them. This Colledge was chiefely erected for such such as should profest the study of Grammar, whereof (as it seemeth) there was great want in the Colledges not onely in both the Vniuersities, but also throughout the Realme. In two yeeres after King Henry being determined to found his great Colledge of our Lady and S. Nicholas, obtained of the said William Bingham a resignation of the house and ground for his said new Colledge, and in stede thereof gaue vnto him two other places in the Pyeschers streete, belonging sometime the one of them to the Abbot of Tiltie, and the other to the Prioresse of Deny, wherewith he also granted a licence of Mortmaine for 100. pound by yeere towards their maintenance for euer. But shortly after the said William Bingham in the yere 1447. resigned vnto the said King Henry the foresaid Colledge, to the intent that hee should be accounted the onely founder thereof as he was indeede. But now it is annexed to Christs Colledge founded by the Lady Margaret Countesse of Richmond and Derby.

Kings Colledge. The Kings Colledge of our blessed Lady and Saint Nicholas, was first founded by King Henry the first, vnder the name of a Rector and Schollers in the 19. yeere of his raigne. And after in the 21. yeere of his raigne, he translated the same of that foundation, into the name of Prouost and Schollers. Edward the fourth in displeasure withdrew from this Colledge so much Land as the founder had giuen them, and after restored them to the yeerely value of fiue hundred markes. After that King Henry the seuenth finished the same work of that notable Chappell begun by King Henry the first, and K. Henry the eight finished the glazing, stalls, and pauement of fine Marble. This Colledge was meant by King Henry the first, to haue borne one of the beautifullest houses in this Land, the plat whereof is more particularly set out in this my Annales.

Queens Colledge. The Colledge of Saint Margaret and Saint Bernard, commonly called the Queenes Colledge, was first begun by Queene Margaret, wife to King Henry the first, and Daughter of Reyner King of Sicile and Ierusalem, who procured Mortmaine for the same of 100. pound by yeere, in Anno 1441 at the intercession of Master Andrew Dokett Parson of Saint Botolphes in Cambridge, sometime Procurator of Barnard Hostell, which Hostell shee purchased and gaue to the said Colledge. And by his owne money and helpe of others, purchased certaine other Tenements, and builded the Colledge being the first President of the same: and gaue as well in his life time, as by his testament, diuers summes of money and parcels of land: procuring likewise certaine gifts of George Duke of Clarence, of Cicely Dutches of Yorke, of Richard Duke of Glocester, and Anne Dutchesse of the same, of Edward Earle of Salisbury, of Maude Countesse of Dorset, and Marmaduke Lomely Bishop of Lincolne, sometime Chancellour of the Vniuersity. But the creation of this foundation goeth now in the name of King Henry the first, as appeareth by his Charter dated the third day of December, in the 25. yeare of his raigne, who made the same vpon his owne ground, where now it standeth in Queenestreet for one President, and fortie fellowes or more, as their liue loaue should extend, according to such rules and Statutes as should be deuised by Master John Somerset, Chancellour of the Exchequer, John Langton Chancellour of the Vniuersity, Richard Cawdrey, Peter Hurford, Gilbert Northington, and Thomas Colyn, and by the longest liuers of them. After all which, Queene Elizabeth the wife of King Edward the fourth, made perfect the defects of that Colledge in the yeare 1465. King Richard the third endowed this Colledge, with 500. markes the yeare lands.

Katherine Hall. Katherine Hall was founded by M. Robert Woodlarke Doctor of Diuinity, Chancellour of the Vniuersity, and Prouost of the Kings Colledge, to the honour of our blessed Lady and Saint Katherine, the virgin and martyr, in the time of King Edward the fourth, about the yeare of Christ 1475. for the number of one Master, and three fellowes or more vpon a certaine messuage in Milnestreet, by him purchased, wherewith he also obtained of the said King a licence of Mortmaine for 40. marks of yeerly rent towards their maintenance for euer. Since it is enlarged by other good benefactors.

Iesus Colledge. Iesus Colledge was of old time a Nonnarie of religious women of S. Radegund, which Nonnarie being destitute of gouernment, the edifices fallen in decay, the goods and ornaments of the Church wasted, the lands diminished, and in conclusion a small number of Nunnes left, being but two, whereof the one ready to depart, and the other an Infant, were brought into such pouerty, that they were not able to releeue themselues, and therefore forced to depart and leaue the house desolate: whereupon Iohn Alcocke Bishop of Ely, obtained licence of King Henry the seuenth, in the yeare 1497. to found in place thereof a Colledge to the honour of the holy Trinity, and our blessed Lady, and S. Iohn the Euangelist, and Saint Radegund the virgin, for the number of one Master fiue fellowes, and a certaine number of Schollers, to be governed by such rules and statutes as he should appoint vnto them.

This Iohn Alcocke was borne at Beuerley in Yorkshire, and builded a free Schoole at Kingstone vpon Hull, and a Chappell on the Southside of the Parish Church wherein his parents were buried: hee builded likewise a most beautifull monument in the great Church of Ely, where himselfe lieth buried, and did in his time so many and so good acts, as would require a long Treatise to set them forth. The rents of this Colledge, and the number of fellowes and Schollers haue been more amplified at seuerall times, by Sir Robert Read Knight, chiefe Iustice of the common Pleas, Doctor Elcfor, Doctor Royston, and Doctor Fuller.

Christs Colledge. Christs Colledge was first begun by King Henry the first, and after his decease by the Ladie Margaret Countesse of Richmond and Darby, daughter and heire of Iohn Duke of Somerset, and mother of King Henry the seuenth, in the place where sometime the Colledge of Gods-house stoode in the Preachers streate, which Colledge was first founded by William Bingham Parson of S. Iohn Zachary in London and other, but because it came neuer to perfection, the obtained of the said King her sonne his Charter, dated the first day of May, in the 20. yeare of his raigne, and the yeare of our Lord God 1505. to increase the number of students there, translating it according to her disposition, so that from tyence forth it should be called Christs Colledge, wherein thee allowed by her Will to the number of 60. persons, with seruants to them conuenient and necessarie. The Abby of Creke being dissolued, the Lands were giuen to that Colledge.

A Master, 12. Schollers, fellow-s, and 47. scollers disciples.

Saint Iohns Colledge.

Saint Iohns Colledge was of ancient time an Hospitall of regular Canons, founded by Nigellus the second Bishop of Ely, and Treasorer to King Henry the first, in the yeare of Christ 1134. After him many yeares Hugh Balsham alias Norwold Bishop of Ely obtained lycence of King Edward the first, in the yeare 1280. to translate the order of that house, and placed therein a certaine number of Schollers, to cohabite among the religious persons, assigning to each part their portions by their owne consents, as well of the lands as the goods: so that alwaies the poore people of ancient time there relieued, should not be defrauded of their accustomed charity.

The noble Lady Margaret, Countesse of Richmond and Derby, being informed, that the number of religious brethren was greatly diminished, and now brought but to two, the house decayed, and the lands and goods wasted, procured lycence of her Nephew King Henry the eight, to erect in the same place a Colledge in the worship of Saint Iohn the Euangelist: but thee being preuented by death, left the execution thereof to her executors, Richard Foxe Bishop of Winchester, Iohn Fisher Bishop of Rochester, Charles Somerset Lord Herbert, afterward created Earle of Worcester, Sir Thomas Louell, Sir Henry Marney, and Sir Iohn St. Iohn Knights, Henry Hornsby, and Hugh Ashton Clearkes, who with her goods finished the buildings, and with the remaine of the lands that was in the house before, amplified with her owne lands, founded the said Colledge for a Master and fifty Schollers, in the yeare 1509

Magdalen Colledge.

Magdalene Colledge was first an Hoskell or Hall, inhabited by diuers Monkes of sundry Monesteries (and therfore of old called Monks Colledge) being sent from their Abbies to the Vniuersity for to study.

Edward Duke of Buckingham had an intention to bestowe great cost in the building thereof, who builded vp the Hall in the yeare of Christ 1519. whereupon it was for a time called Buckingham Colledge.

But these buildings being left by the Duke vnperfect, were after brought to some better passe by the Priors of Ely, and the Abbots of Ramsey, and Walden, and so continued a place of study for the Monkes till the generall suppression of Monasteries made by King Henry the eighth.

At length the Lord T. Audley Baron of Walden, and Chancellour of England, founded there a Colledge vnder the name of Saint Mary Magdalen, and indowed it with possessions, in the yeare of our Lord 1542. But being preuented by death, so that what hee had begun, he left vnfinished Sir Christopher Wray Lord chiefe Iustice of England repaired and beautified it.

In Radington and Claxton, with the aduowson of the Church of Radington: which Colledge at the suppression by King Henry the eight, might dispend in land as the same was then valued by the Visitors, one hundred and fifteene pound foure shillings, foure pence.

Saint Johns Colledge. Saint Johns Colledge was founded, and so named, in the time of Queene Mary, by Sir Thomas White Marchant Taylor, in Anno 1557. which Colledge sometime called Bernard Colledge, founded by Henry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterbury, being amongst other suppressed in the raigne of King Henry the eight, and greatly ruinated: the same Sir Thomas White purchased, and after bestowed large summes of money in building thereof, and did lay the same Colledge in very good land, neere to the Vniuersitie of Oxford, to the yearely value of 500. pound, which he purchased with his money, and hath left order to make it dispend 600. pound the yeere.

Wadham colledge founded. In the yeare 1613. was finished the famous Colledge in Oxford called Wadham Colledge, founded by Nicholas Wadham, late of Merefield in the County of Somerset Esquire, and Dorothie his wife, Sister to the right honourable Iohn Lord Peter of Writle.

The said worthy Gentlewoman undertaking this worke after the death of her husband by his former direction, but most part at her owne charge, began the same worke three yeres past, and endowed it with one Warden, fifteene fellowes, and fifteene Schollers, with other seruiceable Officers, and furniture, befitting such a place: and for the maintenance of the said Society, haue left in present, and to come, from their owne estates, 800. pounds by the yeere.

Shrewsbury Schoole founded.

In the Vniuersities of England (saith Erasmus Roterodame) there be certaine Colledges, in the which there is so much religion, so straight discipline, in such integrity of life, that if you did see it, you would neglect in comparison of them, all Monkish rules and orders.

All the Cities in England, many Market Townes, and Villages, haue free Grammar Schooles erected in them for the further encrease of learning and vertue. Vertuous men haue to the perpetuall regestring of their good names, done these good deedes, learned men haue not beene all the dayes. Some thereof for the supply in other, of that which wanted in themselues, haue done wisely, all to this purpose: that vertue and learning vnited and knit together, might in this our age make a learned vertuous world. It were much (they are so many) in a small roome to comprehend them, but the chiefe and worthy patrones of the rest are.

There is yet one other Schoole of note in this Kingdome, to wit, The free Grammar Schoole of Shrewsbury, in the County of Salop, which consisteth of one chiefe Schoolemaster, and three vnder Schoolemasters.

It was first founded by K. Edward the first, in the first yeere of his raigne, being the yeere of Christ 1552. and after augmented by Queene Elizabeth, in the 13. yeere of her raigne An. Dom. 1571. With the said famous Princes gaue liberall meanes for the maintenance of it, and also power for an ordinance to be provided and made, as well concerning the rule and gouernment, as also the disposing of the reuenues thereof, which being made accordingly, those persons that were trusted with the estate of it, became bound by couenant each to other, not onely to obserue the ordinances thereof, but also to sue and implead both one another, and euery other person that should doe any thing to the preiudicing of it.

Accordingly the said Schoole hath continued now 54. yeeres, and of those 54 yeeres my worthy & learned friend Mr. Iohn Meighen, now chiefe Master of the same, hath bin chiefe Master there 48. yeeres complete, hauing all which time of 48. yeeres notwithstanding, that many attempts haue bin made by diuers persons of place and great power, both by suits of law and otherwise, thereby as well to haue taken away, part of the meanes thereof, as also to haue enfringe some of the said ordinances, yet as well the meanes of the said Schoole, hath beene hitherto preserued through the good care and speciall endeauour of the said Mr. Iohn Meighen, the chiefe Master and Gouernor thereof, and godly blessing vpon the same, as also the ordinances thereof, to the vttermost of his power, and with the expence of his owne purse defended from violation.

With the meanes so preserued, there haue beene lately erected and built a faire Library, furnished with necessary bookes for the vse of the Schoole, and other publique vses therewith: also a pleasant Gallery, and a conuenient Chappell: also a Schoolehouse in the Countrey for a refuge and continuance of teaching in the times of sicknesse: and last of all, a godly new Schoolehouse in place of the olde, being ruinated within the Towne. And all the said building being made of the faire White free Stone worke set out, together with the inward furniture suitable thereunto, cost the best part of three thousand pounds if not more. But with the same meanes also two Schollerships are already founded for the said Schoole in Saint Johns Colledge in Cambridge, as a beginning and precedent for succeeding times, to proceede in founding more like Schollerships, with Fellowships also in both the Vniuersities, or either of them according to the meaning of the ordinances, by which it is specially prouided, that as the riche of the said Schoole shall encrease, so it shall from time to time be imployed wholly that way, and neuer conuerted to any priuate vse at all.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE, AND THE MOST REVEREND, AND MOST learned Iudge, Sir EDWARD COKE Knight, Lord chiefe Iustice of England, of Pleas before the KING himselfe to be holden, and one of his Maiesties priuie Councell.

MY VERY HONOVRABLE GOOD LORD,

I Present here to your Lordship a view of the Academicall State, and of the Vniuersality of the Studies, and of the liberall Arts, and Learnings taught, and professed in this Cittie of London: And vnto your Lordship rather then to any other, for these causes. First, because you are not onely generally well learned, but also an excellent Antiquarie, that is, one that can best iudge, and is much delighted with these kinde of Studies. Secondly, in respect that your Lordship is an especiall louer of this Cittie, and very studious by all meanes to aduance the flourishing state thereof. Thirdly, in regard that the greatest part of this Booke is bestowed in the description of the Colledges, and collegiate houses founded in this Cittie, for the professours of the Municipall, or common Law of this Land: Whereof your Lordship is not onely a most learned Professour, but also a singular Antecessor, a chiefe Iudge, and a principall Interpreter. My last, and not my least reason, is grounded vpon the due consideration of the many fauours, which I haue receiued of your Lordship, and for the which I hold my selfe exceedingly bound to your Lordship: and albeit I doe not (in complementing manner) make daily profession of this my obligation (as many vse to doe) yet there is no man shall be more ready to doe to your Lordship any honour, or seruice, then my poore selfe, when, and so often as occasion shall be presented: and in the meane time, and for a gage, and arrhes thereof I giue and dedicate vnto your Lordship, this THIRD VNIVERSITIE, vnto the which I pray your Lordship to giue fauourable entertainement, or if in your Iustice you thinke it not worthy, I submit it to your Lordships censure or sentence, either of life, or death, presse or suppression. And so I humbly take my leaue, from his Maiesties Office of the Reuels, vpon Saint Peters hill. 24. of August 1612.

Your Lordships very much obliged,
ready to doe you seruice,

A DISCOVRSE, OR TREATISE OF THE THIRD VNIVERSITIE OF ENGLAND.

The Preface, and generall argument to this Booke.

HAuing obserued in diuers Writers, as well Forraigne as English, the Cittie of London to be stiled an Vniuersitie, and doubting of it, I take occasion thereby to examine vppon what grounds and causes they had so stiled it, and after some search and consideration thereof, I found sufficient cause and reasons to satisfie me: For I saw that not onely those Arts, which are called liberall, but also all, or the most part of all other Arts and Sciences, proper and fit for ingenuous and liberall persons, were, and are in this Cittie professed, taught, and studied: which is (adding but cum priuilegio) as much as can be sayd, for the name and authority of any Vniuersity, and which can be rightly sayd of very fewe other Vniuersities of Christendome. For in the Cittie of London be reade and taught the Arts of Grammar, of Rhetoricke, of Arithmetike, of Musicke, of Geometry, of Astronomie, of Geographie, of Hydrographie: Likewise the other Mathematicall learnings, and Philosophie, Physicke, and Metaphisicke, the lawes Ecclesiasticall, Municipall, and Ciuill. As also the Arts of Riding, Gladiatorie, Alchimie, Optica, Gemonatiue, Geodesie, Poetrie, Heraldrie, Graphice, Charactery, Brachigraphie, and diuers Languages, holy, learned, and strange, and many other free and subtill Arts and Sciences are professed, taught, studied, and practised within this Cittie, as shall more plainely appeare in the processe of this Treatise. And (that which is most chiefely of all to be obserued) the chiefest Science, the Science of Sciences, and the Key of all knowledge (to wit) the Science and Art of seruing of Almightie God (called Theologie and Diuinitie) is no where better nor more plentifully taught then in this Cittie; many and dayly lectures being read thereof, not onely in the chiefe and Cathedrall Churches of Saint Paul, and Saint Peter, but also in all the Parish Churches, and Temples: and particularly and Academically also in Gresham College. So that these places are nothing else but Schooles of Theologie, and Colledges of Diuines. Then consequently it followeth (if Academia & Studium, & Vniuersitas) according to their vses in seuerall ages be but Synonyma & æquiuoca (as the learned know) and that this last name Vniuersitas, hath beene lately giuen and appropriated to generall Schooles of learning, for and in respect of the Vniuersality of Arts, Sciences, and Faculties professed, taught, and studied in them, Et pro ipsa studiorum Societate (as our most learned Countryman hath intimated in his immortall Britania) and that an Vniuersitie or Academie be but Cœtus hominum exercentium studia literarum, & in ijs se occupantium (as Francis Iunius defineth it.) When I say it followeth consequently, that London may not only challenge iustly the name and stile of an Vniuersity, but also a chiefe place in the Catalogue of Vniuersities.

And as for that obiection, which some make, viz. that it is requisite that all Vniuersities be allowed and authorized by the Popes bulls, and by his letters Apostolicall of Priuiledge and of Indulgence: this is friuolous, for then had Athens beene no Vniuersitie, for there the Pope had nothing to doe, as being not then in rerum natura. Neither doth this principall hold for good and currant since yee hath had being, yea euen in those Countries and Kingdomes, and Citties, where the Popes Primacie or Supremacie, and Authority is received and acknowledged: For in the Kingdome of France, the ancient Kings of France haue founded, authorized, and priuiledged Vniuersities, in diuers Cities in that Kingdome, as Rebuffus, and Leo Tripault, and others affirme. And the Imperiall Lawyers peremptorily hold Academiarum authoritatem ab Imperatore cognoscam, &c. Besides those instances, it might bee sayd for further answere of this obiection, that it were vnreasonable any absurd to expect or to attend the POPES allowance, and authorizing of Vniuersities founded, or to be founded in these times, and in this age, either in the Kingdomes of England, of Scotland, of Ireland, or of Denmarke, or of Sweden, or in any Principality or Commonwealth in Germanie, or other Countries or Citties, where the reformed Religion is professed, and established, and out of all which Kingdomes, and Countries, the Popes power and authority is excluded: But suppose it were not excluded out of England, and that it were in such force here as it is in the Empire, and in Fraunce, and in other Kingdomes: yet the Kings of England (who are and haue beene as free and as soueraigne and absolute in their Kingdomes (as either the Emperour, or the French King) may as iustly challenge the power and prerogatiue of establishing and authorizing Vniuersities, and publique Schooles within their owne Kingdomes and Dominions, as the Emperour or any King whosoeuer, and this power the auncient Kings of England not onely challenged, but also practised and put in vre, and particularly within this Citty of London, wherein they haue not onely allowed the publique exercises and professions of liberall Arts and Sciences, but also haue founded diuers Schooles, Temples, and Collegiate houses, and endowed them with faire Lands, and Reuenues, and authorized and strengthened them with many large priuiledges, and immunities, as in our Annales, and in Records, and in diuers particular and peculiar Charters yet extant may bee seene: and shall appeare better hereafter in this discourse.

And hereupon it is, that William Fitz Stephan, very aptly and rightly calleth these publique Schooles of London, Scholas celebres de priuilegio, & antiqua dignitate. But admit that this Citty had no other Colledges in it, but the Innes of Court; nor other Sciences studied and professed in it but the lawes; yet might London (as Iustice Fortescue well obserued, and boldeth) be as worthily stiled an Vniuersity, as either Angiers, or Orleans in France, or as Padua, or Perugio, in Italy, wherein the study of the Ciuill Law, is onely professed, or as Salerne, and Montpelier, wherein nothing but Physicke is read publiquely, or as Salamanca in Spaine, or as Maiorica in Lulliana, in Maiorca: in the one whereof none but Theologers, and in the other none but Alcamists, haue publique Salaries.

To conclude then briefly vpon the Allegars, and Probats premised. It appeareth hereby to be cleare, that vnto London belongeth duely not onely the Stile, and title of Vniuersity, but also of a chiefe and principall Vniuersity, hauing no complement thereof wanting but one, and that is the gouernment and protection of an honourable Chancellour; which the King my Master may easily at his Maiesties pleasure supply, hauing good choyse of most graue and noble personages, fit for this charge when it shall please his Maiesty.

The extent of this Vniuersity

Cap. II.

Before I enter into any particularities, I must aduertise the Reader: that vnder the name of London, I comprise not onely the Towne and Suburbes, and Territories thereof, but also all adiacent, and contiguous places, as namely Westminster, Southwarke, S. Katherines, &c. notwithstanding their peculiar Charters of Incorporation, and Franchises: And this I doe by the warrant of the best Cosmographers, and Politicians, who hold for an Axiome, that omnia aedificia vrbibus contigua Suburbia annumerenda sunt. And hereupon it is that diuers forraigne Writers describing London, doe directly ascribe not onely the Borough of Southwarke, but also the Citty of Westminster to the Suburbs thereof, and therefore I hope that in following them (and that onely in the matter of this subiect, and not hauing any purpose or thought to preiudice the particular rights and peculiar honours of those places) I shall be excused. And thus much for the ground worke and generall argument of this Treatise. And now I will to the particulars. In handling whereof, I will first set downe the beginnings and foundations of all the Colledges and Schooles of Learning, within and about this Citty of London, with a briefe mention of the Arts, Sciences, and Faculties, professed and taught in them: and next the names of the Founders, with the times of their erection, and foundation: and lastly close euery one of them with the blazon of the Armes belonging to euery seuerall Schoole and Colledge, all which Armes haue beene gathered, and set forth by Master Nicholas Charles Lancaster Duke at Armes, and perused, and allowed by Master William Camden Clarencieux, and Southroy d'armes.

The order of this Treatise.

Cap. III.

In this Vniuersity I must, and will giue the first place to the Schooles of Diuinity, next vnto them I will place the Colledges of the municipall or common Lawes, and of Chancerie, and then those of the ciuill Lawes. For as Theologie (which is the study and profession of the Law of God, and the perfect rule to attaine to eternall happinesse, & in briefe the fountain of all good learning, and the Archetype of all good & wholsome lawes) hath by due right the first place: so the law of man (which is or ought to be deriued frō thence) and whose end & scope is to administer Iustice to all men, and to preserue in safety and in peace, the temporall Estates of the Subiects) must needs haue the next place. And albeit the ciuill Law, be a very honourable, and a iust, and a most wise Law, yet I will place the Law of this Land before the Law of the Empire, or ciuill Law, and that by that rule, which teacheth mee to preferre my Soueraigne Lord, and King, before all other Kings and Keysars, and my native Country before any Country in the world. But as concerning that matter of controuersie, which is betweene the professours of the municipall, and ciuill Lawes about precedence, I will not meddle with it, but leaue the determination thereof to the learned heraulds and to their most Noble Superintendents, the high Constable and high Marshals of England to whom of right it belongeth. In the fourth place shall follow the Colledges of Physicke, and Chirurgery, and those which Philosophy and necessity hath brought forth: and all according to their marshalling by George Cornuus, and set downe briefly by him in these words. Theologia nobis dei cognitionem suppeditat: Iuris peritia lites & controuersias omnis generis iure & aequitate diiimit: Medicina morbos & eorum remedia ostendit: Philosophia rerum omnium infra Deum, cognitionem nobis exhibet. And I purpose to place all these Colledges, and Schooles of learning according to the times of their foundations and institutions as conueniently as I may doe it, which cannot be precisely obserued by reason that the times and beginnings be intricate, and often uncertaine and obscure, and it would make sometimes a confusion in the Method, and order, which I haue protested. And thus much for the order in generall, and now I will goe to the particulars.

Of the Schooles of Theologie, or Diuinity, and of other Arts and Sciences within London.

Cap. IIII.

Vhelmus Stephanides, or William Fitz Stephan, a learned Gentleman (who liued in the time of King Henry Fitz Empresse) in a little Treatise which he wrote of the description of London, making mention of the famous and priuiledged Schooles of good learnings, and liberall Arts professed of auncient time, long before his dates in London, saith: In Londonia tres principales ecclesiæ, Scholas celebres habent de priuilegio & antiqua dignitate, That is to say, in London 3. principall Churches haue in them famous Schooles of Royall priuiledge, and auncient dignitie: and those also were ordered according to the manner now vsed in Vniuersities: For as hee saith, there were in them read, not onely the Science of Diuinitie, but also the Arts of Grammar, of Rhethozike, of Logike, of Poetrie, and of Philosophy. But for breuitie, Stephanides nameth not those three Churches and auncient Schooles, but our Antiquaries affirme that they were Saint Paules, Westminster, and Saint Peters in Cornehill, hauing good warrant for this their assertion, by circumstances, traditions, and some matters of record. And because Saint Paules Church is the most magnificent: and for that also Saint Paul was the Apostle of the Gentiles, and so consequently of the Britaines, and by whom our great Auncestors were conuerted to the Christian faith, (if it bee true which Sophronius and Theodoretus, auncient Fathers write) who say, that Saint Paul after his second releasement out of prison in Rome, came into Britanny, and preached here the Gospel of our Lord Iesus Christ, and tooke Baptisme our Forefathers: and this being so, we must needes for our particular obligation and interest, not onely stile him our Apostle, but also giue to him the first place as mought be. For hee was not onely the chiefe Doctor and Apostle of the Gentiles by vocation, but also by merrit and holy exercisements: For he left to the world more Testimonies of his great labours, and of his feruent zeale, to the conuersion of heathen nations, by his many diuine writings, then all the rest of the Apostles besides. But because this matter concerneth not much this place, I referre the Reader to the treatise of Frances Dillingamus, de Comparatione Petri cum Paulo, only here according to the present purpose, that in speciall honour of this our Apostle Saint Paul, it is very probable that the good Ethelbert King of Kent, erecting and founding this Church in the yeere of our Lord DCX. in token of his religious thankefulnesse, dedicated it to this our Apostle Saint Paul. And for the aduancement of this study, and profession of Theologie, this King and other ancient and pious Benefactors, placed in this Church a Bishop, a Deane, a Chancellor, and a Treasurer, fiue Arch-deacons, and thirty Cannons, or Prebendaries, all Doctors, (or at the least) learned and graue professors of Diuinitie. And not only those honourable and reuerend prelates and professors, but also the greatest part of the best diuines of both the other Vniuersities, and of other Cathedrall Churches, and other parts of this Kingdome, doe reade and teach their holy Science publikely, both without at Saint Paules Crosse, and also within the Quyer, twise a weeke at the least throughout the yeere.

Besides that, Doctor Bradwardin, (some-times Chancellor of Paris, and afterwardes Arch-bishop of Canterbury) about the yeare of our Lord 1344. founded a Lecture of Diuinity to be read perpetually in the times of Aduent and of Lent, for the better interpreting and opening of those holy Scriptures, which were appointed by the Church to be read to the people, at those more solemne times. But now this Lecture is translated from Aduent, and Lent, to the times of the 4. Termes, and read twise a weeke, viz. euery Tuesday, and euery Thursday, during the Termes in the morning.

There is also in this Church, a Master of Musique, to teach the Art of Musique and song, to the Quiristers, and an Organist, and diuers Petti-canons, and Clearkes, and Minsters, ordayned for the dayly seruice of God in the Quire.

Furthermoe in the South Churchyard of Paules, there were two Colledges founded the one by Io. of Gaunt duke of Lancaster: the other by Doct. Holmes sometimes Chancellor of Paules and hereof the one was called Gaunt Colledge, and the other Holmes Colledge, but they were both dissolued in the raigne of King Edward the 6. some part of Gaunt Colledge is yet standing, & is that building of stone work right ouer against the great steeple house of Paules, the other was almost ouer against that, and what remaineth of them both is conuerted to dwelling houses, to Tenements, and Timber-yeards.

The Armes of this Cathedrall Church, are Gules, two Swoords in Saltor Argent garded Or: whereunto the Deane of Paules for the Armes of the Deanry, inserteth a Capitall D. betwixt the points for difference.

The auncient Schoole of Saint Paul where- in these liberall Arts, and Learnings mentioned by maister Fitz Stephan, were taught, was long since ruined, or rather (as many other) deuoured by some sacrilegious cormorant, whereof the reuerend and pious Iohn Collet, Doctor of Diuinitie, and Deane of Pauls, hauing compassion, purchased a piece of ground in the East side of the Crosse Churchyard, and built instead thereof, a faire Schoole-house of free stone, Anno Domini, MDXII. (and which, there now flourisheth) and endowed it with sufficient rents, and reuenues, to maintaine therein a Chaplaine, two Schoolemasters, and one hundred, thirty and fiue poore children, to be taught therein, the Arts of Grammer, Rhethorike, Poetry, and the Latine, and Greeke Languages.

The Armes of this Schoole are the same (with due difference) which the founder thereof bore (who was the sonne of Sir Henry Collet Knight, thrise Lord Maior of London) according to the honourable customes of other Collegiat places and houses of learning, whereunto there hath beene no other peculiar enfigne Armes Assigned, viz. a Shield sables, a Chenetron argent, charged with three Annellats sables betwixt three Windes, Tripant Argent, within a bordor Gules.

Schooles of Theologie, and of other Arts in Westminster.

Cap. V.

The Church or Abbey of Monaskery of Saint Peter called of the Site Westmonaster, and commonly of corruptly Westminster, i. Monasterium occidentale vrbi Londoni...iacens positum, (or, new Abbey, as that Monastery which stoode somtimes in Salt-Smithfield, by the like reason was called Eastminster) was founded by Sebertus King of the East Saxons, about the yeere of our Lord, DC VII. the place or Towne was auncietly called Thorney, and this Church was afterwards reedified, and much beautified and enriched by the holy King Edward, surnamed the Confessor, who placed therein Monks of the order of Saint Benedict, endowing this Abbey with fayre and goodly Lands and Lordshippes, besides the tithes of all the reuenues of the Crowne Land. After this, came King Henry the third, and pulled downe the Church, and new built, and much enlarged it. The Abbey remained and flourished vntill the raigne of King Henry the eight, who suppressing all Religious houses within this Kingdome, expelled the Monkes and Abbots out of this Monastery, and tooke away a great part of the Lands, and reuenues from it, and instead of the Abbot and Monkes, placed there a Bishoppe and a Deane, and certaine Prebendaries, but it continued but a very small time in this estate, for Doctor Thirlebey was the first and the last Bishop of Westminster, who soone after that hee was made Bishop of this new Sea, conueyed the lands of the Bishoppricke to certaine great men, and that done, he was translated from thence to Ely.

But the late Queene Elizabeth, of most glorious memory, at the mediation of the goodly and excellent Common-wealths man, Sir William Cecill, Lord Burghley, and Lord high Treasurer, restored a good part of the Lands taken from this house and Church, by the King her Father, and erected and conuerted it into a Colledge, and placed therin (besides the Deane) twelue Prebendaries, all professors of Theologie, and twelue almes-men, and for 30 Scholers, which were called the Queenes, and now are calles the Kings Schollers, and founded in this new Colledge, a publique Schoole for Grammer, Rhethoricke, Poetrie, and for the Latine, and Greeke Languages, and ordained two Schoolemasters for it, and there is also belonging to this Colleage, a Master to teach Musicke and other like, as in the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul.

And in this Church and Colledge, there bee Sermons, and Lectures of Diuinitie, read euery Sunday, and euery holliday, and now in our time the Gospell, and most Holy Lapis, Dame Frauncis Sidney, Countesse of Sussex, founded a Lecture of Diuinitie to bee read twise a weeke in the Quearne times for euer.

There was also another Colledge in Westminster, called Saint Stephans Colledge founded by King Edward the third: but that also fell by the hands of the great Dilapidator Anno Domini 1330.

The auncient Armes of this Weast Monastery, or Abbey of Westminster, were partie per fesse endente. Or and Azure, in the chiefe a Crozier erect, and a Miter: but the new armes of this Colleage of Westminster, are partly the Armes of King Edward the confessor, and partly the Armes of England, in a Chiefe. Or, betweene two red Roses.

But I must not leaue Thorney or Westminster thus, vnlesse I would be guiltie of omission, and leauing out the best matters. and the chances of my purpose, and proiect, inasmuch as this diuine Science of Theologie, is no where in this Kingdome, nor in Christendome, more learnedly, nor more frequently taught, and preached, then in the Kings chappel at Whitehall (sited in Westminster) during the time that his Maiestie keepeth his Court there, for besides the learned Sermons which are preached therein euery Sunday, and euery Tuesday, and euery Holliday, by his Maiesties reuerend and most learned Chaplaines, to wit, by his Maiesties Almoner, by the Deane of his Chappel, and the rest of the Chaplaines (all or the the most part Doctors in Theologie) and by others the most learned and most famous Diuines of this Land; there bee also thrise euery weeke during the time of Lent, many Sermons preached before the King, by the Archbishopps, Bishoppes, Deanes, chiefe Prelates, Doctors of Diuinitie, and all the chiefest and most segnall Theologians of this Kingdoome, selected and appointed to this holy seruice, in which time there is no sacred misserry, nor any necessary and notable part of Theologie, and Christian religion that is left vnhandled, and vndiscussed.

Of Saint Peters in Cornhill.

Cap. VI.

The third of those most famous Schoole-churches, mentioned or meant by William Fitz Stephan, is that of Saint Peter in Cornhill, and which by that right of Priorite, and precedence, which belongeth to antiquitie, should haue the first place, for it is held by our best Antiquaries to be the most auncient Christian Church of London, as hauing beene founded by Lucius the first Christian King of this Ile, or at the least in his time by the blessed Theanus then Archbishop of London, or by both of them about the yeare of Christ, CL. E, and it is recoded to be the most ancient Sea both of the Archbishopps, and also Bishops of London, as you may see more at large in the Catalogue of Bishops gathered and set forth by Doctor Godwin, now Bishop of Landaffe.

There was belonging to this Church of Saint Peter, a faire and well furnished Library, for the better helpe of the Schollers and students entertained therein, but that is not now extant. But there is yet belonging to this Church a Schoole, wherein are taught such arts and learnings as are taught in the Schools and Colledge of Saint Paules, and Westminster (Musicke excepted.)

And thus much for the most ancient Schools of Priuiledge, and of auncient dignitie founded in London, and mentioned by William Fitz Stephans. The Armes of this Church, and Schoole of Saint Peter in Cornhill, be Argent, a Crosse Gules empaled with S. Peters keyes Or, the field Azure.

Other places of Diuines.

Cap. VII.

But because the publike profession, and practise, and exercise of this diuine Science in this City, extendeth further then to these three last ancient Schooles and Churches: I must not omit to make known the other places of this city where this heauenly facultie of Theologie is professed, and taught publikely. For there be very many learned diuines, which be readers, and preachers in the Innes of Court, and readers, and Publots of the many parishes within, and about this City, who exercise this Art of Theology by publike preaching and teaching, not onely weekely but also daily in one or other Church of this Citie, as for better Memorie, and instance hereof, vpon euery monday there is a Sermon or Lecture in Whittington Colledge, and in, &c.

Vpon Tuesday in Saint Hellens, and in S. Stephens in Walbrooke, &c. Vpon Wednesday in S. Dunstones East, and in Alder Mary, and in S. Buttolphs Aldersgate. Vpon Thursday in S. Dunstones West, in S. Magnus, and Mary Woolchurch. Vpon Friday, in Rood-church, and in S. Clements Danes. And vpon Saturday in Allhallowes Bredstreete, yet that is but monethly: but vpon all Sundayes there be three Sermons, and Theological Lectures read and preached in euery Church throughout the whole Citie, &c.

Furthermore there be three Sermons preached at Saint Maries spittle, in the Easter holidayes, whereof there is a rehearsall made at Paules Crosse the next Sunday following. Besides there is a Lecture of Diuinitie after the manner of the Vniuersities, read euery Terme time, in Gresham Colledge: amongst other Lectures, whereof I will speake more at large, when I come to their places.

Of the Kings Colledge at Chelsey.

Cap. VIII.

Before I passe from the foure Schooles of Diuinitie, I must not omitte to make due honourable mention of the new Colledge, now in founding at Chelsey, neere Westminster, by our most redoubted, and most religious Soueraigne Lord King Iames, to the which there bee already allotted and appointed a Prouost and twelue fellowes, with other complements and endowments, proper to so Magnificent a worke. It is founded vpon certaine Lands of the Kings, situate in the East end of Chelsey, neere vnto the Thamis, and although that it bee but yet in the ground-worke and rearing, and that besides, it bee not within this Citie of London, nor the suburbs thereof, yet it is so neere a neighbour, and of so great hope, as it were a sinne scarcely veniall to leaue it out. And because the matter and the occasion, and the vse thereof, are already set downe and registred by Doctor Willet, in his Catalogue of the charitable workes done by Protestants, in his great and learned booke, intituled Synopsis Papismi, reimprinted one thousand fiue hundred and thirteene. I will deliuer it in his owne wordes, and thus he writeth.

Our worthy King (that now is) in doing god good and charitable workes hath followed Queene Elizabeths steppes, as in founding the Kings Colledge at Chelsey, ordained for Diuines to bee employed in the writing of controuersies. To the which worke that industrious man, and learned writer, the reuerend Deane of Exeter, Doctor Sutcliffe, Provost of the sayd Colledge, hath bin a large benefactor, and contributor. So necessary a worke and profitable for the good of the whole Church, what well minded man will not wish may prosper? Such as God hath enabled can doe no better then to set to their helping hands to finish the building begun, and to raise up the walles, which are now but rising out of the ground, &c. Thus much Doctor Willet.

I would here blaze the Armes of this new Colledge... if I knew what they were, but I thinke they are not yet giuen, and thus much for the Schooles and Colledges of Theologie. Now I will speake of the Colledges, and houses of the professors, and students in the Lawes, according to my promise, and orderly Methode.

Of the Colledges of the Municipall, or common Lawyers.

Cap. XI.

NOw follow in their order the Colledges, houses, or Innes of the professors of our Lawes of England: who haue within and about this Citie, fourteene houses, which our Iudicious Camden stileth discreetely Colledges, Collegia Iuris consultorum, i. Colledges of Lawyers, which are commonly called Innes of Court, and Innes of Chancery. And because this word Inne, is in this age vsed commonly and in a manner only for such houses as the Romanes called Diuersoria, Gueste Innes, and common houses for entertainment of all Trauellers for their money, therefore it must bee vnderstood that anciently here in England the houses of the greatest Lords both Spirituall and Temporall of this Kingdome (which they had here in London) were called Innes, as Oxford Inne, Warwicke Inne, and Ely Inne, &c. which we call now Oxford house, Warwicke house, Ely house: and yet vntill this day, the houses of the French Noblemen in Paris, are called Hostels, which comineth from the Latin word Hospitium (and is the same, which Inne is in English) as Ostel de mont pensier, Ostel de Burgoigne, Ostel de Guyse, &c. And which word Hostel was vsed also in our fathers age in Cambridge, for lesser and vnpriuiledged houses, wherein certaine free Scholers, and Students were lodged: therefore this must bee obserued here (to wit) wheresoeuer this word Inne hath the addition of Sergeant, Court or Chancery, it implyeth a honorable Colledge or Society of students, and professors of the Lawes of this Land.

And of these Innes, there bee in London three sorts, and in all foureteene, viz. two of Sergeants, foure of Court, and eight of Chancery.

And because that by auncient customs and by old orders of the houses of Court and Chancery, all those which were admitted into these houses were, and ought to be Gentlemen, and that of three discents at the least, as Master Gerard Leigh affirmeth, therefore they which are now admitted are Registred by the stile and name of Gentlemen. But yet notwithstanding this, if they be not Gentlemen, it is an error to thinke that the sonnes of Graziers, Farmers, Merchants, Tradesmen, and Artificers, can be made Gentlemen, by their admittance or Matriculation in the Buttrie Role, or in the Stewards Booke, of such a house or Inne of Court: for no man can bee made a Gentleman but by his father. And be it spoken (with all reuerent reseruation of Duty) the King (who hath power to make Esquires, Knights, Baronets, Barons, Viscounts, Earles, Marquesses, and Dukes) cannot make a Gentleman, for Gentilitie is a matter of race, and of blood, and of discent, from Gentile and Noble parents, and auncestors, which no Kings can giue to any, but to such as they beget.

Of the Coledges or Innes of Iudges, and of Sergeants at the Law.

Cap X.

THere be some who compile the Innes of Sergeants vnder the names of Innes of Court. And it is without question that in former times the Iudges, Barons, and Sergeants continued in those houses of Court, whereof they were fellowes, and wherein they had beene at their first comming admitted, and had studied, and practised: But afterward following the example of the houses of Parliament (which now are two houses, and auncienly were but one) these chiefe and reuerend professors of the Law left those auncient great houses of Court, and tooke lesser houses for themselues onely (and as I take it) the first peculiar house which they had, was in Holborne, situate ouer against S. Andrewes Church, and went by the name of Sergeants Inne, vntill such time as they taking these other two houses (which now they possesse) it came into the hands of the Lord Scroope, and is of him called yet Scroops Inne, although this honourable family hath also relinquished it many yeares agoe.

But if now the question bee asked why these two Innes beare the names of Sergeants Innes, and not of Iudges or Iustices, or of Barons Innes, my answere is, that because this word Sergeant is Genus (or the generall voice as the Logicians terme it) to them all, for there is no Iudge, nor Iusticer nor Baron, amongst them, but is a Sergeant by title and stile, or (which is better) by eminence and desert. And I doe not hold them to bee called Sergeants onely onely a Seruiendo, but also a seruando, to set Order, for their pregnant wits and reuerend professors be conseruators of the Law, and of Iustice: and they be inclutibly conseruators and preseruers of the Kings and common wealthes peace, and quiet, for they be the indifferent administrators, and distributers of Iustice and right, and the Oracles, and interpreters of the Lawes of this Land to euery Subiect, and therefore may be stiled as well Seruientes Legem, as Seruientes ad Legem.

But I would not haue our Antiquaries thinke that I goe about to barre them from their bearing of their Sergeants at Armes, and the Sergeants of the Kings house, nor the Sergeants at the Mace from Seruio, but I holde that Etimologie proper vnto those kind of Sergeants: And further I am so farre from giuing offence to our Antiquaries or from checking of their conceipts as I will also admit it to be proper to these reuerend professors of the Law, in respect of the great good seruice which they doe vnto God, and to their Prince, and Countrey, by the continuall paynes, which they take in their Circuites, and by their great and profound knowledge of the lawes of God and man being pious, and vertuous Gentlemen for so I hope they are all.

The Innes of Sergeants (although they bee of later foundation and erection then the rest, yet for the reuerence and eminence of the personages therein harbenged, I will borrow a little of the Law and Prerogatiue of the precedence, due to honourable Antiquity, and giue these the priorite, and precedence in this Register, and begin with them first.

Of these Innes there bee (as I sayd) two, the one in Fleetestreete, and the other in new Streete, now called Chancery Lane. Sergeants Inne in Fleetestreete, was a house or messuage belonging to the Deane, and Prebendaries of Yorke, and purchased by the reuerend Iudges, and Iustices, and Sergeants, in the Raigne of King Henry the eight, for the residence, and abode of themselues, and the rest of their brethren, and of their successors. Sergeants Inne, in Chancery Lane, was a messuage appertaining to the Bishop of Ely, but whether it were any member or appurtenance to the manno? of Hoborne Quare.

In these two Colledges, or Innes of Sergeants, I doe common, lodge, conuerse, conferre, and consult, the chiefe Iustices of either Bench, (viz) the Lord Chiefe Iustice of the Kings Bench, and the Lord chiefe Iustice of the common Bench, or common Pleas, The Lord Chiefe Baron of the Exchequer, and the rest of the reuerend and graue Iudges, Iustices, and Barons, and also the Sergeants at Law, and who are also for the most part of them employed in the Circuits, as Iudges, and as Iusticers, itinerants, in the times of the vacation to determine causes, and to giue Iustice to the Kings Liege people in all the seuerall shires of England: And all these liue in one societie, and confraternitie, and by the name of brethren.

The Armes of these Innes of Sergeants, are a sheild of Gules Paleé, and Sceptris in Saltor, for the one: and an Ibis proper in a field, Or, for the other. And thus much for the two chiefest Innes of Court or Sergeants Innes.

Of the foure Innes of Court.

Cap. XI.

THe other Innes or Colledges of our Municipalities, commonly called Innes of Court, are foure, viz. the middle Temple, the Inner Temple, Lincolnes Inne, and Grayes Inne: and they are called Innes of Court, in respect of the students, and professors residing in them. Who professe, and study that Law, which hath only course and place in the Courts of common Law, and therefore (as I take, and vnder correction) the other eight lesser Innes, or Colledges, which are distinguished from these by the names of Innes of Chauncery, and were at their first institution, onely houses of students, and professors of the Law of Equity, and of conscience (which is proper especially to the Courts of Chauncery) or at the least, of Officers, Ministers, and Clearkes, and others belonging to that high Court.

But these differences of studies are not now strictly obserued. For the Lawes now studied as well in houses of Court, as of Chancery, are alike, and all one. But the degrees, practises, auuancements, and qualities of the one, and of the other, be very different, and vnequall as shall appeare better hereafter.

Of the Temples.

Cap. XII.

OF all the Innes of Court without controuersie, the Temples, or the Templars Inne, (for so I haue seene them written in an old monument) bee the most ancient which although they came to be diuided into three seuerall houses, yet they were at the first, all but one house, and that was founded, and built, by an order of Religious Souldiers, called Templarij, i. Templars being so called of an house, which they had adioyning to the most holy and famous Temple of Ierusalem. Their vow and profession was to defend the Temple of Ierusalem, and to beare Armes, and make warre against all Infidels, and to preserue the holy Sepulchre of our Lord and blessed Sauiour Iesus Christ, from spoyle, and prophanation attempted and practised by Turkes, Sarazens, Agarens, and other Barbarous and cruell misbeleeuers, who blasphemed the most sacred name of Christ, and pursued with all malice, rage, and hostilitie, all professors of Christianitie, and extreamely infested the holy Land.

This Temple, and house of their order, here here founded in Fleetstreete, was at the first Erection of it for difference sake, called the new Temple, in respect of another Temple more auncient (and first a Monastery of Blacke Fryers) scituate part in Holborne, and part in New Streete, and then that house began to bee called the old Temple, so long as it belonged to the Templers, but afterwards they passing it away to the Bishoppe of Lincolne, it was the lodging of the Bishoppes of that Sea, a long time, vntill it came to the hands of the Earle of Southampton, Lord Chancellor of England, and now is called Southampton house, and was neuer in a more noble, or more worthy patrons handes, then at this instant it is.

But to returne to the new Temple againe: the Knights Templers (desirous to haue a seate neere to the Thames) purchased certaine Landes, and Messuages in Fleetstreete, bordering vpon the Riuer of Thames, and thereupon built a goodly large and Magnificent house, together with that faire round Synagogue-like Church, or Temple yet standing, and flourishing, and which was dedicated to the seruice of God, by Heraclius Patriarch of Ierusalem, Anno Domini 1185. and in this their house, those Templers liued and continued in great honor and opulency, for the space of 108. yeeres. For they had many fayre Lordshipps and Castles, and goodly Lands, and Seignories belonging vnto them, and their order, in many parts of England, and the Master of this order was a Baron of this Kingdome.

But this order alwell in England as in all other parts of Christendome was suddenly and at an instant suppressed, by the authority of Pope Clement the fifth, a French man, then residing and keeping his Papall Sea, in Avinion, a Towne in France, who was solicited and perswaded hereunto by some couetous Princes, but especially by Phillip le Bell, King of France, who fearing this order, for they were very mighty, both in forces and in fauour, and credite, or else enuying the prosperity and flourishing estate of these brane Religious knights, or lastly (as some say) greedily thirsting after their goodly possessions in France (which hee had in hope already swallowed vp) neuer left to incite and presse this his olde vassall, the Pope with all importunities, vntill hee had brought them to ruine and vtter destruction.

And to make the Pope the more vehement, & to incense him the more sharply against them, it was suggested that these Knights had committed many foule & most hainous offences: for they were accused of heresie, of Idolatry, of Sodomy, & of other horrible crimes as I haue seene in a Bull of this Popes: but besides this it was secretly intimated to the Pope, that they had not only compared and equalled their Patriarche vnto the Pope: but also preferred him before his Holinesse, and what crime could bee more haynous then this.

But when some of the chiefest of this order, came to be arraigned, and condemned, and put to death for these crimes, they made solemne protestation to the World, that they were wrongfully condemned, and not guilty of these crimes, for which they suffered death and torture, and which innocence (to say by the way) were no hard matter to make appeare to be so, and that by good proofe, and testimony, if this place were for it. But notwithstanding this their condemnation, and confiscation, of all their houses, goods, and Landes, yet the French King, and the other couetous Princes, fayled of their hopes, and were frustrated of the rich pray, which they gaped after; For all the Lordshippes, Castles, Townes, Landes, and houses appertaining to this order (as well to auoyde the Sacrileges of the French, and also that these Landes, and goods of the Church might no where else be put to prophane vses) were by a generall, and solemne Councell holden at Vienna, conferred vpon the other more auncient Religious Knights of the order of Saint Iohns of Ierusalem, called also Ioannites, and after Knights of Rhodes, and lastly of Malta, where they liue at this day.

And this Canon, and Ordinance of that Councell was confirmed to the Ioannites, or Knights of S. Iohns, residing here in England, by an Act of Parliament made by the three Estates of this Kingdome in the seuenteenth yeere of King Edward the second. And thus much briefely for the founding of this Temple, and withall, for the suppressing and the oppressing of the founders, and Knights Templers.

After this suppression, and condemnation of the Templers, their house here in Fleetestreet came to the handes, and occupation of diuers Lordes. For our Antiquaries & Chronologers say, that after this suppression Sir Thomas Plantagenet, Earle of Lancaster (and Cousin to the King then raigning) had it, but being after attainted of Treason, hee enioyed it but a short time.

Then next Hugh Spencer Earle of Glocester got into it, but he also was soone after attainted, and executed for Treason. After him Andomare de Valence, a noble man of the great house of Lusignan, and Earle of Pembrooke, was lodged in it for a while. But this house was Equus Sciamus to them all: and (as here it appeareth) was ordayned by God, for other better vses, and wherevnto now it serueth. After all these noble tenants and occupants, were thus exturbed, dead and gone, then certaine of the reuerend, ancient professours of the Lawes, in the raigne of King Edward the third, obtained a very large, or (as I might say) a perpetuall Lease of this Temple, or (as it must bee vnderstood) of two parts thereof, distinguished by the names of the middle temple, and the Inner Temple, from the foresayd Ioannites (then residing in their goodly house neere Smithfield called the Priory of Saint Iohns of Ierusalem) to pay yeerely Ten pounds. But the other third part called the outward Temple, Doctor Stapleton, Bishop of Exceter, had gotten in the Raigne of the former King Edward the second and conuerted it to a house for him and his successors Bishops of Exceter, in whose possession it continued by the name of Exceter Inne, vntill till Queene Maries time, and then the Lord Paget Principall Secretary, found meanes to haue it conueyed vnto him, and to his heires, and rendred it. After this, it came by purchase, to the high and mighty Prince, Thomas the late Duke of Norfolke, and he passed it ouer to the Earle of Leicester, who bequeathed it to his Sonne, Sir Robert Dudley, and of whom the late Earle of Essex purchased it, and it is now called Essex house: hauing first beene (as I haue said) a part of the Templers house, and in regard of the situation thereof, without the Barre, was called the outward or vtter Temple, as the others for the like causes were called the middle Temple, and the Inner Temple.

The Armes and Ensignes of the old and new Templers.

CHAP. XIII.

BEcause I shall be longer in the Blazon of the Armes of the Temples, then otherwise I shall bee of the rest, and became the former Chapter of these Temples hath beene somewhat long, I will assigne to this businesse, a peculiar Chapter, concerning the Armes of the Knights Templers. It appeareth vpon record, and in good authors, that they bore a Shield Argent, charged with a Crosse Gules, and vpon the Nombrill thereof, a holy Lambe: and this I haue seene enluminned, in an auncient manuscript booke of the foundation, and Statutes of this order, belonging to the right honourable, and most learned noble Gentleman, the Lord William Howard of Naworth. But before they tooke this deuise, they bare a horse (as Mathew Paris writeth) with two men riding vpon him: and this (as hee sayth) was engrauen in their common Seale, and this I will bee bold to say; had a very honorable beginning and was a symbole of piety, howsoeuer they which loued to depraue and make scandalous, and ridiculous interpretations, of euery thing, or (at the least) not vnderstanding the true cause of the taking of this deuise, would haue it supposed that it was taken, and deuised to show and expresse the poore, and needy beginnings, and first estate of this order, as hee being driuen for lacke of horses to ride two vpon one horse: but the truth is, this was an emblem of Loue, and Charity, and a true Hieroglife of ingenious kindnesse, and noble courtesie of soldiers, and of none more exercised, and put in practise, then by these religious Knights, who being martiall men, and men of Noble mindes, when they happened to see any other Christian souldier Wounded, or hurt, or sicke, lying vpon the way, they would take him vp vpon their owne horse, and carry him out of danger, and into some place of safety, where he might haue cure, and releefe.

Neither was this a curtesie onely vsed by Christian knights, but euen by the Pagans and Heathen themselues, for wee may reade in Ariosto, that when Rinaldo, and Ferrau the Moore Knights errant of Charlemaine, had fought vntill they were both tired, and also hurt, and therefore thought good to adiorne the triall for the victory vntill another day; and by reason that during this parly, and breathing Rinaldoes horse was strayed away, the gallant confident Moore offered Rinaldo a part of his Horse, and in briefe desired Rinaldo to get vp behind him, and hee would carry him, whether hee was to goe: Rinaldo accepted this honorable Courtesie, and leaped vp behind Ferrau, and rode behinde him. And I my selfe haue knowne a gallant Gentleman yet liuing, who after a skirmish, finding a noble Knight on foot (his Horse being killed vnder him) tooke vp this Knight behind him, and carried him into a place of safety. But the report of this Pagan Knights courtesie is so well set downe by Ariosto, as it is very well worthy the Reading, and obseruation also, and therefore I will transcend thither.

Il Pagan &c.

Non lascio a piedi il buon figliuol 'Amone,
Con preghi inuita, & al fin toglie in groppa, & per l'ormed' Angelica galoppa:
O gran bontà de cauallieri antiqui,
Eran riuali, eran di se diuersi,
Esi sentian de gli a sperì colpi iniqui,
Per tutta la persona anche dolersi:
Et pur per seluo oscure, & calli obliqui,
Insieme van senza sospetto hauersi:
Di quattro stroni il destrier punto arriua,
Done vna strada in diuersi dipartiua, &c.

Which verses I haue aduentured thus plainely to turne into an English Octaua, and could haue beene well content to haue spared the Labour, had not Sir Iohn Harrington discouled from the author. And yet I must confesse he hath performed an excellent part of a translator in that his English Orlando.

The Pagan would not suffer Almons sonne,
To goe on foote, but prayeth him to ride,
And takes him vp behind him at the last,
And then pursues Angelica with hast.

O Vertue rare of Noble Knights of yore,
Rivalls they were, and in faith opposite.
And both their bodies yet were very sore,
Of enterchanged blowes when they did fight,
Yet without doubt, or dread this gallant Moore,
Through vncouth wayes rid with the Christian Knight,
And thus their horse with foure spurres prickt amayne, Brought them into a way which parts in twaine.

But now to conclude, and close vp this Chapter with the deuices, and the Blazon of the Armes and Enfignes, of the Moderne Templers. It is thought fitte by men of Art, and authoritie in these affaires, to retaine both these auncient deuices, and Armes of the olde Templers before remembred for the choice, and vse of these two Colledges of Iuriconsults, placed in this auncient Temple, or house of Templers.

But if the fellowes and Gentlemen of the Inner Temple, haue taken for the deuice, or Enfigne of their Colledge, a Pegasus, or flying Horse Sables or Gules, vpon a Shield Or. As I heare that they did in the Raigne of the late Queene of immortall memory, then are they already fayrely armed. And because the vtter Temple neither is, nor was, euer any Colledge, or Society of Students, and therefore not to bee considered here, I will leaue the choice of either of these olde deuices, and Enfignes to the Gentlemen and fellowes of the middle Temple, they not hauing as yet to my knowledge chosen, or appropriated any Enfigne to their Society or Colledge, to whom and to their house, and Studies, I wish all honor, and prosperity, for my particular obligation, hauing beene sometimes a fellow, and Student (or to confesse a truth) a freeraind in that most honourable Colledge.

And I must not omitte here to intimate that for the better increase of Piety, and exercise of deuotion, and Christian Religion, there is in the Temple church (common to both these Colledges) a Minister and a learned preacher, but by the olde foundation there was placed one Master, and foure Priests, and payed out of the reuenues of the Ioanites.

Of Lincolnes Inne.

CHAP. XIII.

THe next Colledge, or Inne of Court to these Temples, is Lincolns Inne the auncient Mile, and scituate in new-Streete, or Chancery Lane, and a part of it was of olde time the messuage, or mansion house of a Gentleman called William de Hauerhyll, Treasurer to King Henry the third who was attainted of Treason, and his house, and landes confiscate to the King, who then gaue his house to Ralph de nouo villa, Chauncellour of England, and Bishoppe of Chichester, and he built there a faire house for him and his successours Bishopps of Chichester, as Matthew Paris hath recorded: And it continued in the possession of the Bishops of Chichester, vntill the time of King Henry the seuenth, when it was conueyed to Iudge Sulliard, and to other Feoffees, and this Iudge, and his posteritie held the inheritance of it vntill the raigne of the late Queen Elizabeth, of glorious memory, and then Sir Edward Sulliard of Esser, sold the Estate of inheritance of this house, with the appurtenances, to the Gentlemen, the Benchers of Lincolnes Inne, as I am ascertained by that most worthy and learned Gentleman, Sir Iames Lea Knight, late Lord chiefe Iustice of the Kings Bench in Ireland, an auncient fellow of his honourable Colledge, and an excellent antiquary. And notwithstanding that part of the inheritance of this house, had first beene belonging to the sayd Hauerhyll, and after to the Bishoppes of Chichester, yet the auncient Students, and professors in this house, did not admit the name of Haverhill Inne, nor of Chichester Inne, nor of Sulliards Inne, but of Lincolnes Inne, although neuer any Earle of Lincolne had any Estate of inheritance in this house, nor in the one halfe as it is, but I deny not but that Sir Hen. Lacy, Earle of Lincoln, entoyed that part of it which was made out of the old monastery of the black fryers, giuen to him by King E. the first, which friers left that, and went into the new monastery of black-fryers founded within London, by Doctor Kilwarby Archbishoppe of Canterbury, and it is likely also that this Earle of Lincolne got some part of the Bishoppe of Chichesters ground, or housing towards the enlarging of his new house in Lincolns Inne, which he prepared and built in the raigne of King Edward the first, and therein he dyed, An. Dom. 1310. And not onely that house, but also Chichester Inne, and Haverhyll Inne, and diuers other messuages purchased by the Benchers of this Colledge, and fellowship, and layed into it, goe now, and haue long since gone by the name of Lincolnes Inne. i. de Nervis.

And as it seemes, and is most probable, the Benchers of this Colledge, tooke an Estate of long time by lease, soone after the death of the Earle of Lincolne, who died in the Raigne of King Edward the second, by which estate they held this house, vntill their purchase from Sir Edward Sulliard lastly mentioned.

Neither is there any mention vpon record of any certaine flourishing estate of this Colledge, vntill King Henry the first his Raigne, at which time it appeareth by the records, and Roles of the house, that it was then a flourishing, and a fully established Colledge, and full of famous professors, and Students of our municipall Lawes.

And since that time it hath beene much enlarged, and beautified with goodly buildings, for the in the Raigne of King Henry the eight, Sir Thomas Louell (hauing beene sometimes a fellow of this house) built the Gate-house, and set vp in the Frontispice the Armes of the foresayd Earle of Lincolne, as the Armes of this House, together with his owne, and since that, the Benchers haue builded many very faire Lodgings, and Chambers, and still continue in building, and enlarging, and beautifying of it.

And now according to my methode to say something of the Armes of this house. The Gentleman of this house (as I take it) haue beene willing to retayne the ancient Armes of the sayd Earle of Lincolne (viz.) a Lyon purple rampant in a Shield Or, finding the same in the windowes of the hall, at their comming thither and with which as a thing more proper, and Authentical, I would haue wished to be, empaled, the Armes of the Bishops of Chichester the auncient Lords of this house, which are Azure, our Saviour Christ, Or.

But Sir Iames Lea, tolde me there was lately a coate deuised for this house, viz. Azure, seme de fers de mouline, Or. With a purple Lyon in a Canton, Or. And now keeping on my way, I will passe to their Noble neighbor Grayes.

Of Grayes Inne.

CHAP. XV.

GRayes Inne, was sometimes the Inne, or Lodging of the auncient and Noble Barons the Lords Gray, from whence it tooke the name.

It is scituate within the manor of Pirpole in Holborne, being an ancient Prebend of the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul in London, as the right reuerend Father the Bishoppe of Ely, Doctor Andrewes, (who was lately a Prebendary residentiary in Pauls, and well acquainted with the Archiues, and euidences of that Church) hath enformed me.

An estate of this house was taken in the Raigne of King Edward the third: by the Gentlemen, and professors of the common Law, as Master Saintlow Kneviton, a learned Gentleman, and a rare Antiquary, and an auncient fellow of this Colledge, affirmeth out of his owne search, and readings of Antiquities, concerning this house.

In this present age there hath beene great cost bestowed therein, vpon faire buildings and very lately the Gentlemen of this house, purchased a messuage, and a Curtillage, scituate vppon the South-side of this house, and thereuppon haue erected a fayre Gate, and a Gatehouse for a more conuenient, and more honourable passage into the high Streete of Holborne, whereof this house stood in much neede. For the other former Gates were rather Posterns then Gates.

For Armes this house or Colledge might (by the auncient custome of honorable Fauour, liberally indulged in these behalfes) beare the armes of the Lord Gray, the auncient possessor, or inhabitant of this house, but differenced with a border Argent, and Azure counter-changed, or such like conuenient difference. But the Gentlemen of Grayes Inne haue not long since chosen for deuice, or Enfigne of their house, A Griffon, Or, in a field Sables, and so they are furnished already very well.

Of the Studies of the foure Innes of Court.

CHAP. XVI.

HEre will I make a briefe relation of the manner of life, and studies, exercises, and proceedings in these foure last Innes of Court, according to my owne obseruation, and experience, and shall desire thee (gentle Reader) to take it in good part. Vel si quid seu rectius isto candidius imperti, &c. according to the old Poets honest motion. But to the matter.

In these foure Innes of Court, viz. the two Temples, Lincolnes Inne, and Grayes Inne, doe Cohabite, Common, Study, and practise young Gentlemen, the lonnes of the best or better sort of Gentlemen of all the Shires of England (and which haue beene formerly trodde, and brought vp liberally in good Schooles, and other Vniuersities) who at their first admittions into the house, are called Students and Gentlemen, of such and such an Inne of Court. And after some yeeres well imployed in the Studies of their professions, viz. The municipall Law of England, they obtaine the degree and stile of Inner Barristers, and at the seauen yeeres ende, they proceede or become outward Barristers, and are then sayd to be called to the Barre, and shortly after they are allowed to make publike profession and practise of the Law in all Courts and to giue Counsell vnto all Clients. And hereupon they are also called Councellors at the Law, and learned Councell. After seme more yeeres, and as they grew in Learning, and credit, they come to degrees of higher dignity and reputation, and are allowed to read the Law publikely in their halls (which they performe with much magnificence and solemnity) and are henceforth called Readers, and if after this they come to read againe, they are called double Readers, and also Apprentifes at the Law, of the French word apprendre to learne, because they haue by this time so well learned the Law, as they are able to teach, and to instruct all others, being indeede such as the Antecessors were amongst the olde Ciuilians. And lastly they are called Benchers, and Antients, of the credite and authority which they haue in their houses, and power to gouerne the affaires of their Society, and state, and to reforme matters of offence, and misdemeanors committed by any fellowes, or Students of the same Colledge, as maisters, and Presidents in the Colledges of the other Vniuersities: but many of these Professors, after they become to be Readers, and are more pregnant, and iudiciall then the rest, as also for their great Reading, and Learning, and for their fauour and credite in the State, are called by the King out of those houses of Courts to pleade, and serue his highnesse at the Barres of his high Courts of the Kings Bench, of the common Pleas, of the Exchequer, and also of the Chauncery, and Starre-chamber, and other Courts, and haue place of audience before other Councellors at the Law, and they are inuested in a peculiar habite, and weare a white coife, whereupon they were called Sergeants of the Coife but most commonly Sergeants at the Law, & they are lodged from henceforth in one of the Sergeants Innes before mentioned, and of the Iudges and Iustices are called Fratres, Vt Supra.

All these degrees and titles of preferment, and dignity are giue t vnto them as the degrees be giuen to graduats, and Candidats, in the other Vniuersities where they are called Lau reats Bacheloes, Licentiats, Maisters in Arts, and Doctors, according to their Proficiency, Continuance, and Worthinesse.

But all the Gentlemen of these houses, are by one common name and stile called, Sacy: id est, fellowes. Concerning the Scholler like exercises which they haue in their houses: they haue conferences and disputations which they call Moots, and Pleadings, and putting cases, and Leaures, and Readings vpon the Lawes and Statutes of England. But these ordinary Lectures, and Readings, are not performed with such magnificence, as those more solemne readings are, (whereof I spake before) which are onely kept in the Lent, and in August, viz. twise a yeere. But all these readings, as well the greater as the lesser, serue much for the helpe and instruction of all professors there assembled, but chiefe lie of the young Students, and Pupones, who also if they bee diligent, and desirous to attaine to the better knowledge of the Law, doe not onely frequent these Moots, and Lectures holden in their houses but also in the Termne times resort to Westminster hall to heare the pleadings and arguements, and iudgement of the best, and chiefest professors and Iudges of the Law. Thus then to conclude, these gentlemen by their long continuall, painfull, and diligent studies, and chiefely by their due seruing of God (who is the onely and best rewarder of vertue, and honest mouerty) gette much Wealth, and attaine to great places, and dignities, and Offices in the Law and in the common Wealth, and become rich, and famous Lawyers, Worthy members of the common Wealth, and great and much honoured magistrates in this Kingdome, and founders of many Worshipfull, and Noble Families in this realme, and so herein the old Maxime of the ciuill law is doubly, and euery way verified Vigilantibus iura subueniunt.

Moote or Mote in old Saxon signifieth a generall assemblie or meeting: of meet which may b latined conventus, or coitio.

Of the Innes of Chancery and first of Thauis Inne.

CHAP. XVII.

NOw I come in due order to the lesser houses, and Colledges of Lawyers, called Innes of Chauncery: why they are called so, I haue declared before, and therefore I shall not nede here to repeat it and I must and will begin with Thauis Inne, for besides that at my first comming to London, I was admitted for probation into that good house, I take it to be the eldest Inne of Chancery at the least in Holborne, and so may Iustly challenge precedence by Seigniority, and antiquitie: it was before the dwelling of an honest Citizen called Iohn Thauie an armorer, and was rented of him in the time of King Edward the 3. by the chiefe professors then of the Law, viz. Apprentises, as it is yet extant in a record in the hallings, and whereof my Lord Coke, shewed to me the transcript, but since that time it was purchased for the Students and other professors of the Law of Chauncery by the Benchers of Lincolns Inne, about the Raigne of King Henry the seauenth, and retaineth the name of the olde Landlord or owner, master Thauie. The Armes of this house are Azure, 2. Barbes in Saltor Or, with a Cr. Argent, in a chiefe Sables.

Of Furnivals Inne.

CHAP. XVIII.

FVrnivals Inne (as it appeareth vpon record of the first yeere of King Richard the second) was the house of Sir Wil. Furnivall knight, without any other addition or title of honor. But doubtlesse that Sir William owner of this Inne, was a Baron and Lord Furnivall, whose heire Generall was after married to Iohn Lord Talbot, created Earle of Shrewsbury, by King Henry the 6. and the Earle had this house with other goodly inheritances in Dalwac with his wife, the daughter and heire of the Lord Furnivall. And the late Sir George Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury sold the inheritance of this house in the beginning of Queene Elizabeths raigne, or there about, to the Benchers of Lincolnes Inne, for a Colledge or house for the Gentlemen Students, or practisers of the Law of Chauncery, they hauing before but hired it for yeerely rent, of the foresaid Lords. And this doth maister Knueton affirme out of his certaine knowledge.

Therefore the Armes of this house must bee the Armes of this Noble Lord, the ancient owner (whose name it yet beareth) according to the fauourable custome in these cases, and with a conuenient difference viz. Argent a bend betwixt fiue Martlets Gules in a bodder Azure.

Of Barnards Inne

CAP. XIX.

BArnards Inne, called also formerly Mackworths Inne, was in the time of King Henry the first, a messuage belonging to Doctor Iohn Mackworth, Deane of Lincolne, and beeing in the occupation of one Barnard, at the time of the conuersion thereof, into an Inne of Chauncery, it beareth Barnards name still to this day. The Armes of this house, are those of Mackworth, viz. party per pale endented Ermin and Sables, a Cheueron Gules fretted Or.

Of Staple Inne,

CAP XX.

STaple Inne was the Inne or Hostell of the Merchants of the Staple (as the Tradition is) whereof with vntill I can learne better matter, concerning the antiquity and foundation thereof, I must rest satisfied. But for latter matters I cannot chuse but make report, and much to the praise and commendation of the Gentlemen of this house, that they haue bestowed great costs in new building a fayre Hall of Bricke, and two parts of the outward Court yards, besides other lodgings in the garden, and elsewhere, and haue thereby made it the fayrest Inne of Chauncery in this Vniuersitie.

For Armes or Ensigne, this Inne beareth Gord, vn pacquet de Laine Argent.

Of Cliffords Inne.

CAP. XXI.

CLiffords Inne was first the house of Maccomus Herley, and was passed to King Edward the fifth for debts, and it is commonly sayd to haue beene the Inne of longing of the Lord Cliffords, but in the records of the raigne of King Ed. the 2. it is written, the house of Robert Cliffords, plans queue (as the French men say) without any addition, or other stile, to whom King Edward the second gaue this house: and was let to students in the Law, by Dame Isabell, widdow to the sayd Robert Clifford in the eighteenth yeere of King Edward the third, for foure pounds of Annuall rent. Yet I embrace their opinion which holde it to haue beene the house of the auncient Lords Cliffords, ancestors of the Earles of Cumberland, for the antique building of it, and the auncient and honorable Coates of Armes, set vp in the hall and other places of the house, shew it to haue bin the mansion of a Noble personage.

The Armes of this house bee the Armes of the auncient founders thereof, the Lord Cliffords by the customary liueries, viz. Checky, Or, and Azure, a fesse and bordure Gules, Besante sable.

Of Clements Inne.

CAP. XXII.

CLements Inne was a messuage belonging to the Parish of Saint Clement Danes: the deuise whereof is, as an anchor, without a Rocke with a capitall C. couchant vpon it, and this is graued in stone ouer the gate of Clements Inne. It seemeth to bee a Hieroglyphike, or Rebus (as some coniecture) figuring herein Saint Clement, who bearing his Pope, and so reputed head of the Church, (and the Church being resembled to a Shippe) both his name and office are expressed in this deuise of the C. and the anchor. But if it be true which Iacobus de Voragine, & Surius write in their Legends of Saints, to wit, that S. Clement was bound to a great anchor, and so throwne into the Sea by the commandement of Traian the Emperour: then it must needes bee, that the occasion of the deuise of the anchor for S. Clement, came originally from the Act of his Martyrdome.

Of New Inne.

CAP. XXIII.

NEw Inne was a guest Inne, the signe whereof, was the picture of our Lady, and thereupon it was also called our Ladies Inne: it was purchased, or hired by Sir John Fineux, chiefe Iustice of the Kings bench, in the raigne of King Edward the fourth fo. 6. li. per Annum, to place therein those students of the Law, who were lodged in the little old Baily, in an house called S. Georges Inne, neere the vpper end of S. Georges lane but some say the going in was ouer against S. Sepulchers steeple, and reputed to haue borne the most auncient Inne of Chancery, when it stood: but now and long since it hath bene conuerted into Tenements.

The Armes of New Inne, are, vert, a pot of flowers, Argent.

Of Lyons Inne.

Cap. XXIIII.

LYons Inne was also a guest Inne or hostery held at the signe of the Lyon, and purchased by Gentlemen practizers and students in the Law in the raigne of King Henry the eight, and conuerted to an Inne of Chancery.

It beareth checky Or, and Argent, a Lyon Saliant Sable.

Of Strand Inne, and of the Studies of these Innes of Chancery.

Cap. XXV.

THere was also another Inne of Chancery in the Strand called Chester Inne, or Strand Inne, which together with the houses of the Bishops of Chester, of Worcester, and of Landaff, and the church of S. Mary in the Strand, were all in the verge of our Lord by DVDLEY. swallowed vp in the foundation of the goodly Palace built by the Duke of Somercet, Vncle Paternell to King Edward the first, and thus much for the foundation and institution of these Innes of Chancery. For the other matters belonging vnto them, I am able to say by mine owne experience, that in these houses of Chancery, Inne and common together, Attorneis, Secretaries, and Clarks, belonging to the Courts, as well of mere and strict Law, as of equity and conscience. The chiefe or gouernour in euery Inne of these Innes of Chancery, is called Principall. And in these houses or Colledges the Lyones and young Gentlemen, at their comming vp, are initiated to make first here an essay and a tryall of the study of the Law, which if they like, and haue a desire to proceed they remoue shortly after, to one of the Innes of Court, whereunto that house of Chancery belongeth: for hee can take no degrees in an Inne of Chauncery, but such as I here last names, which bee rather seruices and procurations, then aduancements and honours. Euery Inne of Court, hath two or three Innes of Chancery belonging vnto it, viz. to the middle Temple belong New Inne, and sometimes Strand Inne. To the Inner Temple belong Chifferds Inne, Lyons Inne, and Clements Inne. Thauis Inne, and Lumbards Inne, are members of Lincolnes Inne, Staple Inne, and Barnards Inne, belong to Grays Inne, and this maketh mee the rather to bee of their opinion, which estimate that all these houses of Chancery were founded, purchased, and established by the professours and Gentlemen of these houses of Court; And for confirmation of this conceit, twise euery yeere in Lent and in August, a learned Gentleman is chosen out of the ranke and degree of Counsellers, to come to heare the Moots, and disputations, and exercise of the young students and to read a Law Lecture in euery of these houses of Chancerie, belonging to that Inne of Court, from which this reader hath his mission.

But for the going of one of these yong Students, after this his probation to one of the houses of Court (whereunto that Inne of Chancery belongeth) there is no necessitie, for he is at his choise to goe to any other of the houses of Court: But if he choose any of the others then his admission into that fellowship and colledge, will be somewhat the more costly.

Of the sixe Clerkes Inne, or Kedermisters Inne.

Cap. XXVI.

I Must not leaue out of this mention of Chauncerymen and Chancery matters, the Inne or common house of the learned Gentlemen, the Attorneis in the high Court of Chancery, comm only called the Office of the sixe Clarkes of the Chauncery. They are a Society of Gentlemen learned in the Lawes, and were at first Priestes, and thereupon called Clarkes (for in auncientely all Churchmen were called.) These Clarkes liue and lodge, and commen together in one house in Chauncery Lane, purchased, and accommodated for them by Master John Kedermister Esquier, one of this Society, and a most skilfull man in his profession, and as faithfull a man to his friends and clients, as euer was in his place, as I can testifie by good proofe. Their house was in auncient times, the Inne of the Abbot of Necton in Lincolne shire, and was since the house of one Herlestre, and of him it was called Herlestres Inne. But now it is (or ought to be called) the sixe Clarkes Inne, or Kedermisters Inne, of the aforenamed Founder thereof. And it is right worthy to haue the title of an Inne of Chauncery, because that onely chauncery-men liue, and onely chauncery matters are handled and recyded in this house, And it may for Armes, beare the armes of Kedermister the Founder thereof, viz. Azur two chewrons Or, betweene three besants, within a bordet Argent differencing.

The 6. clarks could not lawfully take wines dutil it was permitted to them by an act of Parliament, made Anno 14. Henry the eight.

Of

Of Bacons Inne, or Corsiters Inne.

Cap. XXVII.

IOthe sayd Clarks Inne may be added the Inne of the Corsiters or rather Corsiters, founded by the right honorable Sir Nicholas Bacon Knight (Lord Keeper of the great Seale of England) a very wise and goodly Gentleman, situated also in Chancery lane, ouer against Lincolnes Inne. Their Office and profession is to make all originall writs to bee serued and sent into all parts and shires of England. And these Clarkes be in number 24. and this is all that I can say of this Inne, hauing small or none acquaintance, either with the Officers or Office, but this I may note, that in respect that some men deriue the name of Corsiter a Curtin which is as well reincountred as that by P. Paxton, for his cloake, viz. Cloake quasi Cleaueke for those Gentlemen be neither polls nor pursenants. I like their conceit and coniecture better which derive it from Chorista, and which commeth of Chorus, and thereof wee make Chorister, or Corsiter in English, and corruptly Corsicer: and this seemeth the more probable, because aunciently all, or the most part of the Officers and Ministers of the Chancery or Court of conscience (for so the Chancery hath beene called) were Churchmen, Diuines, and Canonists, as for example, first the chiefe Officer of this Court was a Bishoppe, and was called Cancellarius, a Councellor, because he sate intra Cancellos, that is to say, in Chauncells or places lettised after the maner of Chancels in Churches, as P. Pichard, a very learned man, hath well obserued. The second Officer in this conscionable Court, is the maister of the Roules, who was wont to be an eminent Ecclesiasticall person (to wit:) either a Deane, or Warden, or Prouost, of some Cathedrall, or collegiate Church: for it is an Office which requireth a iudge, and a very carefull, and religious man. The maisters of Chancery were Doctors of Diuinitie, and of Cannon Law, and had Prebendes and dignities in such Churches as he forsaw. The sixe Clearkes were seculer Priests (as it hath beene intimated before) and as their habits and shauen crownes, yet extant vpon their monuments in the Temple Church, and else where, doe sufficiently testifie, though there were no other proofe thereof. It is then consequently fit and proper that among all these churchmen, and next to them should follow Choristers, being so necessary, that there is not any principall Church nor any honourable Chappell, which can bee without them. And furthermore in those dayes the counsellaries, or Ghostly fathers were the examiners of the Chauncery, as men aptest by their function, for such a charge and employment, &c. Et omnium rerum est Vicissitudo, and that hath made all the Officers now in Chancery, to be laymen, and who notwithstanding may be as honest, and as pious as Clergie men, prouided that they be men of good vnderstanding, for that rule is infallible, Ad pietatem requiritur scientia.

The Armes of this Society, be the honourable founders creest, viz. a Sanglier Crimin passant, in a feucheon Azure.

Of the Colledge of Ciuilians, called Doctors Commons.

Cap. XXVIII.

THe Professours of the ciuill, or imperiall Lawes, (being also Canonists and professours of the Spirituall and Ecclesiasticall Lawes) haue a Colledge or common house, commonly called the Doctors commons, situate vpon Saint Bennets hill neere Paules Wharfe: which was purchased or prouided for them about the beginning of Queene Elizabeths raigne, by Master Henry Haruey, Doctor of the ciuill and canon Lawes, Master of Trinity hall in Cambridge, Prebendary of Ely, and Deane of the Arches, a reuerend, learned, and good man, whom I being a young scholler knew. Before which time the Ciuilians and Canonists were lodged in Paper notter row, in a meaner and lesser, and lesse conuenient house, now a Tauerne lins one by the signe of the Queenes head, which was sometime a house for a Prebendary residentiary of Saint Paules Church, when there were many more Residentiaries then are now: this house thus procured for them by Doctor Haruey, was lately called Mountioy house, because the Lord Mountioy lay in it many yeares, but it was also the house of a Residentiary of Paules, as was likewise that house in Paper notter row, called Lovell Inne (of Doctor Fulco Lovell, an auncient cannon of Saint Paules, a Gentleman of a good house, and a good Housekeeper, and Archdeacon of Colchester, as his Epitaph in the North side of the Quier there doth.) And that house in Warwick Lane, where the Office of the Kings remembrancer in the Exchequer is now kept, and sometimes called Stafford Inne, and that wherein Master Blackwell dwelt in Warwick Lane also, and that house in Ivy Lane, where the Lord Treasurers remembrancer is lodged, and the next to it called in the Records Hospitium Ioannis de Sancto Laurentio, and that wherein Master Sergeant Branchwaits dwelt in Amen corner, and that wherein Doctor Dale (late Master of the Requests to Queene Elizabeth) dwelt in the South Churchyard, and the three Tunnes Taueme, ouer against the crosse Church-yard gate, and the Paulehead Taueme, and the Paulehead Inne, and the next house to the Doctors Commons, called Camera Diane in their olde Records, and diuers others were sometimes houses of Residentaries, Prebendaries, and Cannons of Paules, and all which be now in the hands of Laymen: But to returne to the matter, Doctor Harvey obtayned a leafe of this new Colledge of Ciuilians for a hundred yeares of the Deane, and Chapter of Paules, for the Annuall Rent of fiue markes, wherein are now lodged, and liue in commons the Iudge of the high Court of the Admiralty being a Doctor of the ciuill Lawes, and Lieutenant to the Lord high Admirall of England, Ireland, Gascoine, Guyenne, Normandy, and Calice, &c. for matters of Law, and indenture in causes maritime, be they criminall, ciuill, or Capitall: Item, the Deane of the Arches being Doctor of the Ciuill and Spirituall Lawes: Item, the Commissioners delegate or Iudges of the Court of the delegates. The Vicar generall. The Chancellours of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and of the Lord Bishop of London. The Walker or Custos, or Commissary of the Court of prerogatiue Cantuariens. The auditor Causarum, or Iudge of the Court of Audience, and so many of the Iudges of the Court of high Commission, as be professed Ciuilians: as also the Doctors of Ciuill, and Cannon Lawes, which be aduocates in all the seuerall Courts together with the Procurators, or Proctors in those Courts, being commonly called Licentiats, and Batchelers, in the Ciuill and Cannon Lawes.

All these I say are lodged and hosted in this 3rd Colledge, and had beene lodged in a much more beautifull and magnificent Colledge, if the designes of the late most renowned and pompous Prelate Doctor Thomas Wolsey Cardinall of Yorke, had succeded well and taken effect, for he was purposed to build a faire Colledge of Stone, for them in London, in hereof my very worthy and learned friend Sir Robert Cotton, Knight Baronet, hath seene the plot and modell in papers as hee hath affirmed to me. This magnificent Cardinall being preuented by the Kings displeasure this with other good proiects and honourable workes miscarried, and either vtterly perished, or were extreamely crushed and maymed, as the Colledge at Ipswich, and that of Christs Church in Oxford, besides others.

The Armes of this Colledge be Gules, 3. tresuels verd vpon a bend Argent in a border verd, in a perpetuall remembrance of the 3rd founder thereof, by whose worshipfull firname this coate (the bozder excepted) is borne.

Of the Colledge of Physicians, and of the Lectures of Anatomie and Chirurgerie.

Cap. XXIX.

THe Physicians or Doctors of Physick, and learned Professors of that Art, and Faculty, haue their Colledge in Knightriders Streete, neere to the Colledge of the Ciuilians, it was founded by Doctor Butts, and other vertuous and famous Physitians, in the time of King Henry the 8. and they by the fauour of Cardinall Woolsey, then Lord Chancellor of England, obtained a Charter, with many faire priuiledges and immunities of the King. Anno 10. Regni sui, wherein by expresse words, the King did erect and constitute in London a perpetuall Colledge of certaine graue and learned professours of the Art of Physicke, within the Citie and Suburbes of London and within seuen myles thereof euery way: and that none but they, and such as they should allow and authorize, should bee permitted to practise within the sayd Citie or limits.

This King also ordayned by his Letters Pattents, confirmed by Act of Parliament, that out of the most graue and learned Physitians of this Colledge, there should be eight called Elects, chosen for terme of life, for the gouernment of the affaires of this Colledge: and one first and expert Doctor, in this Science of physicke, should be yeerely chosen out of these eight Elects, to be the head and chiefe of all, and by the name of a president of this colledge, or communalitie, to ouersee, correct, and gouerne for one yeere the sayd Colledge, and all other of the same Society, and their affaires. And to haue a common Seale to bee imployed in the businesse of the said President and Colledge. And it is graunted therein also that the President, and the Doctors of this Colledge, may make Statutes, and Ordinances for the gouernment, onelight, and correction of the sayd colledge or communalty of all men practising Physicke within the sayd City of London, and within seuen myles round about it. And furthermore, that there shall bee chosen yeerely foure gouernours out of the Doctors of this colledge, to haue the survey, search, correction, and gouernance of all the Physitians, as well forreine, as English, using the faculty of Physicke, within London, and within seuen myles compasse, together, with punishing of them for not well exercising or not well vsing their Art: and also the survey and search of all their medicines to be giuen or minister'd by them to any of the Kings leege people, sicke or diseased, &c.

Item, it is further enacted that the President, and the Elects, and gouernours, and Doctors of this sayd Colledge, may yeerely authorize, and appoint foure Doctors or professors of their Colledge, to enter any Apothecaries house, and to search and to view all his Waires and Drugges, and to burne or otherwise to destroy all such Waires and Druggs as they shall find to bee defective, or corrupted, and not fit to bee ministred in any medicine to sicke and infirme persons &c.

Item, that no physitian of this colledge shall bee impanelled in any Iury, nor charged to keepe watch and ward, nor beare any office in the City or Suburbes, and all this was confirmed by acts of Parliament, made Anno 14. and 32. Henry the 8. as may be seene in the booke of Statutes more at large.

Since which time there hath beene a purpose pose to found a Lecture of Physick in this Colledge, but in respect that all the Doctors and Fellowes of this Colledge were expert and well learned in that Art, it was not thought necessary to be read amongst them there. But rather that there should be a Lecture of Chirurgery and Anatomy, read by some one of these Doctors, for the better enabling of the Chirurgians or Surgians in and about London, wherein many had not beene bred in Schooles. And hereupon Doctor Richard Caldwell a learned Physitian, and a good man propounded this matter to the right honourable Iohn Lord Lumley, a most noble and vertuous Gentleman, who at this Doctors instance, gaue a fee of twenty pounds by the yeare, for the maintainance of a Lecture of Chirurgery, to be read in the Colledge euery Wednesday and Friday for euer, by a Doctor of Physick, and fellow of that Colledge.

And for the Anatomie Lecture, there is one read by one of the Doctors of this Colledge also, at the Chirurgeans Hall, vpon the proper naturall body of a found man newly executed for Fellony, lent to them by the Sheriffes and Capitall Magistrates for that purpose: But the times of this Lecture of Anatomie are not certaine, for ought that I can heare, but that there is such a Lecture there read, I can my selfe witnesse, hauing heard Doctor Padey (now Sir William Paney Knight, a very learned Physitian) read this Anatomicall Lecture vpon a corps, not many yeares since in the sayd Hall in Monkwels Streete.

And thus much for this Colledge of Physitians, which beareth for Armes a shield Sa. with a celestiall hand proper in a cloud in the verter point, feeling the pulse of a terrestiall hand proper, as I haue beene informed by my very learned friend, Mr. Doctor Palmer, an eminent fellow in this Colledge, and one by whom I haue been holpen in the matter of this Chapter (for I loue to acknowledge by whom I haue profited.) And now to the Colledge, which is an Epitome of an Vniuersity by it selfe, viz. Gresham Colledge.

Of Gresham Colledge.

Cap. XXX.

GResham Colledge in Bishopsgate Streete, was lately founded by that Royall Marchant Sir Thomas Gresham Knight, about the yeare of our Lord Mr. D. LXIX. This is a little Vniuersity or Academies Epitome, as Rome when it flourished was, Orbis Epitome in the conceit of Athenæus and others: for in this Colledge are by this worthy Founder ordained seauen seuerall Lectures of seauen seuerall Arts and faculties, to be read publikely, viz. a Lecture of Diuinity, a Lecture of Ciuill law, a Lecture of Physick, a Lecture of Rhetoricke, a Lecture of Astronomy, a Lecture of Geometry, and a Lecture of Musick, by seauen seuerall renowned professors of these Arts and Learnings. And these Lectures must be read onely in the Tearme time. To euery Lecturer or Reader is pronoud and allowed by this Founder, fifty pounds of Annuall Fee, or Stipend, and a faire lodging within this his Palace-like house, now their Colledge, which this magnificent Knight built and disposed, and bequeathed to this good and honourable vse, giuing by this his good worke and by his hospitall, and by his famous monument of the Royall Exchange, a notable example to the rest of his quality the richer Merchants, and more opulent Cittizens of London, the Fauourites of Pluto and Mercury, to imploy some good part of their great wealth in publick workes of necessary or pious vse, or of ornament, or of either, or of all, lest the remainder be profoundly consumed by acolastes and ingracious heires, whereof too many examples may be brought, and not vnknowne to the moderne Magnificoes of this Cittie. But if these rich Cittizens abstayne from the employing of their treasure and great riches in good workes, not out of any miserable disposition, but for lack of knowledge and notice of good proiects, I haue here provided for the helpe of their good inclination, an inuentorie or note of diuers necessary, charitable, and honourable workes, fit to be done, for, and in this Cittie of London, as namely to build a Theater, for the more safe, and certaine, and wholsome hearing of the Sermons in Paules Churchyard: Item, to repaire and beautifie Paules Steple, and to refurnish the Belfrey thereof. Item, to make a faire Piazza, or Market place within London, such as is and ought to be in euery good cittie, and to bee placed as the manner is, neere to the Towne Hall: viz. between the Guild-hall and Bowe-church. Item, to paue Smithfield. Item, to erect faire arched gates at the bounds of the Liberties, where now beall rences or wooden bars and rayles stand. Item, to enlarge the cumbersome and dangerous streates of the royall and more publique wayes of this cittie, as for example, those of Ludgate hill, of S. Martines le grand, of New Fish-streete hill, and Woodstreete, and the most miserable Carstockes of Thames-street, and especially and last of all, that of the Old change, that the hallowed ground of S. Paules churchyard may no more be trampled and prophaned with beasts, and carts, and coaches, to the end that through that streete thos coaches, carts, and beasts, may continually passe to their old and proper way of Carter-lane. Item, to deliuer the walls of the cittie and the Towne ditch, from the pester and encumbrances of tenements, and gardens, and other priuate vses, and to open that Ditch, and to bring a Riuer or fresh current into it. And lastly (and which is a great matter of conscience, and of necessity) to supply the Suburbes with new parish churches, wherein by reason of the exceeding encrease of new houses and tenements, the people and inhabitants are so extreamely multiplied, as the olde churches (wherevnto those new houses houses, and places, and stretes belong) are not able to containe the fourth part of the people, no nor the tenth part of them, in some of these Suburbes. Of these prooefs and good woorkes, the richer Cittizens (above mentioned) may make their choise according to their affections, fancies, deuotions, or abilities and for all and euery whereof, I could yeeld good reason, and adduce good matter and argument to induce them to vndertake these good woorkes, if this place would beare it: which therefore I will deferre and reserue (vntill another time and place) with other plots also, and propositions of woorkes of charity, of honour, and of Ornament (whereof I haue a tolly Catalogue) lest I should cloy this Chapter with too long a digression. Wherefore I will conclude it with the Armes of this Colledge, which are blazoned Argent, a Chequer Gemineste betweene three Mollets sables, as the Founder bare them, according to the allowed customes in these behalfes.

Of Cosmographie, Hydrographie, and the Art of Nauigation.

Cap. XXXI.

IN the time of Queene Elizabeth there was a Lecture of the chiefe Mathematicall Sciences, viz. Geometry, Astronomie, Geographie, Hydrographie, and the Art of Nauigation, read in the Chappell of Leadenhall, but now it is discontinued. But at this day there is a Lecture of Cosmography read in the Black Friers, in the house of Marianus Marin: how long that will last I know not, but for the continuance and aduancement of the study and knowledge of the Art of Hydrographie, and of Nauigation, there is no doubt to be made thereof, by reason that for the better maintenance and continuance of Nauigation, and for the better ordering, gouerning, and instructing, and disciplining of Mariners, Pilots, Saylers, and other Professours and practisers of the Arts of Hydrographie and Nauigation, there is a Colledge commonly called Trinity house in Deptford, neere London which was founded by King Henry the eighth. and chiefely for the seruice and vse of the Kinne Royall, and the which our rare Countryman (who speaketh euer properly) termeth Collegium in vsum Ciuis constituum, and that made me the more willing to giue it a place in this Vniuersity.

To this house or Colledge were giuen for Armes, at the institution of it, a shield Gules, a crosse betwixt foure ships Argent.

Of Whittington Colledge.

Cap. XXXII.

SIr Thomas Gresham hath much honoured his name, and his race, with the goodly Monuments (before mentioned) erected in this our age, and in this Citie. So there may and must very much honour be spoken of the most magnificent and vertuous Cittizen Sir Richard Whittington, founder of Whittington Colledge, fower times Lord Maior of London, in the Raignes of Richard the second, and Henry the fourth, Kings of England. Who (besides this Colledge) new built the West gate or Chamberlaine gate of this Cittie, (and thereof called Newgate) and the Hospital of little Saint Bartholmewes, and other goodly and godly Monuments. Hee founded this Colledge in the Royall, and dedicated it to S. Spirit, but (commonly called Whittington Colledge) for the seruice of God, and the relefe of the poore of this Cittie, and for the good education of children: giuing sufficient maintainance for one Master, foure fellowes, some Clarkes, Choristes, and Schollers, and for a certaine number of poore men, and poore women for euer. And thus he hath most worthily deserued to be enrolled in this list of magnificent, vertuous, and pious benefactors and founders, Cittizens of London. And although there hath beene very many of his coate and profession, both before him, and since, which had as great or greater wealth and riches then he, yet they haue not had the grace to imploy their wealth so well, nor to bestowe their talent so happily as hee did, and as Sir Thomas Gresham lately did, and as before him Alderman Knowles. and Alderman Eyre, and some few other rare Cittizens, vertuous and honourable minded Marchants haue done, founding good Monuments for the benefit and ornament of this Cittie, and to the perpetuall honour of their names and memories.

The Armes of this Colledge, be those of the Founder (as they yet stand in the Church of this Colledge, and in other Monuments of his foundation) viz. Gules, a fesse Chekie Or and Azure, an annulet in the verter poynt.

Of S. Catherines Colledge.

Cap. XXXIII.

THe Colledge or Hospitall of S. Catharine beyond the Tower (or vpon the Thames as it is stiled in old writing) was founded by Queene Maude, wife to King Stephen, for such charitable vses as the foresaid Colledge. But (as I heare) intermitted or much altered: Albeit there be yet a Master, and certaine learned Clarkes maintained, and also prouision for the relefe of certaine poore men and women. Pope Honory graunted diuers priuiledges to this house by his Bull, which is yet to be seene in the Exchequer. Not long since there was good Musick in the Quyer at Diuine seruice, both of Voyce and Organ, as diuers both eye-witnesses and eare-witnesses haue informed mee viua voce. Besides other complements of a Colledge, which not being now in being, it little auaileth to speake of. Duely this I will adde, that it neuer had a more graue nor more honorable Master or President then now it hath, to wit, Sir Iulius Cæsar Knight, Chancellour of the Exchequer, and of the Kings priuie Counsell, a very graue and noble-minded Gentleman.

The Armes of this Colledge be party per fesse Gules and Azure, in chefe a sword Argent, in base a demy Wheele Or.

Of the Monastery of Gray-fryers or Christs-Church.

Cap. XXXIIII.

AT the subuersion or suppression of Monasteries, and Religious houses here in England by King Henry the eighth. The Monasterie of the Franciscanes or Gray-fryers now called Christ-Church in Newgate Market, escaped the fury, by the protection or mediation of what good Angell incarnate I know not: But surely it was Gods good will it should stand. And the King shortly after Anno Domini 1546. gaue this house and the Church to the Cittie, to bee imployed to pious and charitable vses, whereupon the Magistrates of the Cittie faithfully and religiously conuerted the Church into a Parish Church, and turned the Lodgings into an Hospitall, and a Grammar Schoole and other houses and rowmes necessary for such foundations. Herein are taught many children, sonnes of Cittizens and others, and besides them, there are fed and brought vp, and taught in this house more then 600. Orphanes (as I haue beene informed by the Officers thereof.) This Monastery hath had many Founders: the ground plot was first purchased by John Ewyn, and other good Cittizens a meane Church thereon built Anno Domini 1228. and about the yeare 1306. it was pulled downe, and a new Church built more large and more beautifull, and all the Lodgings new built by Queene Margaret de Valois, wife to King Edward the first, and by the Earles of Britaine, and of Glouceller, and by the Lady Margaret Countesse of Norfolke, and by diuers noble and worthy Benefactors, whose names may be seen in Iohn Stowes Survey. And then it was made a House for Franciscan Fryers, whose profession was to preach and to teach. And for the better promoting and furtherance of their studies, this Sir Richard Whittington before mentioned, made a goodly Library in this Monastery. Lately the good Lady Ramsey founded there a Schoole for Reading, Writing, and Cyphring, to be taught to poore children, for their better enabling to learne and exercise Trades and Occupations, whereunto they are apt or destinate.

And thus much for Christ Church, onely adding the blazon of the Armes of this House, viz. Azure. Iis semes sans nombre Or, in a bordure Argent.

Of S. Anthonies Colledge, and of diuers other Schooles in London.

Cap. XXXV.

THe Schoole or College of Saint Anthony was at the first a Synagogue of Iewes, and changed by King Henry the third to a Cell of Monkes, of the order of Saint Anthony, Anno Domini 1231. there was also a Schoole founded there in, which being decayed or neglected (as diuers other were, in and about the Cittie in the time of the ciuill Warres.) The good and godly Prince King Henry the sixth, by publique Edict and royall Ordinance, commanded that those auncient Schooles, which were decayed, should be re-edified and repaired, or new in their places erected: as namely, in Saint Martins le grand, in S. Mary de Arcubus, in S. Dunstons West, and in this Saint Anthonies whereof now I speake: And the next yeare following, the same good King caused an act of Parliament to be made, that there should be foure other Schooles built in some other seuerall Parishes (viz. S. Andrewes in Holborne, in Allhallowes the great, in S. Peters in Cornehill, and in the Hospitall of Saint Thomas of Acon, where now is Sir Humphrey Weldes house, and the Mercers Chappell, &c.) And to this house of S. Anthony, the King gaue good lands, and placed therein two Priests, and a Schoolemaster, and twelue poore Almes-men, and since that time I. Tate Alderman of London, and a charitable Gentleman new built the Church of S. Anthony, and repaired the Schoole, and gaue lands and rents for the better maintainance of the Colledge, and of the Almes-men, An. Dom. 1496. But these Priests and Almes-men are not heere, and the Landes are vanished, no man knowing what is become of them. But the Church remaineth, and the Schoole, the one serueth for the French Protestants, for the exercise of their Religion, and the other still flourisheth, and out of it (and which for the honour of it may not be forgotten) came two Lord Chancellours of England, and two Archbishops within this age, viz Sir Thomas Moore, and Doctor Nicholas Heth, and Doctor Iohn Whitgift.

The Armes of this olde house are Sable, a Bigge Clarine Argent.

More of other Schooles in London.

Cap XXXVI.

BEsides these Schooles lately rehearsed, there were many other and more auncient founded and instituted for the liberall and good education of youth and children in in all, or in the most part of the Monasteries of Religious houses within London, and the Territories thereof. As for instance in the Abbey of Bermondsey, in the Priory of Saint Bartholmew, in the Hospitall of Ronciuall, and in those without Creplegate, and without Aldersgate, and in the Priories of S. Iomes, and of S. Mary Ouery, and of the holy Trinity without Aldgate, and in the olde Blacke-friers in Holborne, and in diuers others, in whose stead there be some few founded lately by good men: As that by the Company of Marchant Taylors, or Linnen Armourers, who purchased the Mannour of the Rose in the Parish of S. Lawrence Pountney (lately the house of the Duke of Buckingham) and haue therein founded a faire Schoole with sufficient stipend, and maintainance for the Master and Vshers, and other things thereunto necessary and requisite, in the yeare of our Lord 1 6 1 1. And now very lately Thomas Sutton, founder of the great new Hospitall in the Charter house, hath translated the Semis-court to a Grammar Schoole, that is, a ludo pilario ad ludum literarium, for 30. Schollers, poore mens children, and for a Master, and an Vsher, with conuenient lodgings, and very competent entertainment, and maintainance for them 1613. There be also other Triuiall Schooles for the bringing vp of youth in good literature, viz. in S. Magnus, in S. Michaelis, in S. Thomas, and others, which are not necessary all to bee reckoned vp in this place (my purpose being to write of an Vniuersity, and not of Grammar Schooles) although they be so necessary, as I know no Vniuersity without them, either at home or abroad. The Armes of the Marchant Taylors Schoole be the same of the Company, viz. Argent a tent betweene two Robes of Estate Gules, and vpon a cheefe Azure a Lyon passant gardant Or. And the rest of these Schooles doe or may beare for Armes, the Armes of their Founders (not to be tedious in the blazons of euery one of them.)

Of Languages.

Cap. XXXVII.

Besides the Latine and Greeke tongues, which are taught in these Schooles before named. There bee also in this Citie Teachers and Professours of the holy or Hebrew Language, of the Caldean, Syriake, and Arabike or Larbey Languages, of the Italian, Spanish, French, Dutch and Polish Tongues. And here be they which can speake the Persian, and the Mosaico, and the Turkish and the Muscouian language, and also the Sclauonian tongue, which passeth through 17. Nations. And in briefe diuers other Languages fit for Ambassadors and Orators, and Agents for Merchants, and for Trauellers, and necessary for all Commerce or Negotiation whatsoeuer.

Of Poets and of Musicians.

Cap. XXXVIII.

Here be also in this Cittie Poets, excelling in all kinde of Poesie (to wit) Dramatike, Lirike, Heroicall, or Epick, Pcemenicall, or Pastorall, Satadik, and Satyrical. That first and most auncient kinde of Poesie the Dramatik, is so lively expressed and represented vpon the publique Stages and Theaters of this Cittie, as Rome in the Auge of her pompe and glory, neuer saw it better performed, (I meane in respect of the action, and Art, and not of the cost and sumptuousnesse) for therein the Romanes exceeded all the nations of the world. Of this Art haue written largely, Petrus Victorius, Petrus Crinitus, Caluus Rodygnius, Carlo Gatto, Ludouico Dulce, Georgius Fabritius, Iulius Cæsar Scaliger, and who hath written so much and so well (and bring an Author in all good Poets hands) as it were in vaine for me to say any thing of the Art, besides that I haue written thereof, a particular Treatise.

Here be also the best Musicians of this Kingdome, and equall to any in Europe for their skill, either in composing, and setting, or in singing, or for playing vpon any kinde of Musicall Instruments. The Musicians haue obtained of the King our Soueraigne Lord, Letters-pattents for a Society and Corporation.

And for their Armes they beare Azure a Swan Argent, within a Tressure Counterflowre Or, and in a cheefe Gules a Rose betweene two Lyons Or, and for their crest the signe called by the Astronomers Fidicula, or the Orphean Lyre.

Of the Arts of Calligraphie, Brachygraphie, Steganographie, Arithmetick, and Cyphering.

Cap. XXXIX.

In this City be taught the Arts of Calligraphie, or faire writing of diuers hands and Characters, and of Cyphering, and Algarisme, and (which is much to be regarded) the Art of Brachygraphie, which is an Art newly discouered, and newly recouered, and is of very good and necessary vse, being well and honestly exercised: for by the meanes and helpe thereof (they which know it) can readily take a Sermon, Oration, Play, or any long speech, as they are spoken, dictated, acted, and vttered in the instant. It hath a good part in the Art of Steganographie, and is a principall member thereof.

The Armes of Calligraphie is Azure a Pen Or, and this was giuen to Peter Bales, at a prize, where solemne triall was made for mastery in this Art, amongst the best Pen-men of London.

Of other Arts and Sciences ingenuous, and liberall, professed in this City and in few other Vniuersities.

Cap. XL.

Now that I haue runne ouer the Liberall Artes, and other Scholler-like and Accademicall Studies, I will speake something of other Arts, which although they bee not professed in euery other Vniuersitie, nor reckoned amongst the auncient liberall Arts, and Sciences, yet in respect that they are fit for a gentleman (whom none doe become but honourable and liberall and ingenuous Artes) and other Arts shall haue no place in this discourse. In the choice of the Arts of this kind, I will not be mine owne Taruer, but will receiue them of the recommendation and warrant of that most learned and iudicious noble Gentleman the Count Bildesler Castilio, who recounting the qualities and Arts necessary and properly appertaining to a Gentleman (and so consequently to bee esteemed liberall and ingenuous) giueth to the Arts Gladiatorie, or of defence, and of Ryding, and of Painting, and of Pourtraying, and of Dancing, place amongst them: And these all beeing professed and taught in this Citie, and that by excellent Masters, I thinke I should wrong this Academy, and the professors and learners of these Arts herein, if I should not mention and record them in this register or treatise, I will first begin with that art of Ryding (which the Grecians called Hippice) as the most worthy of them, and is a principall part or member of Polemica, or Art Military.

Of Hippice or the Art of Horse manship.

Cap. LXI.

The Art of Ryding and of good horsmanship is so necessary for a Gentleman, as neuer any attained to any great honor in deeds of armes and in the profession Military, without he had learned to be a good horseman before. And therefore amongst the ancient Romans it was in so great estimation, as it was a speciall honour to be stiled Eques as it is yet in Spaine, in Italy, and France, to be called Caualliero, and Chenalier which signifying a horseman, or a Knight. But my purpose being not to discourse, but to point at it, it sufficeth that I shall giue to this Art, a place proper to it in this treatise. They that desire to be instructed in this Art, may read Fredericke Grison, and Gasparo da Rocca, and the Count del Anguillara, and diuers other strangers: but none better then our owne countreymen, Mr. Thomas Blondeuile, and Mr. Gerualse Markeham. For the skill of this Art professed here in England, I will giue the Palme to his Maiesties Keepers, and his gallant Cauallerizos and to the Gentlemen of his Stcuyrye, or Stable Royall, who are commonly called Quirries, who since the burning of the Kings Steuyrye, at Blondesbury, neere high Holborne, haue practised this art at Charing Crosse in the Mewes and thereabout, and haue borne and are as expert as any Neapolitans whatsoeuer. This art is taught also vpon Clarken-well greene, and was not long since at Mile-end, by Seignieur Prospero. The armes of this profession be vert, a horse armed, and caparisonne Or.

Of the Art gladiatory, or Science of Defence.

Cap. LXII.

The art Gladiatorie which wee call the Science of Defence, (and the Italians Scrimia & arte ad arme) was anciently much practised amongst the noble Romans, & euen by some Emperors. They which professed this Art were called of the Romans, Gladiatores & Lanistæ: It was practised also by other Nations. In this City there bee many professors thereof, and very skilfull men in teaching the best and most offensiue and defensiue vse of very many Weapons, as of the long sword, the backe sword, the Rapier and dagger, the single Rapier, the case of Rapiers, the sword and buckler or Targate, the Pike, the Polbere, the long staffe, and other, King Henry the 8. made the professors of this Art a company, or corporation by Letters Pattents, wherein the Art is intituled the noble Science of Defence. Of this Art Gladiatorie there bee diuers Schooles in London kept by the Masters of Defence: and they bee the same which the Romanes called Lanistæ, for the Lanistæ iuniores gladiatores instituebant, as I finde in the writings of A. Hirtius, and of Vegetius, and others. The manner of the proceedings of our Fencers in their Schooles, is this: first they which desire to bee taught, at their admission are called Schollers, and as they profit, they take degrees, and proceede to be Prouosts of Defence, and that must be wonne by publique tryall of their proficiency, and of their skill at certaine weapons, which they call prizes, and in the presence, and view of many hundreds of people. And at their next and last prize, well and sufficiently performed, they bee proceede Masters of the Science of Defence or Masters of Fence, as wee commonly call them. The King ordained that none but such as haue tane his orderly proceeded by publique act and tryall, and haue the approbation of the principall Masters of their company, may professe or teach this Art of Defence publikely in any part of England. Of this Art as it was vsed amongst the Romanes, see Lipsius in Saturna. lib. 9. But for the moderne vse, and estate thereof, see Achilles Marozzo in his booke intituled Arte del'arme and George Silver in his booke in English of this matter, and Iacomo Medinese in his Scrima and Antonio Manciolino in arte dello Schermire con ogni sorte &c.

The Armes of this corporation be Gules, a sword Argent pendant.

Ars telorum, or Artillery, and of Polemica or art Military, and Pyrotechnie, and of the art of swimming

CHAP. XXXXIII.

ARtellerie or Arteley, id est, Ars telorum materialorum (for thus for Etimologists become vs not) is the art of Shooting in long Bowes, Crosse bowes, Stone-bowes, Sreoppens, Rams, Catapults as all (and especially in this age) in canons, Faselskis, Culuerings, Bakers, Falcons, Sagitions, Fowlers, Chambers, Hagbuts, Dargbusses, Culuers, Petronels, Pistols, Dags, &c. For this is the Artellery which is now in most vse and estimation, and therefore deuided into great Ordinance, and into other guns. Of the one is hereof written more at large, intituling it, the art of Shooting in great Ordinances. And of the other, Iohn Smith a sculdier wrote a booke intituled the art of Gunnery. These bee warlike arts and of great importance either for munition, or for defence. The art of shooting in great ordinance is taught in a field enclosed with a bricke wall, without Bishopsgate, called the Artillery Garden (and as it is to be well noted) all the men which come thither to learne this Art, are first solemnely sworne, not to teach any forrayner, or Alien this Art, nor to serue any forraine Prince their with, without the leaue or commandement of the king of England their Soueraigne Lord. And ouer all the professors of this Art and of the Kings ordinance & armes, there is alwaies a martiall Noble Gentleman, who hath the superintendance and command, and is called therefore the Master of the Ordinance: And this place is now occupied by the right honorable Sir George Carew Lord Carew of Clopton a very Noble, wise, and martiall Gentleman.

Furthermore, here in this Citty are abiding very ingenious engineers, men very expert in mining, saping, and deuising stratagems of war and men very skilfull in the art of Pyrotechnie, or of fire-works, and of fortification: And all these bee but members of the Art Military or Polemica, and which is the most noble & Heroicall Art, being the proper occupation and profession of Princes, Gentlemen, and very iustly epithered noble. For it is the art which hath enabled all the greatest families in the world, and which protecteth and preserueth all other good arts and sciences in safety as Marcellus well obserued. And of this Polemica, so many Authours, auncient and moderne haue written in Greeke, Latine, English, Spanish, Italian, French, &c. as all this booke could hardly serue to make a Catalogue of their names: neither in good reason it, to discourse of it here, my end being but to mention this and the rest. But that which is requisite to be remembred now, is that there be in this Citty and in the Territories very many notable nobleand most valiant commanders, Colonels, Captaines, and expert souldiers, not onely able, to teach this art Military, but also to take charge of Regiments, Legions, and Armies reall, if need required, for their experience, valeur, and skill in Martial Discipline, and affayres of warre.

The Armes of Art Military are Gules, 2 Lances in Saltor, on a chefe vert a canon Or.

Here to these Arts of Warre may bee added the art of swimming (called of the Grecians Νεῖν & Κολυμβᾶν) the which as it is most full for all men, so it is most necessary and important to a souldiour, and therefore it was so much esteemed of the Romanes, as they commanded their Tyrones or young souldiers to learne it, as Vegetius testifieth. And this Art can many men in this Cowne teach very well: and for commodetie of River and water for that purpose there is no where better. Of this art of swimming, diuers haue written, as Pedro Mexia in the Spanith tongue, Thomaso Garzoni in Italian, and our Countrymen Master Digby, and Walter Middleton in Latine, and in English.

Of Orchestice, or the Art of Dauncing.

CHAP. XXXXIIII.

THe art of dancing called by the ancient Grecians, Orchestice, and Orchelis (although Tully in his austerity, and out of his spleene towards M. Anthony, iesting him dance, said Nemo saltat sobrius) is notwithstanding an art & quality, not onely conuenient to that his bitter imputation; but certainly commendable & fit for a Gentleman: being exceedingly and modestly vsed. And Plato that most graue Philosopher thinketh meete that ingenuous children bee taught to dance: And it is not only allowed and graced in the Courts of Princes and in the best and most honorable Cities, and euen in the colledges of the reuerend and graue professors of our Lawes, but also hath so good approbation in the holy Scriptures, as we find that Michol was much blamed for laughing at King Dauid when hee dauncede. Of this art many bookes haue beene written, as that Pamflet in the Pantagonicall tongue, intituled Liber brogardissimus de danzis, and diuers other the like. And much more anciently it hath beene handled by Athenæus, and Iulius Pollux, and since by Celius Rodigynus, and lastly and largely enough by Thomaso Garzoni, in his Piazza Vniuersale in discorso 45. de Ballarini. Vnder this art, Tilting and tumbling, and going vpon ropes, ropes, and the doing feates of Actiuity, and rare agility are comprehended: and in these Arts of dancing and vaulting, wee haue Country men of our owne, which be very excellent, as M. Carden, Groome of the Queenes priuie Chamber, and M. Warren, and M. Rowan, the Kings Musitians, and M. Iohn Hasler, and diuers others.

I see not howe the Armes of the professors of dancing, because I haue not seene them: besides I am informed that they are of the Society of the Musitians, which I easily beleeue, for dancing cannot stand without Musicke, and then are they furnished, hauing an equall and common interrest, as well in the customes as in the Society and Corporation.

Of Graphice, or Art of Painting, and of Pourtraiture, and of Staining, and of Cosmetica.

CAP. 45.

IN the Art called of Authors Graphice, Graphice, and in English painting: there be in this Citie cunning Painters, for either shaddowing, pourtraying, counterfetting, tracking, painting, enuemming, or limming. But this is an Art now not accounted ingenuous or fit for a Gentleman, by reason that it is much fallen from the reputation, which it had anciently, which whether it bee for the vnworthinesse or vnskilfulnesse of the persons, exercising and practising it in this age, or for the abuses and deceipts vsed by Painters, or for the scandall of Images and Idols (for the which Philo condemneth it) or for the foule deuise of the fairs Cosmetica: or for what other cause I know not well, but sure I am, it is now accounted base and mechanicall, and a meere mester of an Artificer, and handy Craftsman. Insomuch as fewe or no Gentleman or generous and liberall person will aduenture the practising this Art. But in so much as Aristotle recommendeth it to his Statesman, or Politician, and because it is numbred amongst those Arts which are necessary for a Gentleman, and for a Courtier, by Count Baldessin (as hath beene before intimated) and in regard also that the Romaines (who be Gentlemen by their places, and whose place is next in this Treatise, shall bee skilfull in this Art) I must perforce somewhat in the defence or excuse of it. But I dare not pronounce with Count Baldesar, that all those men in this Realme are not well of this Art of Painting, be voyde of reason, for that is an vncharitable and peremptorie censure. But this I will say by the authority of Plinie, Quintilian and Aristotle, and of others, that the auncient Romanes had it not onely in estimation, but also in admiration, and in so much as not onely diuers noble Romaines in the time of the Consuls, but also afterwards some Emperours did take great pleasure (and paine also) to practise it, as the Writers of the imperiall History shew at large, whereupon Gregorie de Rimini amongst other praises and Elogies of Painting, stileth it exercicio Nobile. And Alexander Neapolitanus giueth a greater honour vnto it, in his Booke of Genuall dayes, in these words: Pingendi ars primum Sicyone, mox per omnem Graciam tanto fuit studio, vt pueros ingenuos plastrarum tanquam liberalium artium præcipuam imprimis edoceret Magistri, perpetuo interdicto (cauentes) ne ad illam mancipia admitterentur. And thus much for the warrant of placing the Art of Painting in this Treatise. To this Art of Painting belongeth the Art of Staining, which was a fine Art, and (as I heare) is now lost. Cosmetica afore mentioned is of this ranke, so farre as it concerneth Painting, but because it is an Art teaching Women to paint and stayne their owne bodies: it is not onely reputed infamous, and in critticis time, but also wicked and vngodly. For wee may reade in the holy Scriptures of an impious Woman, who is recorded to her perpetuall shame, to haue painted her face, and her eyes: yea, it is a thing scorned and detested euen by the Heathens themselues, as it may appeare in many Writings of theirs, and particularly in an auncient and elegant Epigram written to a Lady, by Lucilius, which I will set downe in Greeke, because I haue not seene it in Latine, and then mine owne homely translation of it shall follow.

Τὴν καλὴν ἐλάλεις, τὴν δ' ἄλλην ἐσκέλλεις ἔδαφος· σεμνὸν μὲν φύτιδας ἐσκέλλεις.
Μὴ τί τοι τὸ πρόσωπον ἀπ' ἄλλου τοῦ γεγάασιν, οὐχὶ γραπτόν ἐστιν, ἢ ἀμάτερα, κοὐχὶ λίθος, καὶ ἱδρῶτος τοῦδε τὴν ἀκάλυπτον ἔχεις.

Madame, you dye your hayre, and paynt your face, yet doe your wrinckles and your age appeare:
Then colour not your face, vnlesse perceaue, you would a vizard, not a visage weare:
It is in vaine (Madame) no Paynters Art, can Hecuba to Helena conuert.

Therefore I like very well Stephano Guazzos censure thereof, and hold it to be a sentence worthy to be written in letters of gold in euery Ladies and Gentlewomans Chamber, viz. that those women whose beauties be naturall, are the faire creatures of God. But those women which paint, and make themselues faire by Art, are the creatures of the Deuill. Of the Art of Painting Paolo Lomazzo hath written in Italian largely and learnedly, and is translated into English by Doctor Haydocke, besides diuers others.

The Armes of Painters be quarterly, the first quarter Azure 3. escutcheons Argent: the second a Chaueron betweene 3. birds heads Or.

Of the Colledge of Heraulds.

Cap. 46.

And now hauing made this Preface and Apology for Painting, and thus prepared the way for the Art of Heraudry, participating with the Art of Painting (as I noted before) I will speake of the Colledge of Heraulds, founded here in this Cittie by the auncient Kings of England. These Heraulds are, or ought by the Statutes of their foundation, to bee all Gentlemen (which I thinke is to be vnderstood, either by race or by conditions and parts of a Gentleman.) But if there be any fellowes of this Colledge, which haue no more Gentry, nor Art Heraldike, nor learning, nor ingenuity then common Painters, they must be esteemed as men crept in at the windowe, and distinguished or discerned with a baston trauers, for bastards of Heraldrie. The officers of Armes or Heraulds (for these two words be Genus, or the generall name to the rest) must necessarily be skilfull and well seene, not onely speculatiuely in the Art of Painting, but also by practise, in regard of the continuall vse, which they haue of it, for pourtraying, copying, tricking, and limming in Inke Orle, or water colours the ensignes, banners, pennons, bandroles, shields, escutcheons, timbers, crests, lyttres, supporters, hachements, and such like, with the figures of the variety of things animall, vegetall, senceleſſe or inanimate, born for armes and ensignes, and tokens of Nobility and Generosity, which bee much like vnto the Hieroglyphicks, or deuyses vsed more then 2000. yeares past by the Egyptians. And these figures the Heraulds must register and record in their bookes of Armory, and of blazons, the better to preserue them for the posterity, and for their owne vse and knowledge. And this must be done by the helpe and meanes of the Art of painting and tricking. Their study also is or ought to be auncient Historyes Chronicles, and Antiquities: they must search olde rolles and scrowles, and peruse authentike records, Archiues, olde Charters, and euidences, and such like, out of the which they gather matter for Genealogie, and Pedegree, and markes of honour, and good testimony of the valour and vertue of the worthy and famous ancestors of Noblemen and Gentlemen: whose honourable acts, atchieuements, aduentures, marriages, alliances, and issues, they must diligently and faithfully record and preserue in their Colledge and office of Armes. These Heraulds be the ministers of honour, the Antiquaries of the Britiſh and Engliſh Heroes, and the Messengers of Mars, being not onely officers of Armes but of Armies. For they were wont to carry defiances, to proclaime warres, to summon Cities to entertaine or sollicite parties, and to propound truces, and treaties, &c. and are officers of great Antiquity, for I am of Dionisius opinion, that Heraulds haue been as long as there haue been Kings. They were called of the Romanes Feciales & Caduceatores, and had a Colledge. I will not say that they were any collegiate society here in England, vntill the time of King Richard the third: but it is certaine, that hee by his Charter made them a Company and Corporation, and setled the office in Sole-herbert, from whence they were remoued (by them which appointed nothing of his doings) to our Ladies of Roncivall, neere Charing-crosse, and at the length they obtained by the fauour and mediation of the most illustrious Princes of the house of Norfolke, Marshals of England, to be placed in Derby place: and for the more secure enioying thereof (because an honorable Gentleman had gotten about that time an estate in it) Queene Mary gaue it to the Heraulds by her Charter Royall, as I haue beene informed. In this house these Heraulds haue seuerall lodgings, and a common Library and place to keepe their Records, and Books of Armory, and haue maintenance and yearely pensions, and fees of the King's Maiesty. They are distinguished by these names of office, and seruice, viz. Garter, Clarenceaux, or Southroy, and Norroy, Kings at Armes: Yorke, Somerset, Richmond, Windsor, Chester, and Lancaster, Dukes at Armes: Rouge dragon, Rouge croix, Blew-mantle, Portcullis, Blanc lyon, and Portsmouth, Pursuants at Armes: whereof the two last be extraordinary. There be also belonging, and depending vpon the office and officers at Armes, certaine ministers which they call Marshals to Heraulds, and certaine Painters, which are called Painters at Armes.

And now that it may appeare that this Colledge of Heraulds which hath giuen or deuised Cusignes, and Armes for so many, hath not forgotten to giue her selfe a due marke of honour. It must be declared here, that this Colledge hath taken Argent, a crosse Gules betweene foure birds Azure, borrowed from a Gentleman of the most fegnall name and family that euer hath beene of their Colledge.

Of the Art of Reuels.

Cap. 47.

Might hereunto adde for a Corollary of this discourse, the Art of Reuels, which requireth knowledge in Grammar, Rhetorick, Logicke, Philosophie, Historye, Musick, Mathematicks, and in other Arts (and all more then I vnderstand I confesse) and hath a setled place within this Cittie. But because I haue described it, and discoursed thereof at large in a particular commentary, according to my talent, I will surceasse to speake any more thereof: blazing onely the Armes belonging to it, which are Gules, a crosse Argent, and in the first corner of the Escutcheon, a Mullets Pertes Argent, and a Lyon Gules in chiefe Or.

Of diuers Professors of many other Arts, and Faculties residing in this Vniuersity, and of Arts mechanicall.

Cap. 48. Peroration.

But not to be long in particularizing euery Art and euery Science professed and taught in this Cittie, and in the Territories thereof. I say in a word, that there be here many excellent Philosophers, Cabalists, Thomists, Scotists, Humanists, Philologers, Historians, Poeticians, Arithmeticians, Antiquaries, &c. men able for their knowledge and sufficiencie to read lectures of these Arts and Faculties, in any Vniuersity in the world. Here also be very cunning Architects: and in briefe here be as good Chemists, and Alchymists, as any be in Maioricana, although there be no publick professor thereof entertained in this, as is in that Vniuersity. And finally (the better to attaine to any of these Arts, Sciences, and Faculties, and to retaine their principles, and rules, in minde and remembrance (and which may also serue for an aptcloſe of this generall Technologie) I must not omit that the Art of Memory is taught within this Vniuersity of London. Seeing then that there be read, taught, studied, and professed so many Arts, Faculties, and Sciences in this Cittie of London, as in no Vniuersity more and in seuer or none so many. And that there be so many magnificent Colledges, Athenæes, houses, and Schooles founded and erected for them and their professors, and endowed with lands and reuenewes, by the ancient Kings and Princes of this Land, and by other noble and worthy Benefactors, and vnto them royall priuiledges subioined; who can then deny that London is not onely the third Vniuersity of England, but also to be preferred before many other Vniuersities in Europe, or in any other part of the world known.

FINIS.

NOVV DOE FOL-LOW CERTAINE VERSES CONCERNING LONDON, WESTMINSTER, and the River of THAMES, which Verses I tooke out of Poly-Olbion, in the 16. and 17. Songs, where the Author having formerly spoken of the Riuers in Middlesex and Hartfordshire, &c. he likewise speaketh of the Cittie of London, and the Riuer of Thames, Written by Michaell Drayton Esquire.

The 16 Song.

THe Citie to salute doth bid the Muse prepare.
Whose Turrets, Fanes, and Spyres, when willfully she beholds,
Her wonder at the sight, thus strangely she vnfoldes:
At thy great builders wit, who's he but wonder may;
Nay: of his wisedome thus, ensuing times shall say;
O more then mortall man, that did this Towne begin;
Whose knowledge found the plot, so fit to set it in.
What God, or heauenly power was harbour'd in thy brest,
From whom with such successe thy Labours should be blest;
The goodly situation of London.
Built on a rising Banke, within a Vale to stand,
And for thy healthfull soyle, chose grauell mixt with sand.
And where faire Thames his course into a Crescent casts (That, forced by his Tides, as still by her he hasts, He might his surging waues into her bosome send) Because too farre in length, his Towne should not extend.
And to the North and South vpon an equall reach,
Two hills their euen Bankes doe somewhat seeme to stretch
The North and South Wardes.
Those two extreamer Windes from hurting it to let;
And onely leuell lies, vpon the rise and set.
Of all this goodly Ile, where breathes most cheerefull ayre,
And euery way there-to the wayes most smooth and fayre;
As in the fittest place, by man that could be thought;
To which by Land, or Sea, prouision might be brought.
And such a Road for ships scarce all the world commauds,
As is the goodly Thames neere where Brutes Citty stands.
Nor any Hauen lyes to which is more resort,
Commodities to bring, as also to transport.
The fourteenth Song.
Then Westminster the next great Thames doth entertaine;
That vaunts her Pallace large, and her most sumptuous Fane:
The Lands tribunall seat that challengeth for hers,
The crowning of our Kings, their famous Sepulchers.
Then goes he on along by that more beautious strand,
Expressing both the wealth and brauery of the Land.
(So many sumptuous Boures, within so little space,
The all-beholding Sun scarce sees in all his race.)
London lying like a halfe Moone.
And on by London leades, which like a Crescent lies,
Whose windowes seeme to mock the star-befreckled skies
Besides her rising Spires, so thick themselues that show,
As doe the bristling reedes, within his Banks that grow.
There sees his crowded Wharfes, and people-pestred shores,
His Bosome ouer-spread, with shoales of labouring Ores:
London bridge the crowne of Thames.
With that most costly Bridge, that doth him Most renowne,
By which he clearely puts, all other Riuers downe.

THE

THE COPPIE OF MY EPISTLE DEDICATED TO THE LORD MAIOR AND Aldermen of LONDON, which I haue here placed, to serue for a generall Apologie, touching the reasons that moued me to vndertake this troublesome businesse of Chronologie, and to expresse the manner of my proceeding therein, being very desirous to satisfie the honest, wise, and well minded, &c.

RIght Honourable and graue Senators, the blessed and peacefull entrance into this Land, and ioyfull possession of our liege Lord, of his immediate right of the Imperiall Crowne of England, and the vtter banishment of all dislust in the Regall succession, with the vniuersall hearts applause of all his Highnesse English Subiects, who with one content acknowledged their loue and duty vnto his lawfull right in Soueraignty, all which in the speedy effecting and establishing of peace in this Kingdome, was much more then either our neighbour Nations held possible to be so easily performed, as appeare by their great admiration vpon the certaine knowledge thereof, or was rightly vnderstood of the multitude that wholy enioyes the benefit, as too plainely appeareth by their wilfull ingratitude and forgetfulnesse, seeing their long continued feare to quickly suppresst, and beyond all expectation conuerted into as great freedome and tranquility, as either their hearts could wish, or is enioyed by any other Nation. All these, and many other high blessings of Almighty God still succeeded one another, and no man would once hold vp his finger, to make present acknowledgement or publick vnderstanding vnto posterities, of the boundlesse and wonderous workes of God in these our dayes, as also of the manifold remarkable accidents which haue happened of late yeares.

These motiues, I say, with the earnest perswasions of diuers graue and Honourable personages, who neuer ceased to accite me vnto this present Act of Chronologie, haue directly caused me to performe this generall businesse, in which my tedious labours I haue beene intollerably abused and scandalized by Thraso, Momus, Zoylus, and other back-biters, and detractors, concerning whom, sith it is the least of offences to offend offenders, I will neither vexe my selfe, nor trouble your patience in seeking to pleate the enuious and infatiate. But forasmuch as I highly prize the good content of the honest, wise, and vertuous, thus was the course and manner of my proceeding herein.

After I had well obserued, that no man would lend a helping hand vnto the late aged painefull Chronicler: neither in many moneths after his death, that any would expose or shew themselues to prosecute so good a worke: and I albeit that in this interim, and before, there were many named to haue already entred into this Labyrinth, yet not one appeared: whereupon I remembred the saying of the Phylosopher: That the naming of many friends, is a meane impediment vnto friendship. And as in that, so in this, then for my owne cleare satisfaction, and full assurance, that I could neither preiudice nor preuent any others better proceeding, I entered into particular conference with euery man whose names had beene diuulged. Some of them of honourable ranke, and reuerend quality: all of them learned, and of good sufficiencie; some whereof answered mee, they thought that the giuing out of their names in this sort, was rather done by their secret enemies, of purpose to draw them into capitall displeasure, and to bring their names and liues into a generall question, then for any other intent of good: Other said, who doth this worke, must flatter, which I cannot, neither will I wilfully leaue a scandall vnto my posterity. Another said, I cannot see how in any ciuill action a man should spend his trauaile, time, and money worse, then in that which acquires no regard, nor reward, except back-biting and detraction. And one amongst the rest after he had sworn an oath, said: I thanke God that I am not yet mad, to waste my time, spend two hundred pound a yeere, trouble my selfe, and all my friends, onely to gayne assurance of endlesse reproch, losse of liberty, and bring all my dayes in question: And like as these spake, so did many others. And in conclusion, I saw it vtterly refused of all. And by this time it was generally obserued, that this worke was wholly neglected.

Then

Then many of my friends began againe to animate me, and very seriously required me to make supplement: whose kinde perswasions prevailed so farre, that I promised them to doe my endeuour, onely for one yeares space, wherein my good will exceeded my best experience, as I found afterwards, for that it is not a yeere or two wherein a man may obtaine the particularities of truth, neither accomplish any thing to the effect in this solide and variable imployment. Then forthwith I repayred to the most honourable superiours, vnto whom I humbly signified my zealous loue, duty, and diligence in this generall seruice of my Prince and Country. Of whom I receiued very gracious incouragements, and honourable instructions. And after that, vpon conference with diuers graue Elders, louers of vertue, and fauourers of the Cities honour, by whose direction, with all meet kenesse I manifested my willingnesse vnto the Lord Maior, and Court of Aldermen, being then resolued, neither to breake my former promise, nor to neglect so great and generall a good for any depraying speeches, or maleuolent aspects. May it therefore please your worshippes rightly to vnderstand, that in all my proceedings, I haue neither presumed too farre of my selfe, nor done ought that might discourage, or preuent any other. And thus much for the cause and manner of my proceeding.

Now right honourable, and most worthy Elders, whose state and gouernment is renowned through the world: What is he that hath any vnderstanding, and knowes not London to be the most flourishing and peacefull Cittie of Europe? of greate t antiquity, happiest in c ontriuance, most increased, chiefe in prosperity, and most stored with plenty: and here I might alledge many auncient presidents of pleasures, profits, time, and state, whereof neuer any subordinate Magistrates could equill yours. But seeing fewe words to the wise suffice, I will onely speake a word or two by the way. The promised blessing vnto the auncient Israelites, to possesse a Land that flowed with milke and honey, is with seauen-fold measure, heaped on your heads, your Cittie filled more aboundantly with all sorts of silkes, fine linnen, oyles, wines, and spices, perfection of Arts, and all costly ornaments, and curious workmanship, then any other Province: so as London well deserues to beare the name of the choicest storehouse in the world, and to keepe ranke with any royall Citie in Europe: her Cittizens rich and bounteous, witnesse their franke giving of more then twice seauen fifteenes in one yeere, and their long continued charges and experiences, as well vpon all occasions by sea and land, for defence of their Prince and Country, as in ayding and releiuing their distressed neighbour Nations, and in performing many other worthy matters for their owne honour, the delight of strangers, and the releife of the poore, as otherwise: so as without offence it may truly be said, that the liberality of the Londoners, is but halfe knowne to their common friends. Peace and plenty in the highest degree possesseth now your gates and Pallaces: all Nations repaire with willingnesse to be partakers of your happinesse: many other glorious Cities haue many wayes wanted these incessant blessings: witnesse the famous Cittie Rome, which hath beene often spoyled and sacked, the Cittie Moico, which not long since was twice spoyled with fire, the first by her enemies, the last was a priuate politick practise of her owne Emperour. The like misfortune hath befalne vnto the great Cittie Constantinople. Stately Antwerpe hath felt the smart of diuers changes within mans memory. Populous Paris of late yeeres was glad to beat down her owne Suburbs, and cut her skirts shorter, least other should sit vpon them: Cracouia, Lisbon, and many other royall Cities, were glad and fayne to seeke and sue for that which is freely giuen vnto her. These last haue I cited to be as a looking glasse to London: sith it is as impossible for any to know their proper face and feature, without an obiect, as it is for any people to be truly sensible of their owne felicity, that haue not seene nor tasted others misery.

And thus (right Honourable and graue Fathers) although it was my meaning to haue vsed breuity, yet being enforced to the contrary, I craue your pardon, least I haue offended by prolixity. And because I will for euer be exempt, and free from all danger of all preeurrent Vipers, lurking Adders, and venomeous tongues, I here conclude with tender of my loue, and these my free offered thirty yeeres labours in this Chronologie, which I heartily recommend vnto your kinde acceptation, and patronage, with testimony that I here proclaime a cessation from any further obseruation or practise in the promisses, or continuation of the English Chronicle, to the end it shall plainely appeare, that I haue no coherance with the enuious, that neuer did good themselues, nor spake well of others: but will doe my vtmost to auoyde all impediments that may impeach others better proceedings; wishing you all encrease of your hearts desire, and euerlasting happinesse.
